STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS

India is the third most populous country in the world despite the fact that it was the first country to enact a national population control policy. Conversely, India's population has grown steadily since independence. Studies suggest that the country could surpass China's population by the year 2030, therefore, becoming the most populous country in the world.

A high human population can impact natural resources and social infrastructure, which in turn places pressure on a country's sustainability. Indian population accounts for twenty per cent. of the total world population, however, the Indian land area is only 2.5 per cent. of the total. In a developing country such as India where a large section of the population still lives in abject poverty with little to no resources, the need for stabilization of the population growth becomes crucial. A stabilized population ensures that every citizen can get access to the right amount of resources to live a life of dignity.

Adopting a rights-based approach, the need is to provide for voluntary and safe access to family planning services. The increase in access will empower women. Additionally, access to these services allows spacing of pregnancy which can reduce pregnancy related health risks in women. It would also ensure that the infant is healthier thereby reducing infant mortality rate in the country. Therefore, a comprehensive policy for population stabilisation can help in moving towards a healthier population.
