Parliamentary democracy in India has not only withstood the test of time, but has also taken deep roots and has acquired a degree of resilience. Countries the world over now look towards India to benefit from India's experience of running the Parliamentary institutions successfully. The success of India's Parliamentary democracy can be attributed to the healthy parliamentary practices and procedures, which we have evolved over the years. These parliamentary practice and procedures sustain, nurture and nourish parliamentary institutions. This book is an attempt to bring together all the aspects of parliamentary practice and procedures in a concise and lucid manner.

Originally compiled by M.N. Kaul and S.L. Shakdher, the first edition of 'Practice and Procedure of Parliament' came out in 1968. Since then, this oft-quoted treatise has been revised five times, in 1972, 1978, 1991, 2001, and 2009, primarily to make the publication up to date with time in the background of amendments to the Constitution and existing laws, changes in the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha, new precedents and conventions. With the fourth edition published in 1991, this volume has become the official publication of Lok Sabha Secretariat. Various chapters in the volume elucidate the parliamentary practice and procedures with empirical evidences, rulings, observations and directions by the Chair. Besides the practice and procedures, the volume also throws light on aspects of functioning of the Parliament and its Committees.

Since its last publication in 2009, several measures pertaining to the working of the Lok Sabha through procedural innovations have been taken for making the parliamentary business smooth and orderly enabling it to reach out to masses. Many new conventions and practices have also been evolved in between, necessitating further revision of the publication. The comprehensively updated Seventh Revised Edition has made this most exhaustive, authentic and authoritative work even more invaluable.

Over the years, the publication has been found immensely useful by the Presiding Officers, Parliamentarians, leaders of political parties, legislators, lawyers, jurists, scholars and Political Commentators. The volume is extremely popular among the Commonwealth Parliaments and also State Legislatures in India.

For real democracy, one has to look not merely in the provisions of the Constitution, or the rules and regulations made for the conduct of business in the Legislatures, but one has to foster a real democratic spirit in those who form the Legislature. If this fundamental is borne in mind, it will be clear that though questions would be decided by majorities, parliamentary government will not be possible if it is reduced to a mere counting of heads or hands. If we are to go merely by majority, we shall be fostering the seeds of fascism, violence and revolt. If on the other hand, we could help to foster a spirit of tolerance, a spirit of freedom of discussion and a spirit of understanding, we shall be fostering the spirit of democracy.

FOREWORD

Parliament is the sanctum sanctorum of the temple of our democratic edifice. This great institution reconciles, synthesizes and harmonizes our diverse interests upholding national unity. Parliamentary practices and procedures play a pivotal role in facilitating smooth and orderly functioning of the House. While the Constitution is sacrosanct, over the years, we have also evolved well established parliamentary practices and procedures for smooth conduct of the parliamentary business. Respect for parliamentary convention, practices and procedures and their scrupulous adherence enhances the effectiveness of Parliament and legislatures. The time of the Parliament is precious and its productivity is being watched by millions. It is incumbent on us to use the time of the House prudently and judiciously. Constructive and well informed debate and interventions on the floor of the House or in its Committees can always help in enhancing the contents and quality of parliamentary deliberations.

Today when India is at the cusp of a historic transformation and determined to acquire its rightful place in the world, the challenges before us are myriad. It is in this context that Parliament should work to further our development agenda. I hope that every parliamentarian, or for that matter every individual, would inculcate the motto of Mahatma Gandhi, contained in his talisman, which says, "Whenever you are in doubt, or when the self becomes too much with you, apply the following test. Recall the face of the poorest and the weakest man whom you may have seen, and ask yourself, if the step you contemplate is going to be of any use to him. Will he gain anything by it? Will it restore him to a control over his own life and destiny? In other words, will it lead to Swaraj for the hungry and spiritually starving millions? Then you will find your doubts and your self melt away."

It is heartening that we have in place a treatise like Practice and Procedure of Parliament. I compliment the initiative of Hon'ble Speaker, Lok Sabha, Smt. Sumitra Mahajan for the Seventh revised edition of the volume incorporating recent procedural developments.

INTRODUCTION

Indian democracy is universally recognized and admired – and rightly so – as not only the largest but the greatest functioning democracy in the world. It is not just because of the sheer size of it but also due to the plurality of its nature and the tests it has withstood over the years. Democratic traditions and norms have been a continuum of India's civilizational heritage and attributes like tolerance, mutual respect for differing political view points, peaceful coexistence and resolution of a range of issues based on democratic principles, etc. have matured over the centuries and are deep rooted in our political psyche.

In the post-Independence era, regular and periodic elections to a large number of representative institutions from panchayats to the Parliament have vindicated India's firm commitment to democracy. In fact, the general elections held every five years are seen as a kind of "celebration of democracy". It is through these elections that the citizens actively participate in what we call our sacrosanct democratic process. Their votes decide the country's political choice for the given period. The fact that a large number of political parties and much larger number of candidates with different socio-economic background contest the polls to win the mandate to be the people's representative is quite amazing by any yardstick. Election after election, this has been happening and thus keeping the democracy vibrant and alive. In other words, the greatest functioning democracy that the world appreciates and talks about, has withstood the pressures of time and socio-political vicissitudes. The run-up to the formation of the Sixteenth Lok Sabha witnessed, yet again, people reaffirming their faith and confidence in the democratic system by giving a clear verdict in favour of stability and good governance.

Good governance is largely dependent on effective functioning of Legislatures which, in turn, is dependent on healthy parliamentary customs and conventions - both written and unwritten. Indian democratic system, with Parliament as its supreme body or 'temple of democracy' operates hand in hand with our constitutional provisions, rules, past practices and procedures.

Once elected to the Parliament, the people's representatives are expected to engage themselves in the work of law-making for the welfare of people and in the interest of the nation. Our parliamentary procedures provide enough opportunities to its members to raise the voice of the people, who elect them with the hope of providing solutions to their collective problems. From my personal experience of over two and a half decades as a member of the Opposition as well as the member of the Treasury Bench, I can confidently say that under the existing framework of rules and regulations, procedures and traditions of the Parliament, a member can effectively raise issues of public importance, ventilate popular grievances and seek their redressal and have meaningful influence and impact on framing of the policy by the Government. Disagreement or dissent is an integral part of any functional democracy and there are tools available to express the same but there cannot be any justification to disrupt the proceedings of the House or troop into the well. I seldom did that but used all the parliamentary instruments, available to me, to raise various issues and get my voice heard in the interest of my constituency and people in general.

Now, as the Speaker of the Sixteenth Lok Sabha, I am even more convinced that our Parliament's procedures and rules give enough opportunity and full freedom to its members to express their views on laws that are of far-reaching importance. The only condition is that the House should be allowed to function well as laid down in the existing rules.

Law-making and legislation entails scrupulous observance of the constitutional provisions. We are all bound by our constitutional duties and have to work within its structured framework. Our Constitution has given us all our democratic institutions and it is the responsibility and duty of members, as well as citizens, to honour and strengthen them so that good governance becomes a reality.

The Presiding Officer is the custodian of the rights of members and the House collectively, and is also responsible for facilitating orderly conduct of business of the House. During the deliberations in the Chamber, the Presiding Officer ensures that all sections of the House are heard and whenever a Point of Order is raised, the Speaker, as Presiding Officer, is required to interpret the rules, study and refer to the precedents and decisions, if any. And when needed, the Speaker is also expected to help evolve a new practice by using discretionary powers, give directions, and pronounce rulings.

The rulings given by the Speaker, being the final authority in these matters, constitute precedents and become the guiding principles for successive Houses. The 'Zero Hour' is an excellent example of this, which provides an opportunity to the members to raise matters of urgent public importance and which cannot brook any delay even if there are no rules permitting them. 'Zero Hour' started as a regular but unacknowledged feature of the proceedings of the House and with the passage of the time it has become an important feature of the proceedings and duly regulated. It is, therefore, for the members to decide how to make good use of the rules and procedures and help in running the House smoothly in the larger interest of the nation.

Amongst the varied functions that the Parliament performs, one of its crucial roles is to hold the Executive accountable to the Legislature at all times. This cardinal principle has been adhered to through institutionalization of certain procedural devices whose intelligent use in the Chamber not only ensures that the proceedings are conducted smoothly but they facilitate harmony amongst members themselves and also between the Executive and Parliament.

For the first time, a definite set of rules of procedures was framed in India in 1921 when the Central Legislature came into existence and they continued with minor modifications till 1947. Thereafter, the rules were substantially adapted with significant changes after India achieved Independence. Over the years, the few rules multiplied into many as new one emerged and adapted, existing one modified or altered with innovation of our own, all of which have stood the test of time and delivered a body of solid rules and procedures. Side by side, a bunch of case laws too got built up to rely upon for reference.

With the Sixteenth Lok Sabha having commenced its deliberations, there are great expectations from the people, particularly from the younger generation. The strength of parliamentary democracy lies in its resilience to accommodate the dynamic contours of the polity to address the emerging challenges before the nation. It is said that an overarching vision for a nation emanates from the institution of Parliament. For Parliaments, therefore, planning for the future, means many things. It means responding to the pulls and pressures of a rapidly changing society and global order, while retaining what is distinctive about their country's traditions. It also means being open to ongoing reforms in their own procedures so that these are equal to the requirements of the times and to the Parliament's own role as the guardian of democracy. In India, we have witnessed all this with a few changes here and there in the last over six decades.

I am happy to note that the Lok Sabha Secretariat is bringing out the Seventh Revised and updated Edition of 'Practice and Procedure of Parliament' by M. N. Kaul and S. L. Shakhder. As the official publication of the Lok Sabha Secretariat, this book is considered authoritative, most reliable and information-rich on a range of issues dealing with parliamentary practices and procedures. This book is going to be extremely useful not only for the new members but also for experienced and senior members of the House. New members will do well to go through the rules and commentary about various subjects, i.e. 'Zero Hour', expunction of words, call-attention, adjournment motions, etc. to equip themselves well and to make intelligent and tactful use of the various parliamentary instruments to ensure accountability of the Executive to the Legislature.

I express my profound gratitude to the Honourable Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi for contributing an illuminating Foreword to this treatise which has undoubtedly enhanced its prestige.

I congratulate the Secretary-General Lok Sabha, Shri Anoop Mishra, for his tireless efforts to present the revised edition in a very short time; I also compliment the team of officers of the Lok Sabha Secretariat who worked hard to bring it out expeditiously. I am optimistic that this publication will be well-received by parliamentarians, legislators, political scientists, academics, research scholars, members of the Fourth Estate and all other stakeholders who have a genuine interest in the successful functioning of India's parliamentary democracy.

PREFACE

The compendium Practice and Procedure of Parliament, published since 1968 and originally authored by two eminent and distinguished parliamentary officials M.N. Kaul and S.L. Shukdher, is a veritable window to the evolution and growth of Constitution, parliamentary practices, procedures, customs, and conventions in India ever since the seeds of the democratic and parliamentary institutions were sown on the Indian soil in response to the yearning of the people for participation in the democratic governance of the country even prior to India's Independence in 1947.

India has traversed a long distance ever since its tryst with destiny. From a fledgling democracy, it has become a robust and pulsating one. It is worthwhile to remember in this context the words of former British Prime Minister, Sir Anthony Eden, who said in 1954: "The Indian venture is not a pale imitation of our practice at home, but a magnified and multiplied reproduction on a scale we have never dreamt of. If it succeeds, its influence on Asia is incalculable for good. Whatever the outcome, we must honour those who attempted it." Democracy in India has not only survived, but over the years, has also been deepened and strengthened. The alchemy of this has been the ingenuity of Indian mind and intellect to innovate and evolve parliamentary practice, customs and conventions and a healthy tradition to respect them. Parliamentary institutions, practice and procedures are never static; they are dynamic and evolve in response to political and social dynamics. Parliamentary institutions are living institutions reflecting social and political dynamism.

The present edition, seventh in the row of the magnum opus while carrying forward the repository of parliamentary wisdom is enriched by the experiences of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha. The volume chronicles the institutional memory for the benefit of all those who have stakes in the robustness of parliamentary democracy— be they the Presiding Officers, Parliamentarians, legislators, jurists, judges, lawyers, academicians, researchers or editors and journalists specializing on issues of parliamentary interest. While bare rules of parliamentary practice and procedures may tend to be dry and drab, when they are juxtaposed with empirical evidence and illustrations, they become more self-explanatory and easy for comprehension. Awareness and understanding of parliamentary rules, practice and procedures will be useful and helpful for members to effectively participate in the proceedings of the House and its Committees. This will also help utilization of the precious time of the House.

The 'Foreword' to the volume by Hon'ble Prime Minister of India not only enhances the eminence and prestige of the volume, but also adds credence, grace and elegance to the volume. The Introduction to the book by revered Speaker, Lok Sabha, captures the sine qua non and the raison d'être of the volume. The volume consists of 47 chapters. A new chapter on Parliamentary Forums has been added in this edition. The chapters are thematically arranged. Each chapter has footnotes for ready reference and for the benefit of readers, who may be interested in further elucidation. The appendix contains a comprehensive index for ready reference to a particular case or subject matter.

Various chapters of the book seek to answer many a ticklish questions relating to parliamentary practice and procedures, which Presiding Officers and parliamentary officials have to grapple with at some point of time or other. For example, can a minister be a member of a select committee? The answer is "...Ministers who are members of the Rajya Sabha may also be appointed as members of a Select Committee of the House but they are not entitled to vote in the Committee. In the case of Government Bill referred to a Select Committee, the Minister in charge of the Bill is appointed a member of the Committee while in case of a Private Member's Bill, the member in charge of the Bill and the Minister to whose Ministry the subject matter of the Bill pertains, are appointed members of the Select Committee."

Yet another question of parliamentary propriety and procedural interest is whether a member of either House of Parliament when appointed as Minister in a State, is required to resign from the membership of the House? If not, can he participate and vote in the House? The sticky question is while one can continue to be a Minister without being a member of either House of Parliament for a period of six months, whether he can participate and vote in either House of Parliament, while being a Minister in a State?

Such a question of parliamentary and constitutional propriety did arise during the Fourth Session of the Twelfth Lok Sabha, when a sitting member of Parliament, who subsequently became Chief Minister of a State, cast his vote in the House in a Motion of Confidence in the Council of Ministers. The opinion in the House was divided. While some argued that since the Chief Minister continued to be the member of the House, he was entitled to vote, while there was also a view that since the member had already assumed the Office of the Chief Minister of a State, he should not be allowed to vote.

Faced with the piquant situation, the Speaker observed that there were "instances where members, on their appointment as ministers in the States, have signed the Attendance Register of Lok Sabha to avoid loss of seats for non-attendance in the House. However, in a few instances, it had been observed from the Chair that while such Ministers continued to be Members, it would not be desirable for them to participate in the deliberations of the House..." The Chair left the decision to the good sense of the member. Such instances, thus, may not be first or the last, but the observation by the Speaker can always cast a salutary effect on the decisions of the Chair in future. These questions are simply few illustrations, and certainly not an exhaustive account of such pertinent issues dealt with in the volume.

The Fifteenth Lok Sabha, like earlier Houses, witnessed certain procedural innovations in response to the changing needs of time. It was during the tenure of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha that a separate Committee to examine complaints given by members of Lok Sabha regarding Protocol Violation and Discourteous Behaviour by Government Officers vis-à-vis Members of Parliament in official dealing was constituted on 2 August 2012. The mandate of the Committee is to examine every complaint referred to it by the Speaker for violation of Protocol norms laid down from time to time regarding official dealing with the members of Parliament, violation of instructions or guidelines issued by Government regarding official dealings between administration and members of Parliament, and discourteous behaviour by government servants with a member during official dealings. A related move in this direction was that the provisions of the Rules 315 and 316 of the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha relating to consideration of Report of the Privileges Committee presented to the House and priority for consideration of such reports by the House were to be applicable mutatis mutandis to the reports of the Committee to examine complaints relating to violation of protocol norms in official dealings with members.

It may be recalled that in December 2001, a new provision was added to Rule 374A prescribing for automatic suspension of a member from services of the House for five consecutive sittings or remainder of the session, whichever is less, in the event of grave disorder like coming into the well of the House or abusing the Rules of the House persistently and willfully obstructing its business by shouting slogans or otherwise. This provision was enforced during the Fifteenth Lok Sabha on different occasions. Interpretation of rules, rulings and observations and their enforcement by the Chair adds salience to the rules; otherwise they do not serve much purpose, and they are like dead letters.

Over the years, India's rich experience of running the parliamentary institutions and healthy customs and conventions which have developed drawing from experiences have been gaining popularity the world over, more particularly in the Afro-Asian countries, including countries making a transition to democracy in India's neighbourhood. Now more and more countries are looking forward to India to benefit from India's democratic and parliamentary experiences. All these clearly endorse the efficacy of the parliamentary practice and procedure evolved in India taking into account the unique characteristics of the country.

The editing of a volume of this nature has been a mammoth exercise, particularly sifting through the inputs and putting them thematically in coherent and cogent manner and interspersing them with the procedural innovations, and rulings and observations by the Chair during the Fifteenth Lok Sabha. For me it has been a great learning experience. I take this opportunity to put on record the seminal contributions made by late Shri M.N. Kaul and Shri S.L. Shakdher for undertaking this admirable venture at a very nascent stage of India's democracy. My distinguished predecessors have also immensely contributed to this intellectual and cerebral exercise and added value to the volume. I am beholden to Hon'ble Prime Minister for a very thought provoking 'Foreword'. I am also grateful to the distinguished Speaker for unstinted support, cooperation and for the illuminating 'Introduction'.

Officers at different levels working and supervising various Branches of the Secretariat have contributed significantly to the volume through meticulous updating and verification of chapters of the volume. My colleague in the Secretariat Shri P. K. Misra, Additional Secretary and his dedicated team of officers rendered a great deal of support in the fruition of the project. I would like to thank Smt. Kalpana Sharma, Joint Secretary; Dr. R. N. Das, Director; Ms. Samita Bhowmick, Additional Director; Smt. Rachana Sharma, Joint Director; and Shri Neeraj Kumar, Research Officer, for their help and support in finalizing the project in a time-bound manner.

Shri Vivek Gupta of the Metropolitan Book Co. Pvt. Ltd., the publisher of the present edition, also deserves to be commended for expeditiously publishing the volume.

It is hoped that the seventh edition of the volume, like earlier editions, will continue to be popular and a ready reckoner for the Presiding Officers, members of Parliament and parliamentary officials alike, both in India and abroad.

CHAPTER I

The Authority and Jurisdiction of Parliament

The Constitution of India, republican in character and federal in structure, embodies the salient features of the parliamentary system. It provides for a Parliament for the Union consisting of the President and the two Houses, namely, the Rajya Sabha (Council of States) and the Lok Sabha (House of the People); a Union Executive, drawn from both the Houses of Parliament and collectively responsible to the Lok Sabha; ensuring thereby an intimate relationship between the Union Executive and Parliament; a head of the State called the President of India, acting on the aid and advice of the Union Council of Ministers; a number of States with basic provisions, parallel to those for the Union in respect of the Executive and Legislature of each State; Rule of law; independent Judiciary and a permanent Civil Service. The Parliament in India is not a sovereign body<sup>1</sup>; it functions within the bounds of a written Constitution. The authority and jurisdiction of Parliament are limited by the distribution of powers between the Union and the States and by the incorporation of a code of justiciable fundamental rights in the Constitution. There is also provision for judicial review which means that all laws passed by Parliament must be in conformity with the provisions of the Constitution and liable to be tested for constitutionality by an independent Judiciary<sup>2</sup>. All these provisions tend to qualify the nature and extent of the authority and jurisdiction of Parliament.

1. In re. Delhi Laws Act (1912), A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 332.

2. Vide S. 55 of the Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976, Parliament inserted Cl. (4) and Cl. (5) in article 368 so as to provide that no amendment of the Constitution made under the said article “shall be called in question in any court on any ground” [Cl.(4)] and that “There shall be no limitation whatever on the constituent power of Parliament to amend by way of addition, variation or repeal, the provisions of this Constitution under this article” [Cl. (5)]. However, the Supreme Court, in the Minerva Mills Case (A.I.R. 1980, S.C. 1789), declared Cls. (4) & (5) of article 368 to be invalid on the ground that these clauses, which removed all limitations upon the power of Parliament to amend the Constitution and precluded judicial review of a Constitution Amendment Act, on any ground sought to destroy an ‘essential feature,’ or ‘basic structure’ of the Constitution. The concept of basic structure has been further developed by the Supreme Court in several subsequent cases. More and more new essential features of basic structure have been added vide Waman Rao v. Union of India, A.I.R., 1981, S.C., 271; Bhim Singh ji v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1981, S.C. 234; S.P. Gupta v. President of India, A.I.R. 1982, S.C. 149 (Transfer of Judges Case); S.P. Sampath Kumar v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1987, S.C. 386; P. Sambamurthy v. State of A.P., A.I.R. 1987, S.C. 663; Kihota Hollohon v. Zachilhu and Others, 1992 SCC 309; R.C. Poudyal v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1804; S.R. Bommai v. Union of India and others, A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1918; L Chandra Kumar v. Union of India and others A.I.R. 1997 S.C. 1125; P.V. Narasimha Rao v. State (CBI/SPE) A.I.R. 1998 S.C. 2120; B.R. Kapur v. State of Tamil Nadu, A.I.R. 2001 S.C. 3435; Kuldip Nayar v. Union of India and others A.I.R. 2006 S.C. 3127; M. Nagaraj and others v. Union of India and others, A.I.R. 2007 S.C. 71; I.R. Coelho (dead) by L. Rs. v. State of Tamil Nadu, and others, A.I.R. 2007 S.C. 861; and Raja Ram Pal v. The Hon’ble Speaker, Lok Sabha and others JT 2007(2) S.C. 1.

The Supreme Court in Kesavananda Bharati v. State of Kerala Case, without foreclosing the list of basic structure found the following to be the essential features of the Constitution: “(a) Supremacy

Nevertheless, Parliament occupies a pivotal position in the present day Indian polity and constitutional limitations on its sovereign authority are, therefore, to be understood with important qualifications. Such powers as Parliament possesses under the Constitution are immense and it fulfils the role which a sovereign Legislature does in any other independent country<sup>3</sup>. The plenitude of its powers, at once, becomes evident on an analysis of the extent of jurisdiction it has under the scheme of distribution of powers, the constituent powers it possesses, its role in emergencies and its relationship vis-a-vis the Judiciary, the Executive, the State Legislatures and other authorities under the Constitution.

The Constitution assigns and distributes the legislative powers between Parliament and the State Legislatures in three lists—the Union List, the State List and the Concurrent List. Broadly speaking, while Parliament has exclusive jurisdiction over the subjects in the Union List, the State Legislatures over those in the State List, and at the same time, both may legislate on the subjects listed in the Concurrent List<sup>4</sup>. Residuary powers of legislation vest in Parliament, i.e. matters not enumerated in the Concurrent List or the State List, including the power of making any law imposing a tax not mentioned in either of those Lists, belong to Parliament<sup>5</sup>. Parliament, in addition, may legislate with respect to any matter for any part of the territory of India not included in a State notwithstanding that such matter is a matter enumerated in the State List<sup>6</sup>.

While in their own respective spheres Parliament as well as the State Legislatures enjoy plenary powers, the scheme of distribution of powers followed by the Constitution emphasizes in many ways the general predominance of Parliament in the legislative field. In the first place, while a State law cannot operate beyond the limits of the State, a law by Parliament may extend to the whole of India and may have even extraterritorial operations<sup>7</sup>. These apart, if any provision of a law made by the Legislature of a State is repugnant to any provision of a law made by the Parliament which it is competent to enact, the law made by the Parliament prevails and the State law to the extent of the repugnancy becomes void<sup>8</sup>. The only exception to this Rule is that where a law made by the Legislature of a State with respect to one of the matters enumerated in

4. Art. 246 read with the Seventh Schedule.

5. Art. 248 and Entry 97 of List I of the Seventh Schedule.

6. Art. 246(4).

7. Art. 245.

the Concurrent List contains any provision repugnant to the provisions of an earlier law made by the Parliament or an existing law with respect to that matter, then, the law so made by the Legislature of such State shall, if it has been reserved for consideration of the President and has received his assent, prevail in that State. But even here, this does not prevent Parliament from subsequently amending, varying or even repealing the law made by the State Legislature<sup>9</sup>.

Since the power of a State Legislature to legislate with respect to matters in the State list is made subject to the power of Parliament to legislate with respect to matters in the Union List, it follows that if an entry in the Union List and an entry in the State List appear to overlap, that is, if they appear partly to cover the same field, the field of legislation covered by the entry in the Union List will be considered to be taken out of the scope of the entry in the State List and reserved to be specifically dealt with by Parliament; in other words, to that extent the power of the State Legislature will be considered to be curtailed<sup>10</sup>.

Even in the sphere exclusively reserved for the States, the Constitution authorizes Parliament to legislate under certain circumstances. Parliament may thus legislate on any specified matter in the State List, whenever the Rajya Sabha, by a resolution supported by not less than two-thirds of the members present and voting, declares it necessary or expedient in the national interest to do so<sup>11</sup>. Further, when a Proclamation of Emergency is in operation, the legislative competence of Parliament becomes widened so as to extend to any matter in the State List<sup>12</sup>. Although any power so exercised by Parliament in the national interest or during an emergency does not restrict the normal legislative power of a State Legislature, in case of conflict the law by Parliament prevails and, so long as it remains in force, the State law to the extent of its repugnancy remains inoperative<sup>13</sup>. Parliament also enjoys the power to legislate for implementing any treaty, agreement or convention with any country or any decision made at an international conference or association on any subject, even if it should fall in the State List<sup>14</sup>.

Parliament may also make laws in respect of entries in the State List if two or more State Legislatures consider it desirable that any of the matters within their exclusive legislative competence should be regulated by parliamentary legislation and pass resolutions to the effect, Parliament can undertake the necessary legislation<sup>15</sup>.

10. L.B. Paradise Lottery Centre v. the State of Andhra Pradesh, A.I.R. 1975 AP 50.

11. Art. 249. Such legislation in its very nature is temporary inasmuch as the resolution initially remains in force for a period not exceeding one year and has to be renewed for a period of one year every time—the Rajya Sabha passed a resolution under this article on 13 August 1986 authorising the Parliament to legislate on certain matters covered by entries 1, 2, 4, 64, 65 and 66 of the State List. R.S. Deb., 12-8-1986, cc. 395-511; 13-8-1986, cc. 183-227.

12. Art. 250(1).

13. Art. 251.

14. Art. 253.

15. Art. 252. The legislation so passed has effect in the States which had requested and those others which may adopt it afterwards by a resolution passed in that behalf. See, for instance the Estate Duty Act, 1953; the Prize Competitions Act, 1955; and the Urban Land (Ceiling and Regulation) Act, 1976.

It is also noteworthy that some of the entries in the Union List themselves empower Parliament to take over to itself, by making the requisite declaration by law, certain spheres and subjects from the State field<sup>16</sup>.

If at any time, when both Houses of Parliament are not in session, circumstances warrant immediate action, the President is empowered to promulgate Ordinances<sup>17</sup> which have the same force and effect as Acts of Parliament but are of temporary duration. Every such Ordinance is required to be laid before both Houses of Parliament and ceases to operate at the expiration of six weeks from the re-assembly of Parliament, unless earlier withdrawn by the President, or disapproved by Parliament<sup>18</sup>. If the legislation is intended to be permanent or have a longer life, the Ordinance must be replaced by a regular legislation by Parliament.

The ambit of this power of the President is co-extensive with the legislative competence of Parliament<sup>19</sup> and the Courts have no power to question the jurisdiction either as to the occasion or purpose or the subject matter of an Ordinance except on justiciable ground of exceeding the legislative powers conferred on the Union by the Constitution<sup>20</sup>. Parliament, however, has not viewed with favour resort to this mode of legislation except to the extent unavoidable and there are Rules meant to keep a check on the exercise of this power<sup>21</sup>.

In the event of failure of constitutional machinery in a State, the President may, by proclamation, assume to himself the functions of the Government of the State and powers of any body or authority in the State except those of the State Legislature. The powers of the State Legislatures are in that case declared to be exercisable by or under the authority of the Parliament<sup>22</sup>. Parliament may, in that case, in its turn, confer on the President the power of the State Legislature to make laws or even authorize the President to delegate that power to any other authority<sup>23</sup>. Whenever such power is conferred by the Parliament it is done through a Delegation of Powers Act<sup>24</sup> which has invariably required that the laws made by the President (called President's Acts) shall be laid before the Parliament and be open to such modifications as Parliament may suggest within the time specified for the purpose<sup>25</sup>. In some cases, the President has further been required to consult a Committee consisting of Members of Parliament, whenever he considers it practicable to do so, before enacting any Act under the powers conferred upon him by the Parliament<sup>26</sup>.

21. Rule 71 requires that when a Bill seeking to replace an Ordinance with or without modification is introduced in the Lok Sabha, a statement shall be placed before the House explaining the circumstances which had necessitated immediate legislation by Ordinance. Likewise, when an Ordinance which embodies wholly or partly or with modification the provisions of a Bill pending before the House, is promulgated, a similar statement has to be laid on the Table at the commencement of the session following the promulgation of the Ordinance.

24. See for example, the Punjab State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1951; the Patiala and East Punjab States Union Legislatures (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1953; the Andhra State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1954; the Travancore-Cochin State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1956; the Kerala State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1959; the Orissa State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1961; the Kerala State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1965;

Besides the powers to legislate on a very wide field, the Constitution vests in the Parliament the constituent power or the power to amend the Constitution. The scope of this power is very wide and Parliament can amend in any way i.e. by addition, variation or repeal of any provision of the Constitution<sup>27</sup>. Also, no extraordinary terms and conditions (e.g. ratification by a convention or at a referendum) fetter the exercise of this power<sup>28</sup>. Barring the requirement of special majority, ratification by State Legislatures in certain cases and the mandatory assent by the President, a Bill for the amendment of the Constitution follows practically the same legislative process as an ordinary piece of legislation.

There are several articles in the Constitution which leave matters subject to laws that may be made by the Parliament<sup>29</sup>. In such cases, by passing ordinary legislation, Parliament may, in effect, modify or annul the operation of certain provisions of the Constitution without actually amending them. There are again other provisions of the Constitution under which the Parliament may provide for very important matters the Punjab State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1966 and 1987; the Tamil Nadu State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1988; the Jammu and Kashmir State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1992; the Himachal Pradesh State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1993; the Madhya Pradesh State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1993; and the Uttar Pradesh State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1993 and 1996.

25. For an instance, see the resolution adopted by Parliament suggesting certain modifications in the Punjab Security of the State Act, 1951 - P. Deb. (II) 28-9-1951, c. 3748. The amendments suggested by the Parliament were later incorporated in the Punjab Security of the State (Amendment) Act (President's Act No. 3 of 1951). In another instance, viz. the Kerala University (Amendment) Act, 1966, a resolution for amending the Act was adopted by the Lok Sabha - L.S. Deb., 12-4-1966, cc. 10654-55 and concurred by the Rajya Sabha— R.S. Deb., 12-5-1966. The same was then forwarded to the Ministry concerned for necessary action.
26. See for example, the Delegation of Powers Acts passed by the Parliament in respect of PEPSU (Act No. 22 of 1953), Andhra (Act No. 45 of 1954), Travancore-Cochin (Act No. 29 of 1956), Kerala (Act No. 50 of 1959, Act No. 30 of 1964 and Act No. 12 of 1965), Orissa (Act No. 13 of 1961) and Punjab (Act No. 28 of 1966) provided for constitution of Committees consisting of M.Ps. These Committees were not Parliamentary Committees but Statutory Committees which were to act only in an advisory capacity.
27. The Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976 removed all limitations upon the power of Parliament to amend the Constitution and precluded judicial review, on any ground, of a Constitution Amendment Act by inserting cls. (4) and (5) in article 368. The Supreme Court, however, invalidated these clauses on the ground that they sought to destroy an 'essential feature' or 'basic structure' of the Constitution—Minerva Mills Ltd. v. Union of India, op. cit.
28. See Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, C.A. Deb., Vol. VII, 4-11-1948, p. 43.
An attempt to introduce referendum for effecting changes in certain 'basic features' of the Constitution, by means of the Constitution (Forty-fifth Amendment) Bill, 1978, failed since the Government could not secure the required two-third majority in the Rajya Sabha.
29. For example, by article 11, Parliament is empowered to make provisions relating to citizenship notwithstanding anything in articles 5 to 10.

by simple legislation containing, where necessary, even provisions amending the Constitution, but without attracting the special requirements of article 368. Article 4, for instance, provides that any law made by Parliament under article 2 (relating to admission or establishment of new States) or article 3 (relating to formation of new States<sup>30</sup> and alteration of areas, boundaries or names of existing States) could amend the First Schedule and the Fourth Schedule to give effect to the provisions of the law and may also contain such supplemental, incidental and consequential provisions as the Parliament may deem necessary, but no such law shall be deemed to be an amendment of the Constitution for the purposes of article 368. It was by virtue of this provision that the States Reorganisation Act, 1956<sup>31</sup> which brought about radical reorganisation of the States in India was passed by the Parliament as an ordinary piece of legislation<sup>32</sup>. Thus, without even formal recourse to its constituent power, Parliament may, in effect, amend the Constitution in respect of several matters.

30. The word "States" used in several clauses of article 3 includes the Union territories specified in the First Schedule of the Constitution. Ram Kishore Sen v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 644.
  31. Besides the States Reorganisation Act, 1956, the other Acts which have been passed by virtue of this provision are: the Assam (Alteration of Boundaries) Act, 1951; the Andhra State Act, 1953; the Himachal Pradesh and Bilaspur (New State) Act, 1954; the Chandernagore (Merger) Act, 1954; the Bihar and West Bengal (Transfer of Territories) Act, 1956; the Andhra Pradesh and Madras (Alteration of Boundaries) Act, 1959; the Rajasthan and Madhya Pradesh (Transfer of Territories) Act, 1959; the Bombay Reorganisation Act, 1960; the Acquired Territories (Merger) Act, 1960; the State of Nagaland Act, 1962; the Reorganisation of the Punjab Act, 1966; the Bihar and Uttar Pradesh (Alteration of Boundaries) Act, 1968; the Andhra Pradesh and Mysore (Transfer of Territory) Act, 1968; the Madras State (Alteration of Name) Act, 1968; the State of Himachal Pradesh Act, 1970; the North-Eastern Areas (Reorganisation) Act, 1971; the Mysore State (Alteration of Name) Act, 1973; the Laccadive, Minicoy and Amindivi Islands (Alteration of Name) Act, 1973; the Haryana and Uttar Pradesh (Alteration of Boundaries) Act, 1979; the State of Mizoram Act, 1986; the State of Arunachal Pradesh Act, 1986; the Goa, Daman and Diu Reorganisation Act, 1987. The Government of National Capital Territory of Delhi Act, 1991; the City of Madras (Alteration of Name) Act, 1996; the Maharashtra Restoration of Name "Mumbai" for 'Bombay' Act, 1996; the West Bengal Capital City (Change of Name) Act, 2001; the Pondicherry (Alteration of Name) Act, 2006; the Uttaranchal (Alteration of Name) Act, 2006; and the Orissa (Alteration of Name) Act, 2011.
  32. Further examples in this category are furnished by article 169, Para 7 of the Fifth Schedule and Para 21 of the Sixth Schedule.

Article 169 which empowers Parliament to provide by law for the abolition or creation of Legislative Councils in States declares that though such law shall contain such provisions for the amendment of the Constitution as may be necessary, it shall not be deemed to be an amendment of the Constitution for the purposes of article 368. The Legislative Councils Act, 1957, passed by Parliament in exercise of power under this article, provided for the creation of a Legislative Council in Andhra Pradesh and for increasing the strength of the Legislative Councils in certain other States whereas the West Bengal Legislative Council (Abolition) Act, 1969; the Punjab Legislative Council (Abolition) Act, 1969; the Andhra Pradesh Legislative Council (Abolition) Act, 1985; and the Tamil Nadu Legislative Council (Abolition) Act, 1986 provided for the abolition of Legislative Councils in the States of West Bengal, Punjab, Andhra Pradesh and Tamil Nadu, respectively. In December 2005, the Parliament enacted the Andhra Pradesh Legislative Council Act (Act No. 1 of 2006) providing for the creation of Legislative Council for the State of Andhra Pradesh.

The Fifth Schedule contains provisions as to the administration and control of the Scheduled Areas and Scheduled Tribes and para 7 thereof vests Parliament with plenary powers to amend by law any of the provisions of this Schedules. Para 21 of the Sixth Schedule (which contains provisions as to the administration of Tribal Areas in the States of Assam, Meghalaya, Tripura and Mizoram)

It has been held that the power to reduce the total number of members of a Legislative Assembly below the minimum prescribed under article 170 (1) is implicit in the authority to make laws under article 4<sup>33</sup>.

In the amendment of the Constitution, the association of the State Legislatures is limited. The related legislation can be introduced in Parliament alone. In the matter of creation or abolition of a Legislative Council in a State, a resolution in that behalf by the Legislative Assembly of the State concerned is envisaged, but even here the related legislation has to be initiated in Parliament<sup>34</sup>. Even where the Parliament undertakes legislation to form a new State out of the territory of an existing State or States or increase or diminish the area or alter the name or boundaries of any State, what is stipulated is only a reference of the Bill before its introduction to the affected States for expression of their views within the time allowed for the purpose<sup>35</sup>, and this reference does not fetter the hands of Parliament in making any further amendments in the Bill it may choose to make<sup>36</sup>. Only when an amendment seeks to make any change in any of the provisions enumerated in the Proviso to article 368, ratification by the Legislatures of not less than one-half of the States is prescribed.

confers similar power of amendment on Parliament. These paragraphs in the said Schedules also expressly declare that no law made in pursuance of the power conferred by them "shall be deemed to be an amendment of the Constitution for the purposes of article 368". The Assam Reorganisation (Meghalaya) Act, 1969 and the Government of Union territories (Amendment) Act, 1971 amended the Sixth Schedule; the North-Eastern Areas (Reorganisation) Act, 1971, the Constitution (Forty-ninth Amendment) Act, 1984 and the State of Mizoram Act, 1986 amended the Fifth and the Sixth Schedules; and the Fifth Schedule to the Constitution (Amendment) Act, 1976 amended paragraph 6 of the Fifth Schedule.

33. Mangal Singh and another v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 944.

34. Art. 169.

The resolutions of the State Assembly in this regard do not have the effect of imposing any obligation either on the Union Government for initiating legislation or on Parliament to invoke the provisions of the article and make a law. See L.S. Deb., 8-12-1970 cc. 216-18, 22-8-1984, cc. 311-27.

35. This is the position at present under the Proviso to article 3. This Proviso prior to its amendment in 1955 to its present form casts an obligation on the President to 'ascertain' the views of the Legislature of the affected State. Now all that is required is that before its introduction in the Parliament, the Bill should have been referred by the President to the concerned State Legislature for expressing its views and the period specified in the reference (or any further period that may be allowed by the President) should have expired—see Speaker's ruling in the Lok Sabha in connection with the Acquired Territories (Merger) Bill, 1960, L.S. Deb., 16-12-1960, cc. 5988-6002. Four New States, namely Chhattisgarh, Uttaranchal (now called Uttarakhand) Jharkhand and Telengana have been formed reorganising the States of Madhya Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh, Bihar and Andhra Pradesh vide the Madhya Pradesh Reorganisation Act, 2000, the Uttar Pradesh Reorganisation Act, 2000 (Act 29 of 2000), the Bihar Reorganisation Act, 2000 and Andhra Pradesh Reorganisation Act, 2014.

Even this reference is a requirement only in the case of laws falling under article 3. Thus, in the case of cession of territory to a foreign country from out of the territory of a State (which has been held by the Supreme Court as not falling under article 3) there is no constitutional obligation for reference of the related Bill to the affected State.—; see Advisory Opinion of the Supreme Court on the Reference relating to Berubari (Re. Berubari Union, A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 845).

36. In connection with the States Reorganisation Bill, 1956, it was held by the Speaker that when once a Bill has been introduced in Parliament after proper reference, no further reference to the State Legislature concerned was necessary in respect of any amendments that might be proposed or

All laws in India, whether Union, State or delegated, are subject to the doctrine of ultra vires and liable to judicial review<sup>37</sup>. Apart from the specific provisions of the Constitution conferring power of judicial review on the Courts, the power enjoyed by the Courts in this regard may be regarded as implicit in the concept that the Constitution established the foundational or fundamental law, whose express provisions no ordinary law of the land may transgress<sup>38</sup>. In the last resort, Parliament can amend the Constitution itself to override the effect of a judicial decision but so long as the Constitution is not amended to the contrary, the final say as to what the Constitution means rests with the Supreme Court<sup>39</sup>.

The scope of the review by the Courts in India is, however, limited to see whether the legislation falls within the periphery of the power conferred and has been made in the manner provided<sup>40</sup>. The Court is not a third chamber sitting in judgment on the policy laid down by the Legislature in the legislation which it is considering. However repugnant any legislation may be to the conception which the Court has of its being right or wrong, and howsoever drastic the provisions of such legislation may be, if it does not in fact contravene any of the articles of the Constitution, then it would be the duty of the Court to uphold such legislation<sup>41</sup>.

Parliament enjoys an inherent right to conduct its affairs without interference from any outside body. It is the sole judge of its own procedure. Even procedural lapses do not vitiate its proceedings<sup>42</sup>. Until a Bill becomes law, the legislative process not being complete, the Courts cannot interfere nor can a Court suo motu declare void or directly annul a law immediately after it is promulgated unless its interpretative function is sought by any person or party who challenges that law as having infringed his rights on the ground of its being ultra vires of the power of the legislative body<sup>43</sup>.

adopted in the Parliament and the Bill might be passed by Parliament in any form it might choose. L.S. Deb., 7-8-1956, cc. 2426-31. The same view was taken by the Supreme Court in Babulal. State of Bombay. A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 51.

37. K.J. Thomas v. Commr. of Agricultural Income-tax, Madras, A.I.R. 1958 Kerala 6.

The Supreme Court was provided with exclusive jurisdiction with regard to the determination of constitutional validity of Union Laws under article 131 A, inserted by the Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976. The article was, however, omitted by the Constitution (Forty-third Amendment) Act, 1977.

38. Art. 13 only declares that any law contravening the fundamental rights shall be void. But, it has been pointed out that this article does not exhaust the scope of judicial review in India. The article, which has been inserted by way of abundant caution, is actually unnecessary, for even without it the Courts would be bound to invalidate any law which violated such rights. It is the justiciability of a constitutional provision which constituted the foundation of judicial review—see Chief Justice Kania's observations in Gopalan v. State of Madras, (1950) S.C.R. 88.
39. Under article 132 (1), the Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction in cases involving "a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of this Constitution", while article 141 provides that "the law declared by the Supreme Court shall be binding on all courts within the territory of India".

The traditional Rule regarding the locus standi has since been relaxed considerably and the Supreme Court has permitted “public interest litigation” at the instance of public spirited citizens for the enforcement of constitutional and legal rights of others who, because of their poverty or other reasons, may not be able to approach the Court<sup>44</sup>.

Though the President is the head of the State and under the Constitution the executive power of the Union is vested in him<sup>45</sup> and all executive action is to be expressed to be taken in his name<sup>46</sup>, the system of Government in India is parliamentary and not presidential<sup>47</sup>. The executive power vested in the President has to be exercised by him “in accordance with this Constitution,”<sup>48</sup> which provides for a Council of Ministers with the Prime Minister at the head to aid and advise the President who “shall, in the exercise of his functions, act in accordance with such advice”<sup>49</sup>. Although the President “may require the Council of Ministers to reconsider such advice, either generally or otherwise,” he “shall act in accordance with the advice tendered after such reconsideration”<sup>50</sup>. The President thus is a constitutional head<sup>51</sup>, the Council of Ministers with the Prime Minister at the head being the real Executive. The Council of Ministers itself is wholly drawn from the membership of Parliament (no Minister being allowed to continue in office for more than six months without obtaining a seat in either House)<sup>52</sup> and it is collectively responsible to the Lok Sabha<sup>53</sup>. The President, as the head of the Executive, acts on the advice of the Council of Ministers who, in turn, are answerable to the Parliament. Like its British counterpart, the Council of Ministers in India has also been described as “a hyphen which joins, buckle which fastens, the legislative part of the State to the executive part”<sup>54</sup>.

The scope and manner of functioning of Parliament are dictated by considerations of its size. Parliament in the modern day does not govern. Parliament can, and does, act only through the agency of the Executive enjoying its confidence. It has been said that a strong Executive Government tempered and controlled by constant vigilance and representative criticism, is the ideal at which parliamentary institutions aim<sup>55</sup>.

The primary initiative in all legislation and revenue and expenditure rests with the Executive. Practically every legislation finally enacted into law comes from the Government, private members' legislation being subject to the chances of ballot and other handicaps<sup>56</sup>. No Bill or amendment providing for the imposition, abolition or regulation of any tax, the regulation of public borrowing, appropriation of moneys out of the Consolidated Fund of India or other financial matters can be introduced and no Bill which, if enacted, would involve expenditure from the Consolidated Fund of India can be passed without the previous recommendation of the President<sup>57</sup>. And, no demand for grant can be made, except on the recommendation of the President<sup>58</sup>. The Government "enjoying a majority in the Legislature concentrates in itself the virtual control of both legislative and executive functions" and the Ministers, acting on the principle of collective responsibility, formulate all the most important questions of policy to be submitted to Parliament<sup>59</sup>.

The initiative enjoyed by the Executive is contingent, in the ultimate analysis, upon parliamentary support. Government programmes and policies involve expenditure and Parliament holds the power of the purse. Under the Constitution, an annual statement of the estimated receipts and expenditure, i.e. the budget, must be placed before the Parliament<sup>60</sup>. No tax or expenditure is legal unless authorised by law<sup>61</sup>. This financial power in the hands of Parliament secures accountability. The constitutional provisions that not more than six months shall intervene between the end of one session and the commencement of the following session further ensure an almost uninterrupted oversight of governmental policies and programmes by the Parliament. Thus, while the initiative in finance and formulation of policies is held by the Executive, the complementary function of critical scrutiny of such policies and surveillance over administration is performed by Parliament.

56. For example, the period of notice for leave to introduce Private Members' Bill is one month and there is the dependence on the Government for the recommendation of the President where required [Rule 65(2) and (3)]. It is also subject to scrutiny by the Committee on Private Members' Bills and Resolutions and its chances depend upon the classification accorded to it (Rule 294). Above all is the allotment of time of two and a half hours available every alternate week for the consideration of such legislation (Rule 26).

So far, 14 Private Members' Bills have been enacted. During the 14th Lok Sabha (2004-2009), 327 Private Members' Bills were introduced while during the 15th Lok Sabha, 372 Private Members' Bills were introduced.

The procedure of Parliament affords ample opportunity for the “daily and periodic assessment” of ministerial responsibility. The procedure of Questions (with possibilities of supplementaries and, in case of unsatisfactory answer, of a Half-an-Hour Discussion), Adjournment Motions and Calling Attention enable information to be elicited and lapses to be exposed in governmental activities. The more significant occasions for review of administration are provided by the discussion on the Motion of Thanks on the Address by the President, the budget and debates on particular aspects of governmental policy or situations. These apart, specific matters may be discussed through motions on matters of urgent public importance, private members’ resolutions and other substantive motions. Discussions can take place on annual reports of Departments. Government lapses in specific fields can be discussed or local problems aired through cut motions. Opportunities for criticism as well as for influencing governmental policy always exist during the various stages of discussion on Bills. In extreme cases, the Government can be censured or a motion of no-confidence moved against it.

Also, a close and continuous check on governmental activities is exercised in the Lok Sabha through a network of Parliamentary Committees, all functioning under the control of the Speaker<sup>62</sup>. The Business Advisory Committee on which different sections of the House are represented recommends the allocation of time for all items of Government business to be brought before the House, which on approval, takes effect as an Order of the House. The Committee on its own initiative has sometimes suggested important subjects for discussion in the House<sup>63</sup>. The classification of Bills of private members and allocation of time in respect of them is looked after by the Committee on Private Members’ Bills and Resolutions. The Committee on Government Assurances keeps a track of assurances or undertakings given by Ministers in the House and pursues them till their implementation. All Rules made by the Government, whether laid on the Table or not, are scrutinised by the Committee on Subordinate Legislation in order to see that the Rule-making power, wherever conferred on the Government, has been exercised within the scope of the delegation. The Committee on Petitions not only looks into petitions on Bills and other matters pending before the House, but also entertains representations on other matters from the public in order that no substantial grievance goes unremedied. The Committee on Papers Laid on the Table of the House, constituted since 1 June 1975, examines all papers laid on the Table other than those which fall within the purview of the Committee on Subordinate Legislation or any other Parliamentary Committee to see inter alia whether there has been any delay in laying the Papers and whether satisfactory explanation has been given in cases of delay. Most important among the Committees are the Financial Committees—Committee on Public Accounts, Committee on Estimates and the Committee on Public Undertakings. Besides, Parliament may constitute other

63. For instance, discussions on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy, Press Commission Report, General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, New Education Policy, Environment, Revival of Sati, Price Rise, Population Growth, and Approach Papers on National Cultural Policy and National Housing Policy, Global Warming and Indo-US Nuclear Deal have taken place at the initiative of the Business Advisory Committee.

Committees, the commonest of which are the Select or Joint Committees on Bills. The Committee on Empowerment of Women, constituted since 1997, considers the reports submitted by the National Commission for Women and other welfare measures relating to women. A number of ad hoc Committees have been constituted from time to time either by the two Houses on a motion adopted in that behalf, or by the Speaker/Chairman to enquire into and report on specific subjects. Some such Committees include Committee on Conduct of certain members during the President's Address, Committee on Draft Five-Year Plans, the Railway Convention Committee, Joint Committee on Amendments to Election Laws, Joint Committee of Houses to examine the question of working of Dowry Prohibition Act, Study Committee on Sports, Joint Committee to enquire into Bofors Contract and Joint Committee to enquire into the Irregularities in Securities and Banking Transactions, Committee on Security in Parliament, Committee on Ethics, Committee on Violation of Protocol Norms and Contemptuous Behaviour of Government Officers with Members of Lok Sabha; Committee to inquire into allegations of improper conduct on the part of some members (Cash for Query Inquiry Committee); Committee to inquire into allegations of improper conduct on the part of some members in the matter of implementation of MPLAD Scheme; Committee to inquire into the misconduct of members of Lok Sabha; Committee to inquire into the complaint made by some members regarding alleged offer of money to them in connection with voting on the motion of confidence (Cash for Vote Inquiry Committee), and Joint Committee on Office of Profit to examine the constitutional and legal position relating to the Office of Profit. On 15 December 2009, a Joint Parliamentary Committee on Maintenance of Heritage Character and Development of Parliament House Complex was constituted to formulate policies, guidelines and programmes on conservation, restoration, rehabilitation and maintenance works in Parliament House Complex in accordance with standard conservation principles and procedures. On 11 March 2011, a Joint Parliamentary Committee to examine matters relating to Allocation and Pricing of Telecom Licences and Spectrum was constituted.

A beginning was made in 1989 towards reforming the system of Parliamentary Committees by introducing three Departmentally Related Subject Committees, one each on (i) Agriculture; (ii) Environment and Forests; and (iii) Science and Technology. This was intended to make the system more specialisation-oriented and to bring it in tune with the changing times and enable Parliament to exercise a greater surveillance over the Executive actions through these Committees. In the light of the experience gained with regard to their working, the Committee System was further improved upon in March 1993 and 17 such Departmentally Related Standing Committees were constituted. Again, in July 2004, the number of these Committees was increased from 17 to 24 (16 under Lok Sabha and 8 under Rajya Sabha) in July 2004. Now there is a full-fledged system of Departmentally Related Standing Committees covering the entire gamut of governmental activities. The functions of these Committees broadly include consideration of the Demands for Grants; examination of Bills referred to them by the Chairman, Rajya Sabha or the Speaker, as the case may be; consideration of Annual Reports; and consideration of national basic long-term policy documents presented to the House and referred to the Committee by the Chairman or the Speaker, as the case may be. The biggest achievement of these Standing Committees is that the Demands for Grants of most of the Ministries/Departments of the Government are now scrutinised by a Committee consisting of 31 Members of Parliament (21 from Lok Sabha, 10 from Rajya Sabha). This ensures greater participation of members in deliberating upon the policies and programmes, plans, projects, the underlying philosophies and their implementation by the Government. Previously, because of paucity of time, Parliament was able to scrutinise the Demands for Grants of only a few Ministries every year<sup>64</sup>.

Besides, an initiative was taken in 2005 to constitute Parliamentary Forums with the objective of equipping members with information and knowledge on specific issues of national significance, besides providing a platform to the members to have interaction with subject experts and senior officials from the nodal Ministries. The forums sensitise the members about the key areas of concern and also about the ground level situation and supply them the latest information, knowledge, technical know-how and valuable inputs from experts, both from the country and abroad, to enable them to raise these issues effectively on the floor of the House. So far, eight Parliamentary Forums have been constituted on Water Conservation and Management, Children, Youth, Population and Public Health, Global Warming and Climate Change, Disaster Management, Artisans and Crafts People and Millennium Development Goals.<sup>65</sup>

To sum up, in India, the Parliament occupies a unique position of primacy among the organs of the State. Notwithstanding the fact that it functions within the bounds of a written Constitution and a federal framework, the actual authority, power, scope and range of its jurisdiction are immense. While Parliament, under the scheme of the Constitution, does not itself govern the country, it exercises effective supervision, in various ways, through a purposive use of parliamentary procedures and a system of Committees.

The Chapters that follow explain the various parliamentary practices, processes and procedures as they have evolved in course of time.

CHAPTER II

Composition of Parliament

The Parliament of India is a bicameral Legislature and is composed of the President, the Council of States (Rajya Sabha) and the House of the People (Lok Sabha)<sup>1</sup>. These three constituent parts collectively constitute the Parliament.

President

The President is an integral part of the Parliament though he is not a member of either House of Parliament. The powers of the President and his position in relation to Parliament are described in Chapter III, and election to the Office of the President, his term of Office, oath of Office, etc. are explained in Chapter V.

Rajya Sabha

The Rajya Sabha consists of twelve members nominated by the President and not more than two hundred and thirty-eight representatives of the States and the Union territories<sup>2</sup>. The members nominated by the President consist of persons having special knowledge or practical experience in respect of such matters as literature, science, art and social service<sup>3</sup>.

The allocation of seats in the Rajya Sabha to be filled by representatives of the States and of the Union territories is in accordance with the provisions in that behalf contained in the Fourth Schedule<sup>4</sup> to the Constitution.

The Rajya Sabha was duly constituted for the first time on 3 April 1952<sup>5</sup>. It consisted of 216 members. Of these, 12 members were nominated by the President. The remaining 204 members were elected to represent the States<sup>6</sup>. The four representatives of the Jammu and Kashmir State were chosen by the President in consultation with the Government of the State as required by the Constitution (Application to

1. Art. 79.

On 14 May 1954, Speaker Mavalankar announced that the House of the People would thereafter be known as the "Lok Sabha". On 23 August 1954, the Chairman of the Council of States announced a similar decision changing the name of the Council of States as the "Rajya Sabha" from that date, L.S. Deb., 14-5-1954, cc. 7388-90 and R.S. Deb., 23-8-1954, cc. 35-37.

The terms "Lok Sabha" and "Rajya Sabha" were used for the first time in an amendment to the Delhi (Control of Building Operations) Bill, 1955, which was adopted by the House.

Jammu and Kashmir) Order, 1950<sup>7</sup>. In actual practice, the State Government acted upon a unanimous resolution of the Constituent Assembly of that State in recommending the names of the persons to be chosen by the President. Consequent on the formation of new States, the number of elective seats in the Rajya Sabha allotted to States and Union territories has increased, from time to time<sup>8</sup>. The total number of seats in the Rajya Sabha<sup>9</sup> at present is 245, including the 12 members nominated by the President. The allocation of the 233 seats to be filled by representatives elected through proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote is as follows<sup>10</sup> :

States	No. of Seats	States	No. of Seats
Andhra Pradesh	18	Manipur	1
Arunachal Pradesh	1	Meghalaya	1
Assam	7	Mizoram	1
Goa	1	Punjab	7
Gujarat	11	Rajasthan	10
Haryana	5	Sikkim	1
Himachal Pradesh	3	Tamil Nadu	18
Jammu and Kashmir	4	Tripura	1
Jharkhand <sup>14</sup>	6	Uttarakhand <sup>16</sup>	3 <sup>14</sup>
Karnataka	12	Uttar Pradesh	31 <sup>13</sup>
Kerala	9	West Bengal	16
Madhya Pradesh	11 <sup>12</sup>	Union territories

7. According to the terms of the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order of 14 May 1954, all future vacancies in the Rajya Sabha arising in the State of Jammu and Kashmir shall be filled by election by the elected members of the Jammu and Kashmir Legislative Assembly. The first such election took place in November 1954.
8. The number of elective seats in the Rajya Sabha, from time to time, has been: 1952: 204; 1954: 207; 1956: 220; 1960: 224; 1964: 226; 1966: 228; 1972: 231; 1976: 232 and 1987 (onwards): 233.
9. For details regarding evolution, composition, powers and position of the Rajya Sabha, see, Rajya Sabha at Work, Rajya Sabha, Secretariat, New Delhi, 2006.
10. Fourth Schedule to the Constitution, as amended by the Constitution (Fifty-sixth Amendment) Act, 1987.
11. The Bihar Reorganization Act, 2000.
12. The Madhya Pradesh Reorganization Act, 2000.
13. The Uttar Pradesh Reorganization Act, 2000.
14. Three States, namely, Chhattisgarh, Jharkhand and Uttaranchal were created by the Madhya Pradesh Reorganization Act, 2000, the Bihar Reorganization Act, 2000 and the Uttar Pradesh Reorganization Act, 2000, respectively.
15. The Orissa (Alteration of Name) Act, 2011 altered the name of the State as "Odisha".
16. The Uttaranchal (Alteration of Name) Act, 2006 altered the name of the State as "Uttarakhand".
17. The Pondicherry (Alteration of Name) Act, 2006 altered the name of the Union territory as "Puducherry".

The Rajya Sabha is not subject to dissolution, but as nearly as possible, one-third of its members retire as soon as may be on the expiration of every second year in accordance with the provisions made in that behalf by Parliament by law<sup>18</sup>. The term of office of members begins— (i) in case of members elected/ nominated biennially, from the date on which their names are notified by the Government of India in the Official Gazette<sup>19</sup>; and (ii) in case of member elected/nominated to fill a casual vacancy, from the date of publication in the Official Gazette of the declaration of election of such person, or of the Notification announcing the nomination of such person, as the case may be<sup>20</sup>.

The normal term of office of a member of the Rajya Sabha is six years from the date of election or nomination<sup>21</sup>. However, a member elected or nominated to fill a casual vacancy holds office for the remainder of the term which his predecessor would have held<sup>22</sup>.

Lok Sabha

The Lok Sabha<sup>23</sup> at present consists of not more than five hundred and thirty members chosen by direct election from territorial constituencies in the States<sup>24</sup>, and not more than twenty members to represent the Union territories<sup>25</sup>, chosen in such manner as Parliament by law provides<sup>26</sup>. The limit on the maximum number of members chosen directly from territorial constituencies in States may be exceeded if such an increase is incidental to reorganisation of States by an Act of Parliament<sup>27</sup>.

The procedure regarding periodic retirement of one-third of the members of the Rajya Sabha has been laid down in (i) the Representation of the People Act, 1951 (R.P. Act), s. 154; and (ii) the Council of States (Term of Office of Members) Order, 1952.

19. The Representation of the People Act, 1951, s. 155(1).

22. Ibid., s. 154(3).

23. The Lok Sabha was duly constituted for the first time on 17 April 1952. In the first Lok Sabha, there were 499 seats. Out of these, 489 were filled by persons chosen by direct election from territorial constituencies by adult suffrage, 2 persons nominated by the President under article 331 to represent the Anglo-Indian community and 8 persons nominated by the President under special circumstances (one to represent Part B Tribal areas of Assam, six to represent Jammu and Kashmir and one to represent Andaman and Nicobar Islands).

24. Under the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956, the maximum number was fixed as 500. This was increased to 525 by the Constitution (Thirty-first Amendment) Act, 1973, and has been further increased to 530 by the Goa, Daman and Diu Reorganisation Act, 1987.

25. Under the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956, the maximum number was fixed as 20. The maximum number which was increased to 25 by the Constitution (Fourteenth Amendment) Act, 1962 was again decreased to 20 by the Constitution (Thirty-first Amendment) Act, 1973.

26. Art. 81(1).

27. As a result of amendment of article 81 of the Constitution by Section 63 of the Goa, Daman and Diu Reorganisation Act, 1987, the number of members of the Lok Sabha from States were increased to 530.

See also Mangal Singh v. Union of India, (AIR 1967 SC 944) wherein the validity of the provisions of the Punjab Reorganisation Act, 1966, providing that the membership of the Legislative Assembly of Haryana shall be below the minimum prescribed by article 170(1), i.e. 60 members, was upheld by the Supreme Court.

The President is empowered<sup>28</sup>, if he is of opinion that the Anglo-Indian community is not adequately represented in the House, to nominate not more than two members of that community to the Lok Sabha<sup>29</sup>.

For the purpose of election from territorial constituencies in the States, a number of seats are allotted to each State in the Lok Sabha in such manner that the ratio between that number and the population of the State is, so far as practicable, the same for all States. Each State is thereafter divided into territorial constituencies in such manner that the ratio between the population of each constituency and the number of seats allotted to it, so far as practicable, is the same throughout the State<sup>30</sup>. The expression "population" means the population as ascertained at the last preceding census of which the relevant figures have been published. But, until the relevant figures for the first census taken after the year 2026 have been published, the reference to the last preceding census is to be construed as reference to the 1971 census<sup>31</sup>. However, for the purpose of allocation of seats, in the House of the People, each State shall be divided into territorial constituencies in such manner that the ratio between the population of each constituency as per 2001 census and the number of seats allotted to it, so far as practicable, be the same throughout the State.

The allocation of seats in the Lok Sabha to the States and the division of each State into territorial constituencies are readjusted by such authority and in such manner as Parliament determines by law, but such readjustment does not affect representation in the Lok Sabha until the dissolution of the then existing House. The readjustment of territorial constituencies takes effect from such date as the President specifies by order, and until such readjustment takes effect, any election to the House is held on the basis of the territorial constituencies existing before such readjustment<sup>32</sup>.

28. Art. 331.

29. Two members of the Anglo-Indian community have been nominated by the President in all the Lok Sabha so far.

30. Art. 81(2). This is not, however, applicable to any State as long as the population of that State does not exceed six million.

31. Art. 81(3).

32. Art. 82.

The delimitation of constituencies has been done by the Delimitation Commission. Under the Delimitation Commission Act, 1952 (since repealed), the Commission was required first to publish its proposals in respect of the determination of numbers and then again in respect of the distribution of seats and delimitation of constituencies. After considering any objections and suggestions received in regard to them, the Commission was to determine the matters by one or more "final" orders. Each of the "final" orders was to be published in the Gazette and upon such publication, the order had the "full force of law". Under the Delimitation Commission Act, 1962, (also repealed) the Commission was authorised by order to determine forthwith the number of seats in the Lok Sabha on the basis of the latest census figures and having regard to the constitutional provisions on the subject. The Commission was required to publish only the proposals for the delimitation of constituencies and after considering objections and suggestions received thereon to determine by one or more orders the delimitation of constituencies. Each of such orders had to be published in the Gazette and, upon publication, every such order had the "force of law". During discussion on the Delimitation Commission Bill, 1962, an amendment was moved by a member for omission of the word "full" from the expression "full force of law" which was agreed to by the House.—LS. Deb., 3-12-1962, cc. 4205-08.

Seats are reserved in the Lok Sabha for the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes in almost all the States and some Union territories<sup>33</sup>.

The number of seats reserved in any State or Union territory for the Scheduled Castes or the Scheduled Tribes bears, as nearly as may be, the same proportion to the total number of seats allotted to that State or Union territory in the Lok Sabha as the population of the Scheduled Castes or of the Scheduled Tribes in that State or Union territory or part thereof, as the case may be, in respect of which seats are so reserved, bears to the total population of the State or Union territory<sup>34</sup>. But the number of seats reserved in the Lok Sabha for the Scheduled Tribes in the autonomous districts of Assam has to bear to the total number of seats allotted to that State, a proportion not less than what the population of the Scheduled Tribes in the said autonomous districts bears to the total population of the State. The expression “population” used here bears the same connotation as used in article 81(3)<sup>35</sup>.

A member of a Scheduled Caste or Scheduled Tribe does not forego his right to seek election from the general seat, merely because he has the additional concession of contesting from a reserved seat by making the prescribed declaration for that purpose<sup>36</sup>.

Under the Delimitation Act, 1972, the Commission is required to readjust allocation of seats in the Lok Sabha on the basis of the latest census figures. In other respects, the provisions made in the Act follow the pattern of the provisions contained in the Delimitation Commission Act, 1962. Delimitation of constituencies was first effected in 1952 and then in 1956. It was again effected in 1961 under Section 7 of the Two-Member Constituencies (Abolition) Act, 1961. The delimitation of constituencies was effected in accordance with the census of 1961 before the 1967 general elections. Again, this was done in accordance with the census of 1971 and the Delimitation Commission completed its work (except in respect of the then Union territory of Arunachal Pradesh) before the 1977 general elections. The Delimitation of Parliamentary and Assembly Constituencies Order, 1976, was made by the Election Commission on 1 December 1976. The Constitution (Eighty-fourth Amendment) Act, 2001 and the Constitution (Eighty-seventh Amendment) Act, 2003 have, inter alia amended articles 81, 82, 170, 330 and 332 of the Constitution. Accordingly, a new Delimitation Commission was constituted by the Delimitation Act, 2002 (No. 33 of 2002) and the Delimitation Act, 1972 stands repealed. As on 17 August 2007, the Delimitation Commission had issued Notifications in respect of 25 States.

33. To facilitate adequate representation to the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes, the Delimitation Commission Act, 1952 provided that all parliamentary and assembly constituencies should be either single-member or two-member constituencies, that wherever practicable, seats should be reserved for the Scheduled Castes or the Scheduled Tribes in single-member constituencies and that in every two-member constituency, one seat should be reserved either for the Scheduled Castes or for the Scheduled Tribes and the other seat should be a general seat.

The two-member constituencies were, however, considered not viable by the political parties since their contesting candidates had to cover double the area, canvass twice the number of electors and consequently incur twice the expense, as compared to those candidates who stood for election from single-member constituencies. From the administrative point of view also, these large two-member constituencies were found difficult to manage. There was, therefore, demand for doing away with the double-member constituencies and as a result, the Two-member Constituencies (Abolition) Act, 1961 was passed. The task of dividing each one of these constituencies into two compact and convenient single-member constituencies and deciding in which of them the seat should be reserved for the Scheduled Castes or Scheduled Tribes was given to the Election Commission.

34. Art. 330(2).

36. V. V. Giri v. D. Suri Dora and Others, AIR. 1959 SC 1318.

The total number of seats in the Lok Sabha is 545 out of which two seats to represent the Anglo-Indian community are filled by nomination by the President. The elective seats numbering 543 are filled by persons chosen by direct election<sup>37</sup>. As per Delimitation of Parliamentary and Assembly Constituencies Order, 2008, the allocation of seats to the States and the Union territories and the number of seats, if any, reserved for the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes of each State and Union territory are as under:

The provisions of the Constitution relating to the reservation of seats for the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes and the representation of the Anglo-Indian community in the Lok Sabha shall cease to have effect on the expiration of a period of seventy years from the commencement of the Constitution<sup>40</sup>. The representation in the Lok Sabha will, however, not be affected until the dissolution of the then existing House.

Unless sooner dissolved, the Lok Sabha continues for five years from the date appointed for its first meeting and no longer, as the expiration of the period of five years operate as a dissolution of the House<sup>41</sup>. However, while a Proclamation of Emergency is in operation, this period may be extended by Parliament by law for a period not exceeding one year at a time and not exceeding in any case beyond a period of six months after the Proclamation has ceased to operate. The five-year term of the Fifth Lok Sabha was to have normally expired on 18 March 1976. Having regard to the Proclamations of Emergency issued on 3 December 1971 and 25 June 1975, which were in operation, the life of the Fifth Lok Sabha was extended first on 4 February 1976 by a period of one year and again on 5 November 1976 by another period of one year upto 18 March 1978<sup>42</sup>.

The dissolution of the Lok Sabha before the completion of its full term is not unconstitutional<sup>43</sup>. The Fourth Lok Sabha was dissolved on 27 December 1970 after 40. Art 334. Originally, the period was for 'ten years'. It was raised to 'twenty years' by the Constitution (Eighth Amendment) Act, 1959; to 'thirty years', by the Constitution (Twenty-third Amendment) Act, 1970; to 'forty years' by the Constitution (Fifty-fifth Amendment) Act, 1980; to 'fifty years' by the Constitution (Sixty-second Amendment) Act, 1989; to 'sixty years' by the Constitution (Seventy-ninth Amendment) Act, 1999 and to 'Seventy Years' by the Constitution (Ninety-Fifth Amendment) Act, 2009.

41. Art. 83(2). Originally, the life of the Lok Sabha was for five years. It was raised to six years by the Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976. It was again reduced to five years by the Constitution (Forty-fourth Amendment) Act, 1978.

a span of three years and 285 days<sup>44</sup>. The Fifth Lok Sabha was dissolved on 18 January 1977, before the completion of its extended term. The Sixth Lok Sabha was dissolved on 22 August 1979, before the completion of its term. The Ninth, the Eleventh and the Twelfth Lok Sabha were also dissolved on 13 March 1991, 4 December 1997 and 26 April 1999, respectively, before the completion of their terms. While the Thirteenth Lok Sabha was dissolved by the President on 6 February 2004, the Fourteenth Lok Sabha was dissolved on 18 May 2009. Similarly the Fifteenth Lok Sabha was dissolved on 18 May 2014.

filed by Dr. N.C. Samant Sinha before the Circuit Bench of the Punjab High Court at Delhi under article 226, praying that a rule nisi be issued (and in the interval respondents be directed not to proceed with the summoning of the Third Lok Sabha on 16 April 1962) declaring the premature dissolution void and ineffective, was dismissed by the High Court on 4 April 1962.

44. The main consideration for dissolution of the Fourth Lok Sabha was the Government's desire to seek a fresh mandate from the people to enable the Government to implement effectively its programmes and policies. This was because of the split of the Congress Party, into two, viz. Congress (I) and Congress (O) in November 1969, the party [Congress (I)] forming the Government had lost its majority in the House.

CHAPTER III

President in Relation to Parliament

Under the Constitution, the executive power of the Union is vested in the President to be exercised by him either directly or through officers subordinate to him<sup>1</sup>. The executive power of the Union is co-extensive with the legislative power of Parliament, and Parliament consists of the President and the two Houses of Parliament<sup>2</sup>. Thus, on the one hand, President is the head of the Executive, and on the other, he is a constituent part of Parliament. This represents a real fusion of the highest executive and legislative authorities. In terms of the Constitution, as also in actual practice, the relationship between the Executive and the Legislature is one that is most intimate and ideally does not admit of any antagonism or dichotomy<sup>3</sup>.

President and Council of Ministers

Prior to the Forty-second Amendment of the Constitution, there was no express obligation on the part of the President to act in accordance with the advice tendered by the Council of Ministers. However, implied in the formal constitutional provision<sup>4</sup>, read with the conventions, practices and usages that operated in practice, was that the President was a constitutional head and exercised his powers on the advice of the Council of Ministers.

The Forty-second Amendment Act made it obligatory for the President to act in accordance with the advice of the Council of Ministers. This rigidity was, however, partly diluted by the Constitution Forty-fourth Amendment Act, which provided that the President may require the Council of Ministers to reconsider the advice, either generally or otherwise, but he shall act in accordance with the advice tendered after such reconsideration. In actual practice, therefore, it has been the Council of Ministers and not the President which bears the responsibility for all executive action<sup>5</sup>.

The Constituent Assembly never envisaged that the powers and functions vested in the President would be exercised by him on his own without the advice of the Ministers. This point was clearly elucidated by several members in the Constituent

4. Art. 74, as it stood before amendment, read as under: 'There shall be a Council of Ministers with the Prime Minister at the head to aid and advise the President in the exercise of his functions.'

5. When a member raised a point that since the Constitution gave the President the power to make an ordinance whenever he was satisfied that it was necessary for him to exercise that power, the propriety of his action could not be called in question. Speaker Mavalankar observed:

"The President is a constitutional President who acts on the advice of the Government. And, therefore, when it is said that the President is satisfied, it really means the Government are satisfied and this House is entitled to criticise the Government on that issue"—H.P. Deb., (II), 16-2-1954, c. 90.

Assembly. While introducing the Draft Constitution as settled by the Drafting Committee, Dr. B.R. Ambedkar made it clear thus:

Under the Draft Constitution, the President occupies the same position as the King under the English Constitution. He is the Head of the State but not of the Executive. He represents the Nation but does not rule the Nation... The President of the Indian Union will be generally bound by the advice of his Ministers. He can do nothing contrary to their advice; nor can he do anything without their advice<sup>6</sup>.

Dr. Alladi K. Ayyar observed:

One point that has to be remembered in this connection is that any power exercised by the President is not to be exercised by him on his own responsibility. The word 'President' used in the Constitution stands for the fabric responsible to the Legislature<sup>7</sup>.

The same view had also been held by the Supreme Court:

Under article 53(1), "the executive power of the Union is vested in the President, but under article 75<sup>8</sup> there is to be a Council of Ministers with the Prime Minister at the head to aid and advise the President in the exercise of his functions. The President has thus been made a formal or constitutional head of the Executive and the real executive powers are vested in the Ministers or the Cabinet<sup>9</sup>.

6. C.A. Deb., 4-11-1948, p. 32.

The Draft Constitution originally contained a clause and a schedule of instructions to the President which inter alia provided that he must act on ministerial advice. Ultimately, the instructions as well as the clause were omitted as unnecessary. To a pertinent point asked, "If in any particular case the President does not act upon the advice of his Council of Ministers, will that be tantamount to a violation of the Constitution and he will be liable to impeachment?", Dr. Ambedkar's reply was, "There is not the slightest doubt about it". See C.A. Deb., Vol. X, 1949, pp. 268-71.

9. In the case of Ram Jawaya v. State of Punjab, 1955, 2 S.C.R. 225(236).

In 1960, President Dr. Rajendra Prasad, in his speech at the Indian Law Institute, New Delhi, said:

"There is no provision in the Constitution which in so many words lays down that the President shall be bound to act in accordance with the advice of his Council of Ministers"—Publications Division, Ministry of Information and Broadcasting, Govt. of India, Speeches by Dr. Rajendra Prasad, 1960-61, p. 165.

At a Press Conference in Delhi in December 1960; Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru said:

The President has always acted as a constitutional head... We have modelled our Constitution on the Parliamentary system and not on what is called the Presidential system although we have copied or rather adopted many provisions of the U.S. Constitution because ours is a federal one. Essentially, our Constitution is based on the U.K. parliamentary model. That is the basic thing. In fact, it is stated that wherever it does not expressly say anything, we should follow the practice of the House of Commons in the U.K.—Publications Division, Ministry of Information and Broadcasting, Govt. of India, Jawaharlal Nehru's Speeches, Vol. IV, September 1957- April 1963, pp. 100-101.

In actual practice also, the President has always acted on the advice of the Council of Ministers. The Forty-second Amendment of the Constitution, thus, simply confirmed the position that existed all along in this regard<sup>10</sup>.

President's Right to Information

The President has, however, the right of receiving or calling for information. Under article 78(a) of the Constitution, the Prime Minister has to communicate to the President all decisions of the Council of Ministers relating to the administration of the affairs of the Union and proposals for legislation. Article 78(b) casts an obligation on the Prime Minister "to furnish such information relating to the administration of the affairs of the Union and proposals for legislation as the President may call for". Under clause(c) of article 78, the President may require that a matter decided upon by a Minister be placed before the Council of Ministers and it shall be the duty of the Prime Minister to do so.

The question whether the duties entrusted to the Prime Minister in this regard are absolute or subject to any implied limitations assumed significant political importance in March 1987 when a newspaper published the text of a letter alleged to have been written by the President to the Prime Minister<sup>11</sup> and in which the President reportedly challenged the veracity of the Prime Minister's statement in Parliament that he had been keeping the President briefed on important issues of national interest.

Speaking during the discussion on the Motion of Thanks on the Address by the President, the Prime Minister had stated in the Lok Sabha:

"... our Ministers have been meeting the President continuously. Whenever there is a point at issue, it has been discussed with the President, specially where it

10. Despite the express provision contained in article 74(1) that the President, in the exercise of his functions, is bound to act on the advice of the Council of Ministers. There was a constitutional controversy over the signing by the Vice-President, B.D. Jatti, acting as the President, of the proclamations under article 356 dissolving nine State Legislative Assemblies.

The copies of Proclamations were sent by the Union Cabinet on 29 April 1977 for the signatures of the Vice-President acting as the President. The Proclamations were, however, signed by him on 30 April 1977 after a delay of about 24 hours.

11. On 13 March 1987, the Indian Express published a letter purported to have been written by the President to the Prime Minister. The text of the alleged letter, which was not authenticated either by the President or by the Prime Minister, contained, inter alia, the following:

"The President-Prime Minister relations in our country are governed by certain well-established practices and conventions besides express provisions of the Indian Constitution. I am constrained to say that certain well-established conventions have not been followed. Before your visit abroad and after your return I have not been briefed...In fact, I have not been briefed on foreign policy issues relating to such of our immediate neighbours in South Asia with which there are outstanding problems. ..Even on certain important domestic issues, I have not been kept informed on matters relating to accords finalised in respect of Assam, Punjab and Mizoram. I was not briefed at any stage...It is also distressing that constitutional provisions regarding furnishing of information to the President have not been consistently followed. I have brought it to your notice that reports of some of commissions of enquiry had not been sent to me even long after their receipt by the Government."

is of national interest ... there is no time when issues of national interest are kept away from the President<sup>12</sup>.”

Requesting the members to honour the institution and to keep the Office of the President above politics, the Prime Minister made the same assertion in the Rajya Sabha as well<sup>13</sup>.

Repeated attempts by members in both the Houses to discuss, in one form or the other, the alleged letter from the President to the Prime Minister or the related issues could not succeed, as the Presiding Officers in both the Houses consistently ruled that the President's name could not be brought in any way on the floor of the House for influencing any debate<sup>14</sup>. It was held that for the exercise of all the executive power in the name of the President and for the discharge of all his functions, it is the Council of Ministers alone that is responsible to Lok Sabha<sup>15</sup>. Further, any talks between the Prime Minister or the Council of Ministers and the President or any letters exchanged between them are entirely between them and not the concern of the House<sup>16</sup>. The Speaker, on 19 March 1987, ruled:

I am absolutely clear in my mind that any debate on the floor of the House which brings in the name of the President into any controversy or which tends to discuss the relationship between the President and his Council of Ministers, must be avoided at all costs in the wider interests of the nation. We are still in the process of developing sound conventions and traditions. Let us not, in the heat of the moment, do something which might hamper this process<sup>17</sup>.

The Opposition aggrieved over the denial of an opportunity to discuss this matter before the House brought a Resolution for removal of the Speaker. The Resolution which stated “That this House having taken into consideration the Ruling of the Speaker of the House including the one on 19 March 1987 on the question of privilege and adjournment motions feels that by denying to the members right to raise vital constitutional and procedural issues and burning problems, the Speaker has ceased to command the confidence of all sections of the House and, therefore, resolves that he be removed from his Office”, was discussed by the House on 15 April 1987<sup>18</sup>.

During the discussion<sup>19</sup>, members from the treasury and opposition benches tried to interpret the constitutional provisions regarding the power of the President to call for information from their points of view<sup>20</sup>.

The protagonists of the President's powers under article 78 give him a role, independent of his Council of Ministers, for calling for information "relating to the administration of the affairs of the Union", etc. On the other hand, it is pointed out that article 78 of the Constitution should not be viewed in isolation from other provisions like article 74 and that it is the prerogative of the Union Council of Ministers to decide what type of information can be furnished to the President. No final opinion on this has emerged in Parliament<sup>21</sup>.

In the course of the formulation of a policy, the President, it has been suggested, may give his counsel or require the matter to be reconsidered by the Council of Ministers as a whole but once a policy has been decided by the Council of Ministers and formally submitted to him, he has ultimately to abide by it and act accordingly. In the words of B.N. Rau:

Acting on ministerial advice does not necessarily mean immediate acceptance of the Ministry's first thoughts. The President can state all his objections to any proposed course of action and ask his Ministers in Council, if necessary, to reconsider the matter. It is only in the last resort that he should accept their final advice<sup>22</sup>.

President and Houses of Parliament

The Council of Ministers, under the Constitution, is collectively responsible to the Lok Sabha only. The "collective responsibility" implies that a motion of no-confidence can be moved in the Council of Ministers as a whole and not in an individual Minister. Regarding the concept of collective responsibility, Dr. B.R. Ambedkar observed in the Constituent Assembly:

In my judgement, collective responsibility is enforced by the enforcement of two principles. One principle is that no person shall be nominated to the Cabinet except on the advice of the Prime Minister. Secondly, no person shall be retained as a member of the Cabinet if the Prime Minister says that he shall be dismissed<sup>23</sup>.

The President may summon each House of Parliament to meet at such time and place as he thinks fit, but in no case should the period intervening between its last sitting in one Session and the date appointed for its first sitting in the next Session exceed six months<sup>24</sup>.

21. Notices under Rule 189 by members have been admitted by the Speaker to discuss "That this House recommends to the Government of India to frame rules and guidelines for the discharge of duties enjoined on the Prime Minister by article 78 of the Constitution and place them before the House for its consideration". However, it has not come up for discussion in the House so far.

24. Art. 85(1).

It was suggested in the Constituent Assembly that the power of summoning the respective Houses of Parliament should vest in the Speaker of Lok Sabha or in the Chairman or Deputy Chairman of Rajya Sabha as it could happen that the President might fail to summon Parliament in ordinary times or he may not summon Parliament at all when there was an emergency. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar,

The President may prorogue the Houses or either House of Parliament and dissolve the Lok Sabha<sup>25</sup>.

In the case of the State Legislature, it is the Governor who may from time to time prorogue the Houses or either House of the Legislature and dissolve the Legislative Assembly<sup>26</sup>. Referring to the power of prorogation of the Governor, the Supreme Court observed:

The article which enables the Governor to prorogue the Legislature does not indicate any restrictions on this power. Whether a Governor will be justified to do this when the Legislature is in Session and in the midst of its legislative work is a question that does not fall for consideration here. When that happens the motives of the Governor may conceivably be questioned on the ground of an alleged want of good faith and abuse of constitutional powers<sup>27</sup>.

The proposal to summon, prorogue or dissolve Lok Sabha may be made by the Prime Minister with or without the consultation of the Cabinet<sup>28</sup>.

the Chairman of the Drafting Committee, observed that if the President failed to perform an obligation imposed on him by law and refused to summon Parliament, that would be violation of the Constitution and the President could be displaced by impeachment. Explaining why the power to summon Parliament was vested in the President, he said:

Suppose, for instance, the President for good reasons does not summon the Legislature and the Speaker and the Chairman do summon the Legislature. What is going to happen? If the President does not summon the Legislature it means that the Executive Government has no business which it can place before the House for transaction. Because, that is the only ground on which the President, on the advice of the Prime Minister, may not call the Assembly in Session. Now, the Speaker cannot provide business for the Assembly, nor can the Chairman provide it. The business has to be provided by the Executive, that is to say, by the Prime Minister who is going to advise the President to summon the Legislature. Therefore, merely to give power to the Speaker or the Chairman to summon the Legislature without making proper provisions for the placing of business to be transacted by such an Assembly called for in a Session by the Speaker or the Chairman would to my mind be a futile operation and, therefore, no purpose will be served. *See C.A. 27. State of Punjab v. Satya Pal Dang and others, A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 903.

28. A suggestion was made in the Constituent Assembly that to guard against arbitrary advice by the Prime Minister for the dissolution of Lok Sabha it might be enacted that in case the Prime Minister desired the dissolution of the House earlier than the completion of the normal term of five years as provided in the Constitution, he should record the reasons therefor in writing. This suggestion was not accepted by Dr. Ambedkar, the Chairman of the Drafting Committee, for various reasons. He observed:

In the same way, as the King in the United Kingdom does, the President of the Indian Union will test the feelings of the House whether the House agrees that there should be dissolution or whether the House agrees that the affairs should be carried on with some other leader without dissolution. If he finds that the feeling was that there was no other alternative except dissolution, he would as a Constitutional President undoubtedly accept the advice of the Prime Minister to dissolve the House. Therefore, it seems to me that the insistence upon having a document in writing stating the reasons why the Prime Minister wanted a dissolution of the House seems to be useless and not worth the paper on which it is written. There are other ways for the President to test the feeling of the House and to find out whether the Prime Minister was asking for dissolution of the House for bona fide reasons or for purely party purposes. I think we could trust the President to make a correct decision between the party leaders and the House as a whole. — L.S. Deb., 18-5-1949, pp. 106-07.

At the commencement of the first Session after each General Election to Lok Sabha and at the commencement of the first Session of each year, the President addresses both Houses of Parliament assembled together and informs Parliament of the causes of its summons<sup>29</sup>. Besides the opening address, he may address either House of Parliament or both Houses assembled together, and for that purpose require the attendance of members<sup>30</sup>. He is also empowered to send messages to either House, whether with respect to a Bill then pending in Parliament or otherwise<sup>31</sup> and a House to which any message is so sent shall, with all convenient despatch, consider any matter required by the message to be taken into consideration.

The President appoints an acting Chairman of the Rajya Sabha in case:

The Office of Chairman is vacant, or

During any period when the Vice-President who is ex officio Chairman is acting as, or discharging the functions of the President, and

The Office of the Deputy Chairman is also vacant<sup>32</sup>.

Similarly, the President appoints the Speaker pro tem, from amongst the members of the Lok Sabha, to preside over the first sitting of the new Lok Sabha<sup>33</sup>.

Every member of either House of Parliament, before taking his seat in the House, is required to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation before the President or some person appointed in that behalf by him<sup>34</sup>.

In the case of disagreement between the two Houses on a Bill, other than a Money Bill, the President may summon both the Houses to meet in a joint sitting for the purpose of deliberating and voting on the Bill unless the Bill has lapsed by reason of dissolution of the Lok Sabha<sup>35</sup>. The President has in accordance with art. 118(3) of the Constitution made rules in consultation with the Chairman of Rajya Sabha and the Speaker of Lok Sabha, as to the procedure with respect to joint sittings of, and communications between, the two Houses<sup>36</sup>.

32. See art. 91(1).

33. In accordance with the second proviso to article 94, the Speaker of the dissolved Lok Sabha vacates his Office immediately before the first meeting of the next House constituted after the General Elections. There being thus neither Speaker nor Deputy Speaker, the President under Article 95(1) appoints a member as Speaker pro tem. It has been an established practice that the senior-most member in the newly-constituted House is appointed as Speaker pro tem and he remains in office till the election of new Speaker by the House.

36. These Rules are called ‘The Houses of Parliament (Joint Sittings and Communications) Rules’.

Certain Bills cannot be introduced or proceeded with unless the recommendation of the President has been received. The recommendation of the President is required—

For introduction of Bills and for moving amendments relating to financial matters. However, no recommendation is required for moving of an amendment making provision for the reduction or abolition of any tax<sup>37</sup>.

For introduction of a Bill relating to formation of new States or of alteration of areas, boundaries or names of existing States. Where the proposal contained in a Bill affects the area, boundaries or name of any of the States, the Bill has to be referred by the President to the Legislatures of the concerned States for expressing their views thereon within such period as may be specified in the reference or within such further period as the President may allow and the Bill can be introduced only after the period so specified or allowed has expired<sup>38</sup>.

For introduction of a Bill or moving of an amendment affecting taxation in which States are interested<sup>39</sup>.

For consideration of a Bill which, if enacted, would involve expenditure from the Consolidated Fund of India<sup>40</sup>.

No Act of Parliament, and no provision in any such Act, would be invalid by reason only that requisite recommendation or previous sanction was not given by the President<sup>41</sup>. Such requirements are regarded as matters of procedure only.

After a Bill has been passed by the Houses of Parliament, it is presented to the President who may either assent to the Bill or withhold his assent<sup>42</sup>. No provision has been made in the Constitution as to the period within which the President must assent to a Bill after it is presented to him for assent. The President may, as soon as possible after the presentation to him of a Bill for assent, return the Bill, if it is not a Money Bill, to the Houses with a message requesting the House to reconsider the Bill or any specified provisions thereof and, in particular, to consider the desirability of introducing any such amendments as the President may recommend in his message<sup>43</sup>. In the corresponding article 91 of the Draft Constitution, the period was 'six weeks', but on an amendment moved by Dr. Ambedkar it was changed to 'as soon as possible'.

The Indian Post Office (Amendment) Bill, 1986, passed by the Houses, was submitted to the President on 19 December 1986 for assent. is so returned, the Houses are obliged to reconsider the Bill accordingly. If the Bill is passed again by the Houses, with or without amendment, the President cannot withhold his assent therefrom<sup>44</sup>.

The President causes to be laid before both the Houses of Parliament in respect of every financial year, a statement of the estimated receipts and expenditure of the Government of India, also referred to as the annual financial statement, i.e., Budget for the year. The estimates show separately the sums required to meet the expenditure charged upon the Consolidated Fund of India and the sums required to meet other expenditure proposed to be made from the Consolidated Fund of India<sup>45</sup>. So, much of the estimates as relate to expenditure other than expenditure charged on the Consolidated Fund of India are submitted in the form of demands for grants to Lok Sabha and no demand for a grant can be made except on the recommendation of the President<sup>46</sup>.

The President also causes to be laid before both Houses of Parliament, whenever necessary, statements showing supplementary, additional or excess grants<sup>47</sup>.

A contingency fund in the nature of an imprest, known as the Contingency Fund of India, has been placed at the disposal of the President to enable advances to be made by him out of such Fund for the purpose of meeting unforeseen expenditure pending authorization of such expenditure by Parliament by law<sup>48</sup>.

special knowledge and practical experience in respect of such matters as literature, science, art and social service<sup>50</sup>.

The President decides the question as to whether a member of Parliament has become subject to any of the disqualifications for membership as also the question whether a person found guilty of a corrupt practice at an election to a House of Parliament under any law made by Parliament, except the question of disqualification on ground of defection<sup>51</sup>, is to be disqualified for being chosen as and for being a member of Parliament<sup>52</sup>. The President's decision on any question regarding disqualification of a member is final but before giving any decision on any such question, the President is required to consult the Election Commission which is empowered to hold an inquiry in this behalf<sup>53</sup>. The power to disqualify a member on ground of defection vests in the Speaker<sup>54</sup>.

Reports of the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India relating to the accounts of Union.

Recommendations made by the Finance Commission together with an explanatory memorandum as to the action taken thereon.

Reports of the Union Public Service Commission together with a memorandum explaining as respects the cases, if any, where the advice of the Commission was not accepted, and the reasons for such non-acceptance.

Reports of the National Commission for Scheduled Castes, the National Commission for Scheduled Tribes and the National Commission for Women.

Reports of the Backward Classes Commission together with a memorandum explaining the action taken thereon.

Reports of the Commissioner for Linguistic Minorities.

Reports of the Official Language Commission and of the Committee of Parliament to examine the recommendations of the Official Language Commission, which are presented to the President, have also in the past been laid before both the Houses of Parliament<sup>56</sup>.

Other Functions of the President

The President appoints the Council of Ministers with the Prime Minister at the head to aid and advise him, who is the leader of the majority party in the Lok Sabha and, on his advice, appoints other Ministers. The Ministers hold post during the pleasure of the President<sup>57</sup>. Technically, the ultimate choice in the matter of appointment of Ministers rests with the Prime Minister but if the Prime Minister does happen to appoint a Minister who is not worthy of the post, it would be possible for Lok Sabha to adopt a motion of no-confidence in the Council of Ministers and thereby get rid of the Minister concerned or of the Prime Minister, if he is not prepared to have the Minister dismissed on the call of Lok Sabha. The President is bound to take due note of a motion of no-confidence in the Council of Ministers adopted by Lok Sabha and dismiss the Council of Ministers, if the Prime Minister does not tender his resignation on the adoption of the said motion<sup>58</sup>.

The President appoints the Judges of the Supreme Court and the High Courts of various States<sup>59</sup>. After his appointment, a Judge of the Supreme Court or the High Court cannot be removed from his office except by an order of the President passed after an address by each House of Parliament, supported by a majority of the total membership of the House and by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the members of that House present and voting, has been presented to the President in the same Session for such removal on the ground of proved misbehaviour or incapacity<sup>60</sup>.

When the President resigns his Office, the resignation is addressed to the Vice-President, who is required to communicate it forthwith to the Speaker of Lok Sabha<sup>61</sup>.

Legislative Powers of the President

If at any time, except when both Houses of Parliament are in session, the President is satisfied that circumstances exist which render it necessary for him to take immediate action, he may promulgate such Ordinances as the circumstances appear to him to require. An Ordinance so promulgated has the same force and effect as an Act of Parliament, but every Ordinance has to be laid before both Houses of Parliament has been vested under cl. (5) of article 124 with the power to regulate by law the procedure for presentation of an address and for the investigation and proof of the misbehaviour or incapacity of a Judge. Parliament has accordingly passed the Judges (Inquiry) Act, 1968. For details re: procedure under the law, see Chapter XLIII—'Parliament and Judiciary'.

61. Art. 56. In the Draft Constitution, as placed before the Constituent Assembly of India, the provision was that the resignation should be addressed by the President to the Chairman of Rajya Sabha and the Speaker of Lok Sabha. While adopting this article, an amendment, providing that the resignation should be addressed to the Vice-President so that one person only was to receive it and be responsible to set the machinery in motion to fill the vacancy, was adopted. It was also felt desirable that the Speaker should immediately know of the resignation. Hence, it was provided that the Vice-President should forthwith communicate the resignation to the Speaker— see C.A. Deb., 13-12-1948, pp. 1020-22.

Parliament. The Ordinance ceases to operate at the expiration of six weeks from the reassembly of Parliament, or if resolutions disapproving it are passed by both the Houses before the expiration of six weeks then upon passing of the second of those resolutions. It can also be withdrawn at any time by the President<sup>62</sup>.

For three years from the commencement of the Constitution<sup>63</sup>, the President was vested with the power to make by order necessary adaptations and modifications of any law in force in the territory of India immediately before the commencement of the Constitution for the purpose of bringing the provisions of such a law into accord with the provisions of the Constitution whether by way of repeal or amendment and to provide that the law would, as from such date as was specified in the order, have effect subject to the adaptations and modifications so made and any such adaptation or modification could not be questioned in any court of law.

For the purpose of bringing the provisions of any law in force in India or any part thereof immediately before the commencement of the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956, into accord with the provisions of the Constitution as amended by that Act, the President could, by an order made before 1 November 1957, make such adaptations and modifications of the law, whether by way of repeal or amendment, as was necessary or expedient, provided that the law would, as from such date as was specified in the order, have effect, subject to adaptations and modifications so made, and any such adaptations or modifications could not be questioned in any court of law<sup>64</sup>.

The President has the power to direct, by public notification, that from such date as may be specified in the notification, any Union or State law shall not apply to any major port or aerodrome or shall apply thereto subject to such exceptions or modifications as may be specified in the notification<sup>65</sup>.

The President may make regulations for the peace, progress and good Government of the Union territory of — the Andaman and Nicobar Islands;

Lakshadweep;

Dadra and Nagar Haveli;

Daman and Diu; and
Puducherry<sup>66</sup>.

When a body is created to function as a Legislature for the Union territory of Puducherry, the President shall not make any regulation with effect from the date appointed for the first meeting of the Legislature. But whenever such a body functioning as a Legislature is dissolved or the functioning of that body as a Legislature remains suspended under the provisions of the Government of Union Territories Act, 1963 enacted in pursuance of clause (1) of article 239A, the President may, during the period of such dissolution or suspension, make regulations for the peace, progress and good Government of that Union territory.<sup>67</sup>

Any regulation made may repeal or amend any Act made by Parliament or any other law which is for the time being applicable to the Union territory and, when promulgated by the President, shall have the same force and effect as an Act of Parliament which applies to that territory<sup>68</sup>.

Powers during Emergency

If the President is satisfied that a grave emergency exists on account of either war or external aggression or armed rebellion<sup>69</sup> or failure of constitutional machinery in a State<sup>70</sup> or due to threat to the financial stability or credit of India<sup>71</sup>, he may, by proclamation, make a declaration to that effect<sup>72</sup>. In the case of a proclamation relating to the failure of constitutional machinery in a State, the President also assumes to himself the functions of the Government of the State and the powers vested in or exercisable by the Governor<sup>73</sup>. Special powers were conferred on the President by the Constitution (Fifty-ninth Amendment) Act, 1988 to issue a proclamation of Emergency in respect of the whole or any part of Punjab if the integrity of India was threatened by internal disturbance in the whole or any part of Punjab. The Act, which came into effect on 30 March 1988, was enacted to be in force for two years. It was subsequently repealed by the Constitution (Sixty-third Amendment) Act, 1989, which came into effect on 6 January 1990.

Limitations on the Powers of the President

The Constitution has also placed the following limitations on the powers of the President by granting certain overriding functions to Parliament:

Parliament can confer by law functions on authorities other than the President<sup>74</sup>.

The President cannot return a Money Bill for reconsideration of the Houses<sup>75</sup>.

74. Art. 53(3)(b).

75. Proviso to art. 111.

The President cannot withhold his assent to a Constitution Amendment Bill or to a Bill earlier returned by him to the Houses with a message requesting them to reconsider the Bill, if the Bill is passed again by the Houses with or without amendment and presented to him for assent<sup>76</sup>.

Parliament can by a law determine the qualifications and manner of selection of members for appointment to the Finance Commission, which, under the Constitution, is constituted by the President<sup>77</sup>.

Subject to the provisions of any law made by Parliament, the President may by order declare any State not to be a “foreign State” for such purposes as may be specified in the order<sup>78</sup>.

Impeachment of the President

The President may be removed from Office by impeachment for violation of the Constitution<sup>79</sup>.

When a President is to be impeached for violation of the Constitution, the charge has to be preferred by either House of Parliament<sup>80</sup>.

No such charge can be preferred unless—

- (a) the proposal to prefer such charge is contained in a resolution, which has been moved after at least fourteen days’ notice signed by not less than one-fourth of the total number of members of the House, has been given in writing, and
- (b) such resolution has been passed by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the total membership of the House<sup>81</sup>.

When a charge has been so preferred by either House of Parliament, the other House shall investigate the charge or cause the charge to be investigated and the President has the right to appear and to be represented at such investigation<sup>82</sup>. The conduct of the President may be brought under review by any court, tribunal or body appointed or designated by either House of Parliament for the investigation of such charge<sup>83</sup>.

If, as a result of the investigation, a resolution is passed by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the total membership of the House by which the charge was investigated or caused to be investigated, declaring that the charge preferred against the President has been sustained, such resolution shall have the effect of removing the President from his Office as from the date on which the resolution is so passed<sup>84</sup>.

Succession to Presidency

The Constitution provides for succession to Presidency, and election to fill a vacancy caused by expiration of the term of Office of the President has to be completed before the expiration of the term<sup>85</sup>. Where a vacancy in the Office of President occurs by reason of his death, resignation or removal, or otherwise, the Vice-President acts as President until a new President is elected, in no case later than six months from the date of occurrence of the vacancy<sup>86</sup>. The Constitution also provides that when the President is unable to discharge his function owing to absence, illness, or any other cause, the Vice-President shall discharge his functions until the date on which the President resumes his duties<sup>87</sup>.

However, the Constitution does not provide for cases where a vacancy takes place in the Offices of the President and the Vice-President simultaneously, or where the Vice-President while acting as, or discharging the functions of the President, is unable to do so. To cover such cases, Parliament made a law providing therein that in such cases the Chief Justice of India or, in his absence, the senior-most Judge of the Supreme Court shall discharge the functions of the President<sup>88</sup>.

When the Vice-President, V.V. Giri, who was acting as President in the vacancy caused by the death of the President, resigned from the Office of the Vice-President with effect from the forenoon of 20 July 1969, the Chief Justice of India discharged the functions of the President from the forenoon of the said date<sup>89</sup>.

The recommendation of the President was sought for consideration of certain Bills by the House in due course. The communication received by the Secretary, Lok Sabha conveyed that the recommendation had been given in the case of the first such Bill by ‘the Chief Justice of India discharging the functions of the President’, in the case of the second Bill by ‘the Chief Justice of India (M. Hidayatullah) discharging the functions of the President’, and in the subsequent cases by ‘Shri M. Hidayatullah, discharging the functions of the President’. See Bn. II, 13-8-1969, para 1295, 18-8-1969, para 1301; 21-8-1969, para 1305.

CHAPTER IV

Relations Between the Houses

There are several occasions when the two Houses of Parliament have to communicate with each other. The usual mode of communication is by means of a written message sent from one House to the other<sup>1</sup>. The other modes of communication are: meetings of Joint Committees of the Houses and joint sittings of the Houses.

Communication between the Houses

Communication by means of a written message is resorted to not only for transmitting Bills from one House to the other but also for the transmission of motions<sup>2</sup> and resolutions, passed by one House, which have to be sent to the other House for information or concurrence. However, the principal object of a message is to transmit Bills from one House to the other since it is mostly in connection with Bills that the need for communication between two Houses arises<sup>3</sup>.

1. See The Houses of Parliament (Joint Sittings and Communications) Rules—Rules 9 and 10.
  2. Messages were sent to Rajya Sabha for concurrence and communicating the names of members of Rajya Sabha after adoption of motions by Lok Sabha for appointment of following Joint Committees :
    - (i) Joint Committee to enquire into issues arising from the report of the Swedish National Audit Bureau on the Bofors Contract — motion adopted in Lok Sabha on 6 August 1987;
    - (ii) Joint Committee to go into the irregularities and fraudulent malpractices relating to securities, shares, bonds and other financial instruments - motion adopted in Lok Sabha on 6 August 1992;
    - (iii) Joint Committee on Stock Market Scam and matters relating thereto — motion adopted in Lok Sabha on 26 April 2001;
    - (iv) Joint Committee on Pesticide Residues in and Safety Standards for Soft Drinks, Fruit Juice and Other Beverages - motion adopted in Lok Sabha on 22 August 2003;
    - (v) Joint Committee to examine the Constitutional and Legal position relating to Office of Profit — motion adopted in Lok Sabha on 17 August 2006;
    - (vi) Joint Committee to examine prescriptions and irregularities in the allocation and pricing of Telecom licences and spectrum — motion adopted in Lok Sabha on 1 March 2011; and
    - (vii) Constitution of a Committee of both the Houses to be called the Committee for Welfare of Other Backward Classes (OBCs) — motion adopted in Lok Sabha on 21 December 2011.

Message from Rajya Sabha for concurrence and communicating the names of members of Lok Sabha for constitution of a Joint Committee of both the Houses to enquire into the allegations of payment of bribes in the acquisition of VVIP Helicopters by the Ministry of Defence from M/s Augusta Westland and the role of alleged middlemen in the transaction was received in Lok Sabha on 28 February 2013. The message was reported in the House on 4 March 2013. The Motion concurring in the motion adopted by Rajya Sabha and indicating the names of members of Lok Sabha who would serve on the Committee was, however, not moved in Lok Sabha by the Minister concurred during the Budget Session 2013.

3. Since the inception of a bicameral Legislature at the Centre in 1921 under the Montague-Chelmsford Reforms, Bills passed by the Assembly were transmitted to the Council of State with a message. Messages between one Chamber and the other were conveyed by the Secretary of one Chamber to the Secretary of the other. See The Indian Legislative Rules, Rule 41.

A message sent by either House is conveyed by the Secretary-General of one House to the Secretary-General of the other. The Secretary-General of the House to which the message is sent, reports the message to the House, when it is in Session, at the first convenient opportunity, and, in urgent cases, immediately. If the House is not in Session, members are informed of the message through a paragraph in the Bulletin of that House.

Bill originating in and passed by Lok Sabha—If a Bill, other than a Money Bill, originates in Lok Sabha, and is passed by it, Rajya Sabha is informed of it through a message along with a copy of the Bill, as passed; and the copy of the Bill also carries an endorsement signed by the Secretary-General that the Bill has been passed by Lok Sabha. Rajya Sabha may pass the Bill in the form received, and communicate about it to Lok Sabha or may pass it with amendment(s) and return it to Lok Sabha with a message to that effect requesting that concurrence of Lok Sabha in the said amendment(s) be communicated to Rajya Sabha. If the amendments proposed are not agreed to by Lok Sabha, or, if Lok Sabha proposes alternative amendments, the Bill, or the Bill as further amended, is returned to Rajya Sabha with a message. The Bill also carries an endorsement signed by the Secretary-General in such a case.

If a Bill, other than a Money Bill, as passed by Lok Sabha, is returned by Rajya Sabha with amendments and Lok Sabha accepts the amendments made by Rajya Sabha, the Bill is deemed to have been finally passed by both the Houses, and message is sent to Rajya Sabha. If Lok Sabha disagrees with the amendment(s) made in the Bill by Rajya Sabha or proposes further amendment or an alternative amendment, the Bill, or the Bill as further amended, is returned to Rajya Sabha with a message.

Bills originating in and passed by Rajya Sabha—If a Bill originating in and passed by Rajya Sabha is passed by Lok Sabha without any amendment, a message is sent to Rajya Sabha and further action regarding obtaining of President's assent on the Bill is taken by the Lok Sabha Secretariat.

If, however, Lok Sabha passes the Bill with amendment or amendments, the Bill is returned to Rajya Sabha along with a message for concurrence by that House in the amendment or amendments. The Bill so returned carries an endorsement signed by the Secretary-General.

If Rajya Sabha disagrees with all the amendments made by Lok Sabha or any of them or agrees to any of the amendments made by Lok Sabha with further amendments, or proposes further amendments in place of the amendments made by Lok Sabha, the Bill, as further amended, will again be returned to Lok Sabha with a message<sup>4</sup>.

At this stage, Lok Sabha may either agree to the Bill as originally passed by Rajya Sabha or as further amended by that House or it may insist on an amendment or amendments to which Rajya Sabha has disagreed. In the latter case, the Bill will again be returned to Rajya Sabha with a message.

4. There has been no such instance so far.

If there is no agreement in terms of Article 108(1)<sup>5</sup> over the amendments between the two Houses in case of a Bill originating in either House, a joint sitting of the two Houses may be convened by the President.

Money Bills—In the case of a Money Bill, while transmitting a copy of the Bill, as passed by Lok Sabha, in addition to the usual message and endorsement of the Secretary-General, a certificate signed by the Speaker, certifying that the Bill is a Money Bill, is also superscribed at the end of the Bill<sup>6</sup>.

Any amendment(s) recommended by Rajya Sabha may or may not be accepted by Lok Sabha. In either case, a message is sent to Rajya Sabha to that effect<sup>7</sup>.

Joint Committee of the Houses<sup>8</sup>

Messages are also sent by one House to the other in the following cases:

- (i) After a motion has been adopted by Lok Sabha, referring a Bill (other than a Money Bill) to a Joint Committee, a message is sent to Rajya Sabha asking it to concur with the said motion and to communicate the names of members of Rajya Sabha to serve on the Committee. Rajya Sabha, after agreeing to the motion, sends a message to that effect to Lok Sabha mentioning also the names of members appointed by Rajya Sabha on the Joint Committee.

The process is the same whenever any other Joint Parliamentary Committee is appointed.
- (ii) Where it has not been possible for the Joint Committee to present its report in the specified time, a message is sent to Rajya Sabha communicating that the time for the presentation of the Report has been extended by a motion adopted by Lok Sabha.
- (iii) Where vacancies have occurred in the Joint Committee either by death or retirement or resignation of certain members of Rajya Sabha, a motion is adopted by Lok Sabha, requesting Rajya Sabha to appoint new members in their place and the motion is communicated by means of a message. However, if vacancies are thus caused in the ranks of members of the appointing House, in this case Lok Sabha, on the adoption of the motion appointing new members to fill in the vacancies, Rajya Sabha is informed of this fact through a letter and not by means of a message.

5. For details, see Chapter XXII— 'Legislation', under Money Bills.

6. In case of urgency, when a message regarding a Money Bill passed by Lok Sabha could not be transmitted to Rajya Sabha immediately as Speaker was out of Delhi, the Secretary-General, Rajya Sabha, was advised informally that the Bill had been passed by Lok Sabha and that message signed by Secretary-General together with the Money Bill certified by the Speaker would be transmitted to Rajya Sabha Secretariat later. Copy of the Bill, as passed by Lok Sabha, was meanwhile supplied to Rajya Sabha Secretariat on the same day.

7. Amendments recommended by Rajya Sabha in the Finance (No. 2) Bill, 1977 and the Finance Bill, 1978 were considered and rejected by Lok Sabha.

Amendments recommended by Rajya Sabha in the Appropriation Bill, 1985 and the Appropriation (No. 2) Bill, 1985 were considered and accepted by Lok Sabha.

8. For details regarding the formation, etc. of Joint Committees, see Chapter XXX— 'Parliamentary Committees.'

- (iv) Where a Bill is referred to a Joint Committee by Rajya Sabha and Lok Sabha is asked to concur with the motion for reference, a message is sent to Rajya Sabha after Lok Sabha agrees to the motion mentioning the names of members of Lok Sabha appointed to the Committee. Lok Sabha, while agreeing to their main motion, may vary or modify the terms of the motion and make a recommendation to Rajya Sabha to that effect.
- (v) Parliament has the inherent power to recommend modifications to the statutory rules and orders laid on the Table, even if the statute under which they were framed does not provide for modification. When an amendment to any rules is passed by Lok Sabha, it is transmitted to Rajya Sabha for its concurrence along with a message. If Rajya Sabha agrees to the amendment made by Lok Sabha or proposes further or alternative amendments, it sends a message to that effect. In the case of final disagreement between the two Houses, further proceedings regarding the amendment are dropped<sup>9</sup>.
- (vi) Messages are also exchanged between the two Houses if either House adopts a resolution to amend a “President’s Act” or when a Bill passed by one House is sought to be withdrawn while pending in the other on a motion to that effect adopted by it.

Joint Sitting of the Houses

When a Bill other than a Money Bill or a Constitution Amendment Bill, passed by one House is rejected by the other House or the Houses have finally disagreed as to the amendments made in the Bill or more than six months lapse from the date of the receipt of the Bill by the other House without the Bill being passed by it, the President may, unless the Bill has lapsed by reason of dissolution of Lok Sabha, notify to the Houses by message, if they are sitting, or by public notification, if they are not sitting, his intention to summon them to meet in a joint sitting<sup>10</sup>.

This provision is only an enabling one, empowering the President to take a step for resolving a deadlock between the two Houses. It is not obligatory upon him to summon the Houses to meet in a joint sitting. Moreover, this provision does not disable the receiving House from passing the Bill after the lapse of six months, provided the Bill has not lapsed by reason of dissolution or the President has not already notified his intention to convene a joint sitting<sup>11</sup>.

9. Rule 238, see also Chapter XXIV— ‘Subordinate Legislation.’

10. Art. 108(1). A similar provision also existed in the Government of India Act. See S. 67(3) as set out in the Ninth Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935 and Rules 38 and 39 of the Indian Legislative Rules framed there under.

11. For instance, the Architects (Amendment) Bill, 1980 passed by Rajya Sabha on 3 December 1980, laid on the Table of Lok Sabha on 8 December 1980, passed by Lok Sabha with amendments on 29 April 1982 (after a lapse of more than six months) and amendments made by Lok Sabha agreed to by Rajya Sabha on 3 May 1982; the Sales Promotion Employees (Conditions of Service) Amendment Bill, 1980 passed by Rajya Sabha on 11 December 1980, laid on the Table of Lok Sabha on 15 December 1980, passed by Lok Sabha with amendments on 16 October 1982 (after a lapse of more than six months) and amendments made by Lok Sabha agreed to by Rajya Sabha on 2 November 1982; the Repealing and Amending Bill, 1986, passed by Rajya Sabha on 28 July 1986, laid on the Table of Lok Sabha on 29 July 1986, passed by Lok Sabha with amendments.

When the President has notified his intention of summoning the Houses to meet in a joint sitting, neither House shall proceed further with the Bill and the President may thereafter issue an order summoning the Houses to meet in a joint sitting for the purpose of deliberating and voting on the Bill on a date which is suggested by the Prime Minister or the Prime Minister in consultation with the Cabinet, and agreed to by the Speaker, and if he does so, the Houses shall meet accordingly<sup>12</sup>. The Secretary-General, Lok Sabha, issues summons to each member of Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha, specifying the time and place fixed by the President for the joint sitting<sup>13</sup>. Once the President has notified his intention to summon the Houses for a joint sitting, dissolution of Lok Sabha shall not stand in the way of proceeding with the Bill at a joint sitting<sup>14</sup>.

Procedure at Joint Sitting—At a joint sitting, the Speaker presides<sup>15</sup> and the Secretary-General, Lok Sabha acts as Secretary-General of the joint sitting<sup>16</sup>. The Rules of Procedure of Lok Sabha apply with such modification and variations as the Speaker may consider necessary or appropriate<sup>17</sup>. The hour upon which a joint sitting shall adjourn and the day and hour or the part of the same day to which it shall be adjourned is determined by the Speaker<sup>18</sup>.

During the absence of the Speaker from any joint sitting, the Deputy Speaker of Lok Sabha or if he is also absent, the Deputy Chairman of Rajya Sabha or if he too is absent, such other person as may be determined by the members present at the sitting, presides<sup>19</sup>. The quorum to constitute a joint sitting is one-tenth of the total number of members of the two Houses<sup>20</sup>.

If at a joint sitting of the House, the Bill referred to it, with such amendments, if any, as are agreed to in joint sitting, is passed by a majority of the total number of members of both Houses present and voting, it is deemed, for the purposes of the Constitution, to have been passed by both Houses. At a joint sitting no amendment can be proposed to the Bill, other than such amendments, if any, as become necessary by the delay in the passage of the Bill and such other amendments as relate to matters with respect to which the Houses have not agreed. The decision of the person presiding as to the admissibility of amendments is final<sup>21</sup>.

At a joint sitting, the Speaker, or the person acting as such, shall not vote in the first instance, but shall have and exercise a casting vote in the case of equality of votes<sup>22</sup>.

So far, joint sittings of the Houses under article 108 have taken place on three occasions :

The first occasion arose following a disagreement between the two Houses over certain amendments to the Dowry Prohibition Bill, 1959. The President, by a message addressed to the Speaker through the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, on 18 April 1961, notified his intention to summon the two Houses to meet in a joint sitting for the purpose of deliberating and voting on the Bill. The message was read out to Lok Sabha by the Speaker on 19 April 1961 and on the same day, the Chairman, Rajya Sabha, conveyed the message to that House<sup>23</sup>. The Speaker, having agreed to the suggestion that the joint sitting might be held on 6 May 1961, an Order summoning the two Houses to meet in a joint sitting on that day was made by the President on 22 April 1961. Summons were issued by the Secretary to each member of Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha on 27 April 1961, specifying the time and place for the joint sitting. The joint sitting was accordingly held in the Central Hall of Parliament House on 6 May 1961, followed by another sitting on 9 May 1961 when the Bill, as amended, was finally passed<sup>24</sup>.

The second occasion arose following rejection by Rajya Sabha of the Banking Service Commission (Repeal) Bill, 1977 seeking to replace the Banking Service Commission (Repeal) Ordinance, 1977 promulgated on 19 September 1977. The Bill passed by Lok Sabha and transmitted to Rajya Sabha on 5 December 1977, was rejected by Rajya Sabha on 8 December 1977, the motion for consideration of the Bill having been negatived. On 9 December 1977, Rajya Sabha sent a message to Lok Sabha to that effect. The joint sitting of the Houses was held on 16 May 1978 in the Central Hall of Parliament House for the purpose of deliberating and voting on the Bill and the Bill was finally passed<sup>25</sup>.

The third joint sitting was held on 26 March 2002 when the motion to consider the Prevention of Terrorism Bill, 2002, seeking to replace the Prevention of Terrorism Ordinance (POTO) as passed by the Lok Sabha was rejected by the Rajya Sabha. This sitting was held for the purpose of deliberating and voting on the Prevention of Terrorism Bill, 2002 and the Bill was finally passed<sup>26</sup>.

CHAPTER V

Election of President, Vice-President and Members of Parliament

Election of the President and the Vice-President

The superintendence, direction and control of the preparation of the electoral rolls for, and the conduct of all elections to Parliament and to the Legislature of every State and of elections to the Offices of the President and the Vice-President are vested in an independent agency called the Election Commission of India. The Commission consists of the Chief Election Commissioner and such number of other Election Commissioners, if any, as may be fixed by the President from time to time. The appointment of the Chief Election Commissioner and other Election Commissioners, subject to the provisions of any law made by Parliament in that behalf, is made by the President<sup>1</sup>.

The President is elected by the members of an electoral college consisting of the elected members of both Houses of Parliament and the elected members of the Legislative Assemblies of the States, by secret ballot, in accordance with the system of proportional representation by means of single transferable vote<sup>2</sup>.

The Constitution prescribes that as far as practicable, there shall be uniformity in the scale of representation of the different States at the election of the President. For the purpose of securing such uniformity among the States inter se as well as parity between the States as a whole and the Union, the number of votes which each

1. Art. 324 (1) (2). Presently, the Election Commission is a multi-member body with the Chief Election Commissioner and two other Election Commissioners.
  2. Arts. 54 and 55 (3); see also the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections Act, 1952 and the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections Rules, 1974. For these Rules, see Ministry of Law Notification No. S.O. 305(E) of 21-5-1974, Gaz. Ex. (II-3-ii) pp. 1063-78.

The question of election of the President was debated at length in the Constituent Assembly. The system of direct election in the case of presidential election was, inter alia, not adopted because it was felt that in a country, which was almost a sub-continent, it would be well-nigh impossible to provide an electoral machinery for the purpose of smooth and successful election. For details, see C.A. Deb., Vol. VII, pp. 987-99.

The suggestion that the electoral college should consist of members of Parliament only was also turned down so that “the President might not represent the same group or party as in the Centre”—C.A. Deb., Vol. IV, p. 721. Both Pt. Jawaharlal Nehru and Dr. B. R. Ambedkar observed in the Constituent Assembly that election by the electoral college was tantamount to a direct election on adult franchise—C.A. Deb., Vol. VII, p. 998.

It has been held that the word “States” used in article 54 cannot include Union territories. A Legislature contemplated for Union territories under article 239A is not a Legislative Assembly—Shiv Kirpal Singh v. V.V. Giri, A.I.R. 1970, S.C. 2097.

The word ‘State’ used in articles 54 and 55 includes the National Capital Territory of Delhi and Union Territory of Puducherry—Constitution (Seventieth Amendment) Act, 1992.

elected member of Parliament and of the Legislative Assembly of each State is entitled to cast at such election is determined in the following manner<sup>3</sup> :-

- (a) every elected member of the Legislative Assembly of a State has as many votes as there are multiples of one thousand in the quotient obtained by dividing the population of the State by the total number of the elected members of the Assembly;
- (b) if, after taking the said multiples of one thousand, the remainder is not less than five hundred, then the vote of each member referred to in (a) above is further increased by one;
- (c) each elected member of either House of Parliament has such number of votes as may be obtained by dividing the total number of votes assigned to the members of the Legislative Assemblies of the States under (a) and (b) above by the total number of the elected members of both Houses of Parliament, fractions exceeding one-half being counted as one and other fractions being disregarded<sup>4</sup>.

The Vice-President, who is the ex officio Chairman of the Rajya Sabha, is elected by members of an electoral college consisting of members of both Houses of Parliament, by secret ballot, in accordance with the system of proportional representation by means of single transferable vote<sup>5</sup>.

A person eligible for election as President should be an Indian citizen, not less than 35 years in age, and should be qualified for election as a member of the Lok Sabha. Such a person should not hold an office of profit<sup>6</sup> under the Government

3. Art. 55 (1) and (2).

4. For illustration, the value of vote of an MLA for Uttar Pradesh was fixed at 208 in the 2007 Presidential election by dividing the population of the State (83,849,905) by 403 (number of elected members of Vidhan Sabha) further divided by 1000:

$$= \frac{83849905}{403 \times 1000} = 208.06 = 208$$

Similarly, value of vote of a member of Sikkim Legislative Assembly was:

$$= \frac{209843}{32 \times 1000} = 6.55 = 7$$

The total value of votes assigned to the elected members of Legislative Assemblies of twenty-eight States in the 2007 Presidential election came to 5,49,474. This number was divided equally among 776 elected members of the two Houses of Parliament (543 of Lok Sabha and 233 of Rajya Sabha). The value of vote of an M.P. was:

5. Arts. 64 and 66(1) read with the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections Act, 1952, s. 2(d). The mode of election of the Vice-President differs from that of the President insofar as the elected members of the Legislative Assemblies of States do not form part of the electoral college for the election of the former.
6. Art. 58. The Offices of the President, Vice-President, Governor of a State or the Minister of the Union or of a State are not treated as Offices of Profit for this purpose vide article 58(2), Explanation.

of India or a State Government or under any local or other authority subject to the control of any of the said Governments. A member of Parliament or of the State Legislature can seek election to the Office of President but if he is elected President, he is deemed to have vacated his seat in Parliament or the State Legislature on the date on which he enters upon his Office as President. There is also no bar to a person holding the Office of Presiding Officer of the Lok Sabha or of a State Legislature seeking election to the Office of President<sup>7</sup>.

The conditions of eligibility for election as Vice-President are the same as for President with one exception that the candidate for Vice-Presidency should be a person qualified to be elected as a member of the Rajya Sabha<sup>8</sup>. A Presidential candidate, on the other hand, should be qualified to be elected as a member of the Lok Sabha<sup>9</sup>.

Elections to the Office of the President and the Vice-President are regulated by the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections Act, 1952, and the Rules made thereunder<sup>10</sup>.

Certain offices of profit, under the Government, have been declared as not to disqualify the holders thereof for being chosen as President or Vice-President, vide the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Act, 1959, s.3.

Charan Lal Sahu v. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, A.I.R., 1975, S.C. 1288.

A person eligible for election as President under article 58 but not complying with requirements of law made under article 71 which regulates the mode and manner in which nomination should be filed, would not be a “candidate” for election.

7. In 1962 and 1967, respectively, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan and Dr. Zakir Husain, who contested election to the Office of President of India, did not resign from the Office of Vice-President.

In 1969, however, the Vice-President (Dr. V.V. Giri) and the Speaker of Lok Sabha (Dr. N. Sanjiva Reddy) resigned their respective offices before filing their nomination papers for election to the Office of President. Dr. N. Sanjiva Reddy did not resign his seat in Lok Sabha. In 1977, Dr. N. Sanjiva Reddy, before filing nomination papers for Presidential election, resigned from the Office of Speaker. In 1987, 1992, 1997 and 2007, R. Venkataraman, Dr. Shanker Dayal Sharma, K.R. Narayanan and Bhairon Singh Shekhawat, respectively, who contested election to the Office of President, did not resign from the Office of Vice-President.

8. Art. 66 (3)(c).

9. Art. 58 (1) (c).

10. The Constitution of India came into force from 26 January 1950 and the first General Elections were held in 1952. As during the intervening period, the Office of the President of India could not remain vacant, a transitional provision was made in the Constitution—article 380(1), since repealed by the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956—under which the members of the Constituent Assembly elected the President. Accordingly, Dr. Rajendra Prasad, who was the President of the Constituent Assembly, was elected as the President unopposed.

The first election to the Office of the President under article 54 was held in 1952 when Dr. Rajendra Prasad was elected as the first President of the Republic of India on 6 May 1952 and he assumed Office on 13 May 1952.

The second election was held in May 1957 and Dr. Rajendra Prasad was re-elected to the Office for a second term on 10 May 1957. The President took the oath of Office on 13 May 1957.

The third election was held on 7 May 1962 and Dr. S. Radhakrishnan was elected to the Office of the President on 11 May 1962. The President took the oath of Office on 13 May 1962.

At the fourth election held on 6 May 1967, Dr. Zakir Husain was elected to the Office of the President. He took the oath of Office on 13 May 1967.

Due to the demise of Dr. Zakir Husain, the fifth election to the Office of President was held in August, 1969 and Dr. V.V. Giri was elected to the Office on 20 August 1969. He took the oath of Office on 24 August 1969.

The sixth election was held on 17 August 1974 and Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed was elected to the Office of President on 20 August 1974. He took the oath of Office on 24 August 1974.

President Ahmed died on 11 February 1977 and pending the seventh election, which was due within six months, the Vice-President, B.D. Jatti was sworn in as the Acting President.

At the seventh election held in July 1977, N. Sanjiva Reddy was the only validly nominated candidate and he was, therefore, declared elected as President on 21 July 1977. He took the oath of Office on 25 July 1977.

At the eighth election held on 12 July 1982, Giani Zail Singh was elected to the Office of President on 15 July 1982. He took the oath of Office on 25 July 1982.

The ninth election was held on 13 July 1987. R. Venkataraman was elected to the Office of President on 16 July 1987. He took the oath of Office on 25 July 1987.

The tenth election was held on 13 July 1992. Dr. Shanker Dayal Sharma was elected to Office on 16 July 1992. He took the oath of Office on 25 July 1992.

At the eleventh election held on 14 July 1997, K.R. Narayanan was elected to the Office of President on 17 July 1997. He took the oath of Office on 25 July 1997.

At the twelfth election held on 15 July 2002, Dr. A.P.J. Abdul Kalam was elected to Office of President on 18 July 2002. He took the oath of Office on 25 July 2002.

At the thirteenth election held on 19 July 2007, Pratibha Devisingh Patil was elected to Office of President on 21 July 2007. She took the oath of Office on 25 July 2007.

At the fourteenth election held on 19 July 2012, Pranab Mukherjee was elected to office of President on 22 July 2012. He took the oath of Office on 25 July 2012.

At the first election to the Office of the Vice-President in April 1952, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan was the only validly nominated candidate and he was, therefore, declared elected unopposed as the Vice-President on 25 April 1952. He was again declared elected on 23 April 1957, for a second term; there was no other contestant. Election to the Office of the Vice-President was contested for the first time in 1962. At this election, held on 7 May 1962, Dr. Zakir Husain was elected as the Vice-President.

There were two contestants for the Office of Vice-President in 1967 and Dr. V.V. Giri was elected. On the resignation of Vice-President Dr. V.V. Giri, election to the Office of Vice-President was held in 1969 and G.S. Pathak was elected as the Vice-President on 30 August, 1969. In the next election to the Office of Vice-President, of the two contestants, B.D. Jatti was elected as Vice-President on 27 August 1974.

In the election held in August 1979, M. Hidayatullah was the only candidate and he was, therefore, declared elected unopposed on 9 August 1979.

In the next election to the Office of Vice-President for which there were two contestants, R. Venkataraman was elected as Vice-President on 22 August 1984.

See also Subhash C. Kashyap: Vice-Presidential Election in India, 1984, Lok Sabha Secretariat, New Delhi, 1986.

Due to the resignation of R. Venkataraman from the Office of Vice-President in May 1987, election was held in August 1987. Dr. Shanker Dayal Sharma, being the only validly nominated candidate, was declared elected unopposed as the Vice-President on 21 August 1987.

In the election held in August, 1992, for which there were two contestants, K.R. Narayanan was elected as Vice-President on 19 August, 1992.

For the purpose of elections to the Offices of the President and the Vice-President, it has been the established practice that the Secretary-General<sup>11</sup> of the Lok Sabha or the Rajya Sabha is appointed as Returning Officer along with one or more Assistant Returning Officers<sup>12</sup>.

The various stages of the elections are detailed in the official gazette by a notification by the Election Commission. These are: the last date for making nominations, which is the fourteenth day after the date of publication of the notification; the date for the scrutiny of nominations which is a date immediately following the last date for making nominations; the last date for the withdrawal of candidatures, which is the second day after the date for the scrutiny of nominations; and the date of poll, if necessary, which is a date not earlier than the fifteenth day after the last date for the withdrawal of candidatures. If on any of the dates either for making nominations or for the scrutiny of nominations or for withdrawal of candidatures, it is public holiday, the next succeeding day which is not a public holiday is taken as the appropriate date for the purpose<sup>13</sup>.

The notification in the case of an election to fill a vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of Office of President or Vice-President is issued, on or as soon as conveniently may be, after the sixtieth day before the expiration of the term of Office of the outgoing President or Vice-President and the dates are so appointed that the election is completed at such time as would enable the President or the Vice-President thereby elected to enter upon his Office on the day following the

In the election held on 16 August 1997, for which there were two contestants, Krishan Kant was elected as Vice-President on the same day. The term of Office of the Vice-President of India, Krishan Kant was to expire on 20 August 2002. However, he expired on 27 July 2002 and election was held to fill the vacancy for which Bhairon Singh Shekhawat and Sushil Kumar Shinde were two contestants. Bhairon Singh Shekhawat was elected as Vice President on 12 August 2002. The next election for the Office of Vice-President was held on 10 August 2007 for which Hamid Ansari, Dr. Najma Heptullah and Rashid Masood were the three contestants. Hamid Ansari was elected as Vice-President and assumed Office on 11 August 2007.

In the election held in August 2012, there were two contestants, Mohammad Hamid Ansari and Jaswant Singh. Mohammad Hamid Ansari was elected as Vice-President on 7 August 2012.

11. Till 12 November 1973, the Secretary-General of the Lok Sabha was designated as Secretary, Lok Sabha and Secretary-General of the Rajya Sabha as Secretary, Rajya Sabha.
12. The Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections Act, 1952, s. 3(1).

For the first, third, fifth and seventh Presidential elections, the Secretary of the Lok Sabha; for the ninth, eleventh and thirteenth elections, Secretary-General of the Lok Sabha; for the second and fourth elections, the Secretary of the Rajya Sabha; and for the sixth, eighth, tenth, twelfth and fourteenth elections, the Secretary-General of the Rajya Sabha was appointed as the Returning Officer.

For the first, second and fourth Vice-Presidential elections, the Secretary of the Lok Sabha; for the sixth, eighth, tenth, twelfth and fourteenth elections, the Secretary-General of the Lok Sabha; for the third and fifth Vice-Presidential elections, the Secretary of the Rajya Sabha; and for the seventh, ninth and thirteenth elections, the Secretary-General of Rajya Sabha was appointed as the Returning Officer. For the eleventh Vice-Presidential election, the Secretary, Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs, was appointed as the Returning Officer.

security along with the nomination paper. In 1997, the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections Act, 1952, was amended to provide:

- (a) that the nomination paper should be subscribed—
  - (i) in the case of Presidential election, by at least fifty electors as proposers and at least fifty electors as seconders<sup>16</sup>,
  - (ii) in the case of Vice-Presidential election, by at least twenty electors as proposers and at least twenty electors as seconders<sup>17</sup>.
- (b) that a candidate shall not be deemed to be duly nominated for election unless he deposits or causes to be deposited a sum of fifteen thousand rupees. However, a candidate nominated by more than one nomination paper has to make only one deposit<sup>18</sup>.

It has also been provided that no elector shall subscribe whether as proposer or seconder more than one nomination paper at the same election, and if he does so, his signature shall be inoperative on any paper other than the first delivered. Further, not more than four nomination papers on behalf of a candidate can be filed or accepted by the Returning Officer<sup>19</sup>.

Disputes Regarding Presidential Election

Under article 71, doubts and disputes arising out of, or in connection with, the election of President or Vice-President shall be inquired into and decided by the Supreme Court whose decision shall be final.

The Constitution (Thirty-ninth Amendment) Act, 1975, however, had amended article 71 empowering Parliament to constitute an authority or body for inquiring into and deciding doubts and disputes relating to the Presidential and Vice-Presidential elections and further provided that the decision of such authority or body should not be called in question by any Court. In pursuance of this Constitutional Amendment, an ordinance was promulgated on 3 February 1977, providing for the setting up of an authority to decide disputes relating to the Presidential and Vice-Presidential elections. This authority was to consist of nine members—three to be nominated by the Speaker of the Lok Sabha—one of whom was to be the Chief Justice or retired Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and another a person having knowledge of election law, three to be elected by the Lok Sabha and the remaining three to be elected by the Rajya Sabha. After the General Elections of March 1977, however, this Ordinance was allowed to lapse, as Government felt that it was not only appropriate, but also desirable, to restore the position obtaining prior to the Constitution (Thirty-ninth Amendment) Act, 1975. For this purpose, the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections (Amendment) Act, 1977 was passed by the Parliament specifying that the Supreme Court shall be the authority for the trial of disputes relating to Presidential and Vice-Presidential elections<sup>20</sup>.

A petition calling in question a Presidential election may be presented to the Supreme Court by any candidate at such election, or by twenty or more electors joined together as petitioners. Any such petition may be presented at any time after the date of publication of the declaration containing the name of the returned candidate at the election but not later than thirty days from the date of such publication<sup>21</sup>.

The grounds for declaring the election of a returned candidate to be void are:

- (a) the offence of bribery or undue influence<sup>22</sup> at the election committed by the returned candidate or by any person with the consent of the returned candidate;
- (b) the result of the election having been materially affected—
  - (i) by the improper reception or refusal of a vote; or
  - (ii) by any non-compliance with the provisions of the Constitution, or of the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections Act, 1952, or of any rules or orders made under the Act; or
  - (iii) by reason of the fact that the nomination of any candidate (other than the successful candidate), who has not withdrawn his candidature, has been wrongly accepted; or
- (c) the nomination of any candidate having been wrongly rejected or the nomination of the successful candidate having been wrongly accepted<sup>23</sup>.

The election of a person as President cannot be called in question on the ground of the existence of any vacancy for whatever reason among the members of the electoral college electing him<sup>24</sup>.

20. The word “election” includes the whole process of election from the preparations preceding the holding of election to announcement of result after the election is Peter Samuel Wallace v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1975 Delhi 112.

21. The Presidential and Vice-Presidential Election Act, 1952 (as amended in 1977), s. 14A.

22. The election of President R. Venkataraman to the Office of the President was challenged by the defeated candidate, Mithilesh Kumar, on the ground that Cong. (I) Party issued a whip to its members to vote for President R. Venkataraman, to influence the voters.

Rejecting the petition, the Supreme Court observed that the petitioner had failed to prove whether there was any allegation that the first respondent (R. Venkataraman) had himself committed any undue influence or any other person with the consent of the first respondent had committed such an act or any allegation which required to be tried—Mithilesh Kumar v. R. Venkataraman & Others, A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 2371.

23. The Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections Act, 1952 (as amended in 1977), s. 18.

24. Art. 71. The Legislative Assembly of Gujarat was dissolved by the Governor on 15 March 1974. A question, therefore, arose whether in the absence of the said Assembly an election to the Office of the President could be validly held or not. In a Presidential reference, the Supreme Court was of the view that the election to the Office of the President must be held before the expiration of the term of the President notwithstanding the fact that at the time of such election the Legislative Assembly of a State was dissolved (A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1682).

If any person who has lodged an election petition has, in addition to calling in question the election of the returned candidate, claimed a declaration that he himself or any other candidate has been duly elected and the Supreme Court is of the opinion that in fact the petitioner or such other candidate received a majority of the valid votes, the Supreme Court shall, after declaring the election of the returned candidate to be void, declare the petitioner or such other candidate to have been duly elected. But, the petitioner or such other candidate should not be declared to be duly elected, if it is proved that the election of such candidate would have been void if he had been the returned candidate and a petition had been presented calling in question his election<sup>25</sup>.

A letter addressed by the Prime Minister to all the electors to vote for a candidate belonging to her own party for the Office of the President was held not to constitute undue influence, so also a letter signed by the Chief Whip and addressed to all members of his own party in Parliament to come to Delhi and contact him for the Presidential and Vice-Presidential elections. Further, it was held that there was nothing improper in the members of the party being told in the course of canvassing that it would be better if they only marked their first preference and no other preference in a system where voting is by single transferable vote, because such a request or advice did not interfere with the free exercise of electoral right because the electors would still be free to do what they desire in spite of the advice<sup>26</sup>.

Nevertheless, the Prime Minister refused to issue a letter to the voters on the occasion of the election in 1969, when Dr. N. Sanjiva Reddy and Dr. V.V. Giri were the candidates.

Term of Office

The President or the Vice-President holds Office for a term of five years from the date on which he enters upon the Office<sup>27</sup>. The President may resign before the expiration of his term of Office, by writing under his hand addressed to the Vice-President. Any such resignation is forthwith to be communicated by him to the Speaker. The President may also be removed from Office before the expiry of his term by impeachment<sup>28</sup>.

The Vice-President may resign by writing under his hand addressed to the President, and can be removed from the Office by a resolution of the Rajya Sabha passed by a majority of all the then members of that House and agreed to by the Lok Sabha<sup>29</sup>.

28. Art. 56, proviso—for procedure regarding impeachment of the President, see Chapter III—President in Relation to Parliament.

29. Art. 67, proviso (a) and (b).

On the demise of the President Dr. Zakir Husain, the Vice-President Dr. V.V. Giri was acting as the President. V.V. Giri resigned from the Office of Vice-President and the resignation was addressed to the President. As advised by the Attorney-General, Giri did not state the Office that he was then holding under his signature and the resignation was deposited by him in the President's Secretariat. Copies of the letter of resignation were sent to the Prime Minister and the Chief Justice for information. The letter was also notified in the Gazette the same day<sup>30</sup>.

It was held that resignation in the case of the Vice-President was a process of demitting Office, that the Office of President continued to exist even when a person elected to that Office was not there, that the Constitution did not require the resignation to be accepted in order to make it effective, and that the law envisaged the possibility of the Vice-President resigning even when there was no President<sup>31</sup>.

Eligibility for Re-Election

The Constitution prescribes no legal limit to the number of terms, consecutive or otherwise, for which a person can be elected as President<sup>32</sup>.

Oath of Office

Before the President enters upon the Office, an oath of Office is administered to him in the Central Hall of the Parliament House or Rashtrapati Bhawan by the Chief Justice of India or in his absence, by the senior-most Judge of the Supreme Court available<sup>33</sup>. He makes and subscribes the oath or affirmation to "faithfully" execute the Office of the President and to "preserve, protect and defend the Constitution" to the best of his ability<sup>34</sup>. The Vice-President makes and subscribes before the President, or some person appointed in that behalf by him, an oath or affirmation to "bear true faith and allegiance to the Constitution" and "faithfully" discharge the duty<sup>35</sup>.

For becoming eligible to contest the election to the Office of President, a candidate does not have to take any oath or affirmation similar to the one taken by a candidate standing for election to Parliament<sup>36</sup>.

Election of Members to Lok Sabha

A general election is held for the purpose of constituting a new Lok Sabha on the expiration of the duration of the existing House or on its dissolution<sup>37</sup>.

Elections to the Lok Sabha are held on the basis of adult suffrage, that is to say, every person who is a citizen of India and who is not less than 18 years of age on such date as may be fixed in that behalf by or under any law made by the appropriate Legislature and is not otherwise disqualified under the Constitution or any law made by the appropriate Legislature on the ground of non-residence, unsoundness of mind, crime or corrupt or illegal practice, is entitled to be registered as a voter at any such election<sup>38</sup>. A person ordinarily resident in a constituency must be registered in the electoral rolls for that constituency before voting.

Parliament, from time to time, by law makes provision with respect to all matters relating to, or in connection with, elections to the Lok Sabha, including the preparation of electoral rolls, the delimitation of constituencies and all other matters necessary for securing the due constitution of the Lok Sabha<sup>39</sup>.

The Constitution (Sixty-second Amendment) Bill, 1988, providing for lowering the voting age from 21 to 18 years was passed by the Lok Sabha on 15 December 1988 and the Rajya Sabha on 20 December 1988. Having been ratified by States, the Bill was submitted for President's assent on 27 March 1989. It was assented to by the President on 28 March 1989 and became the Constitution (Sixty-first Amendment) Act, 1988.

39. Art. 327.

The following Acts have been enacted under this article:

The Representation of the People Act, 1950.

The Representation of the People Act, 1951.

The Delimitation Commission Act, 1952.

The Representation of the People (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1956.

The Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Act, 1959.

The Delimitation Act, 1972, since replaced by the Delimitation Act, 2002.

The following Rules have also been framed under the powers conferred by the relevant Act:

- (i) Registration of Electors Rules, 1960 (framed in pursuance of section 28 of The Representation of the People Act, 1950).
- (ii) Conduct of Elections Rules, 1961 (framed in pursuance of section 169 of The Representation of the People Act, 1951).

The Election Laws (Extension to Sikkim) Act, 1976. The following Rules have also been framed under the powers conferred by the relevant Act—

- (a) Application of Registration of Electors Rules, 1960 to the State of Sikkim.
- (b) Conduct of Parliamentary Elections (Sikkim) Rules, 1977.
- (c) Conduct of Assembly Elections (Sikkim) Rules, 1979.

A new Delimitation Commission was constituted under the Delimitation Act, 2002 (No. 33 of 2002) and the Delimitation Act, 1972 was repealed. The General Elections to the Fifteenth Lok Sabha were conducted as per the new parliamentary constituencies carved out in the States and Union Territories in terms of the notifications issued by the Delimitation Commission based on the census figures for the year 2001.

Before each general election to the Lok Sabha, the President may appoint after consultation with the Election Commission, such Regional Commissioners as he may consider necessary to assist the Election Commission in the performance of the functions conferred upon it<sup>40</sup>.

In each State, there is a Chief Electoral Officer, who, subject to the superintendence, direction and control of the Election Commission, supervises the preparation, revision and correction of all electoral rolls in the State<sup>41</sup>.

The electoral roll for each parliamentary constituency in the State of Jammu and Kashmir or in a Union territory not having a Legislative Assembly, each Assembly constituency and each Council constituency is prepared and revised by an Electoral Registration Officer<sup>42</sup>.

The electoral roll for every parliamentary constituency, other than a parliamentary constituency in the State of Jammu and Kashmir or in a Union territory not having a Legislative Assembly, consists of the electoral rolls of so much of the Assembly constituencies as are comprised within that parliamentary constituency<sup>43</sup>. For every Assembly constituency, an electoral roll is also prepared in accordance with the provisions of The Representation of the People Act, 1950, under the superintendence, directions, and control of the Election Commission<sup>44</sup>.

A person is qualified to be chosen to fill a seat in the Lok Sabha if he:

- (a) is a citizen of India, and makes and subscribes before some person, authorised in that behalf by the Election Commission, an oath or affirmation according to the form set out for the purpose in the Third Schedule to the Constitution;
- (b) is not less than twenty-five years of age; and
- (c) possesses such other qualifications as may be prescribed in that behalf by or under any law made by Parliament<sup>45</sup>.

In the case of a seat reserved for the Scheduled Castes in any State, a candidate for election to the Lok Sabha should belong to any of the Scheduled Castes, whether of that State or of any other State and should be an elector for any parliamentary

In the case of seat reserved for the Scheduled Tribes in the autonomous districts of Assam, the candidate should belong to any of those Scheduled Tribes and should be an elector for the parliamentary constituency in which such seat is reserved or for any other parliamentary constituency comprising any such autonomous district<sup>48</sup>.

In the case of seat reserved for the Scheduled Tribes in the Union territory of Lakshadweep, the candidate should belong to any of those Scheduled Tribes and should be an elector for the parliamentary constituency of that Union territory<sup>49</sup>.

In the case of seat allotted to the State of Sikkim, the candidate should be an elector for the parliamentary constituency for Sikkim<sup>50</sup>.

In the case of any other seat, the candidate should be an elector for any parliamentary constituency<sup>51</sup>.

Disqualifications for Membership

A person is disqualified for being chosen as, and for being, a member of either House of Parliament<sup>52</sup>:

- (a) if he holds any office of profit under the Government of India or the Government of any State other than an office declared by Parliament by law not to disqualify its holder<sup>53</sup>;
- (b) if he is of unsound mind and stands so declared by a competent Court;
- (c) if he is an undischarged insolvent;
- (d) if he is not a citizen of India, or has voluntarily acquired the citizenship of a foreign State, or is under any acknowledgement of allegiance or adherence to a foreign State;

- (e) if he is so disqualified by or under any law made by Parliament; and
- (f) a person shall be disqualified for being a member of either House of Parliament if he is so disqualified under the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution<sup>54</sup>.

Besides the above constitutional requirements, the election law lays down certain further disqualifications<sup>55</sup>. Broadly, these are as under:

- (i) A person convicted of certain offences, or found guilty of a corrupt practice by an order under the relevant provisions of the election law, is disqualified by the President if he so decides for a period as determined by him but not exceeding six years from the date of such conviction or from the date on which the order takes effect<sup>56</sup>.
- (ii) A person who has failed to lodge an account of election expenses within the time and in the manner required and has no good reason or justification for such failure, is disqualified for a period of three years, under an order of the Election Commission.
- (iii) A person convicted for any offence and sentenced to imprisonment for not less than two years is disqualified from the date of such conviction and will continue to be disqualified for a further period of six years since his release.

A person convicted for contravention of any law providing for the prevention of hoarding or profiteering or of adulteration of food or drugs or any provision of the Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961, or any provision of the Commission of Sati (Prevention) Act, 1987 and sentenced to imprisonment for not less than six months is disqualified from the date of such conviction and will be continued to be so disqualified for six years since his release.

- (iv) A person dismissed from an office under the Government of India or under the Government of any State for corruption or for disloyalty is disqualified for a period of five years from the date of such dismissal.
- (v) A person who has in the course of his trade or business entered into a contract with the Union Government for the supply of goods to, or for the execution of any works undertaken by that Government, is disqualified so long as that contract subsists.
- (vi) A person who is a managing agent, manager or secretary of any company or corporation (other than a co-operative society) in the capital of which the Union Government has not less than twenty-five per cent share is disqualified so long as he is holding that office.

If any question arises whether a member of either House of Parliament has become subject to any of the disqualifications specified in the Constitution, as also the question whether a person found guilty of a corrupt practice at an election to a House of Parliament under any law made by Parliament is to be disqualified for being chosen as, and for being, a member of either House of Parliament, including the question as to the period of disqualification or as to removal or the reduction of the period of such disqualification, the question is referred for the decision of the President whose decision is final in the matter. However, before giving the decision on such a question, the President is required to obtain the opinion of the Election Commission which may, for this purpose, make such enquiry as it thinks fit<sup>57</sup>.

If a question whether a member has, or has not, become subject to a disqualification properly arises under article 103 and on the representation of any person the question is referred by the President to the Election Commission for its opinion, the fact that the person who raised the question and made the representation to the President does not wish to proceed with the matter and asks for permission to withdraw the petition, is not a sufficient ground for the Election Commission to desist from giving its opinion on the reference<sup>58</sup>.

Disqualification for Membership on Ground of Defection<sup>59</sup>

The Constitution (Fifty-second Amendment) Act, 1985, which came into force with effect from 1 March 1985, amended articles 101, 102, 190 and 191 of the Constitution regarding vacation of seats and disqualification for membership of Parliament and the State Legislatures and added a new Schedule (Tenth Schedule) to the Constitution setting out certain provisions as to disqualification on ground of defection. The Tenth Schedule provides inter alia that a member is disqualified for being a member of the House:

- (i) if he voluntarily gives up his membership of such political party<sup>60</sup>; or
- (ii) if he votes or abstains from voting in such House contrary to any direction issued by the political party to which he belongs or by any person or authority authorised by it in this behalf, without obtaining, in either case, the prior permission of such political party, person or authority and such voting or abstention has not been condoned by such political party, person or authority within fifteen days from the date of such voting or abstention<sup>61</sup>; or
- (iii) if an elected member of a House who has been elected as such otherwise than as a candidate set up by any political party, joins any political party after such election<sup>62</sup>; or

60. Tenth Schedule, para 2(1)(a).

61. Ibid., para 2(1)(b).

62. Ibid., para 2(2).

- (iv) if a nominated member of a House joins any political party after the expiry of six months from the date on which he takes his seat after complying with the requirements of article 99 or, as the case may be, article 188.<sup>63</sup>

The Tenth Schedule, as enacted, contained a provision relating to split in political parties and provided that where a member of a House makes a claim that he and any other members of his legislature party constitute the group representing a faction which has arisen as a result of a split in his original political party and such group consists of not less than one-third of the members of such legislature party, he does not incur disqualification<sup>64</sup>. This provision was, however, subsequently omitted through a Constitution Amendment Act<sup>65</sup>. A member of a House is also not disqualified where his original political party merges with another political party and he claims that he and any other members of his original political party, have become members of such other political party or, as the case may be, of a new political party formed by such merger to which not less than two-thirds of the members of the legislature party concerned have agreed<sup>66</sup>.

A person who has been elected to the office of the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker of the House of the People or the Deputy Chairman of the Council of States or the Chairman or the Deputy Chairman of the Legislative Council of a State or the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of a State is not disqualified, if he, by reason of his election to such office, voluntarily gives up the membership of the political party to which he belonged immediately before such election and does not, so long as he continues to hold such office thereafter, rejoin such political party or become a member of another political party, or if he, having given up by reason of his election to such office his membership of the political party to which he belonged immediately before such election, rejoins such political party after he ceases to hold such office<sup>67</sup>.

If any question arises as to whether a member of a House has become subject to disqualification, the question shall be referred to the Chairman or, as the case may be, the Speaker of such House and his decision shall be final. Where the question is as to whether the Chairman or the Speaker has become subject to disqualification, the question shall be referred for the decision of such member of the House as the House may elect in this behalf and his decision shall be final<sup>68</sup>. Courts are barred from exercising jurisdiction in respect of a House under the Tenth Schedule<sup>69</sup>.

67. Ibid., para 5.

68. Ibid., para 6(1).

69. Ibid., para 7.

The Members of Lok Sabha (Disqualification on Ground of Defection) Rules, 1985<sup>70</sup>, framed by the Speaker under para 8(1) of the Tenth Schedule provide that, in order to determine any question of disqualification, the leader of each legislature party—other than a legislature party consisting of only one member—is required to furnish within the prescribed period a statement containing the names of members of such legislature party together with other required particulars. Every member of a House is also required to furnish to the Speaker the required particulars in the prescribed form<sup>71</sup>. A summary of the information furnished by the members is required to be published in the Lok Sabha Bulletin-Part II and if any discrepancy therein is pointed out to the satisfaction of the Speaker, necessary corrigendum is to be issued in the Bulletin<sup>72</sup>.

No reference of any question as to whether a member has become subject to disqualification under the Tenth Schedule can be made except by a petition in relation to such member. Every such petition is required to be verified in the manner laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 for the verification of pleadings<sup>73</sup>.

A petition in relation to a member is required to be made in writing to the Speaker by another member whereas in relation to the Speaker, it is to be addressed to the Secretary-General<sup>74</sup>. However, Supreme Court vide their decision dated 17 January 2013 have inter alia observed that, “not only a Member of the House, but any person interested, would also be entitled to bring to the notice of the Speaker the fact that a Member of the House had incurred disqualification under the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution of India<sup>75</sup>.”

A petition along with annexures thereto alleging incurring of disqualification by any member is to be forwarded to the member in relation to whom the petition is made and where such member belongs to any legislature party and such petition is not made by the leader thereof, also to such leader, for his comments. After considering the comments received, the Speaker may either decide the question by himself<sup>76</sup>, or refer it to the Committee of Privileges for making a preliminary inquiry and submitting

- (i) On 24 November 1988, Speaker (Dr. Bal Ram Jakhar) referred a petition for disqualification submitted by a member (Ram Pyare Panika) against Lalduhoma, M.P. to the Committee of Privileges. The Committee submitted its Report to the Speaker. After hearing Lalduhoma, the Speaker declared him disqualified from the membership of the Lok Sabha. L.S. Deb., 24-11-1988.

- (ii) On 11 January 1991, the Speaker (Rabi Ray) gave his decision under the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution in respect of claim for split in Janata Dal and petitions for disqualification against some members of Janata Dal. Eight members of Janata Dal, viz. Basavraj Patil, Hemendra Singh Banera, Vidya Charan Shukla, Sarwar Hussain, Bhagey Gobardhan, Devananda Amat, Dr. Bengali Singh and Dr. Shakeelur Rehman were declared disqualified from the membership of the Lok Sabha and Janata Dal (S), a faction formed as a result of split in Janata Dal, was recognised. L.S., Bn. Pt. (II), 14-1-1991, para 1050.
  - (iii) On 1 June 1993, Speaker (Shivraj V. Patil) gave his decision under the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution in respect of claim for split in Janata Dal and petition for disqualification against some members of Janata Dal. Four members of Janata Dal, viz. Ram Sunder Dass, Govinda Chandra Munda, Gulam Mohammed Khan and Rambadan were disqualified from the membership of the Lok Sabha and consequently, a separate group, viz. Janata Dal (A) came into being. L.S., Bn. Pt. (II), 1-6-1993, para 2125.

The disqualified members, however, obtained a stay on the Speaker's order from the High Court of Delhi and consequently continued to be the members of the Tenth Lok Sabha.

The matters arising out of the document handed over by Ajit Singh and others to the Speaker on 7 August 1992 and petitions for disqualification against all the twenty members were heard together by the Speaker, for a decision under the Tenth Schedule and the case came to be popularly known as the 'Janata Dal Case'. Parties to the case were allowed to plead their cases themselves as well as through their counsels. Broadly, the Code of Civil Procedure was followed in conducting the proceedings. Proceedings were allowed to be watched and reported by the Press and the Media. Hearings by the Speaker in the case commenced on 19 August 1992, and in all, twenty-one hearings were held.

At the outset, issues arising in the case were framed. Documentary and oral evidence was adduced and produced by the parties. Counsels for parties advanced detailed arguments. The entire proceedings of the case were recorded verbatim and also tape-recorded. Leaders of political parties in the Lok Sabha were allowed to put forth their views on legal points. L.S. Bn. Pt. (II), 1-6-1993, para, 2125.

The disqualified members, however, obtained a stay on the Speaker's order from the High Court of Delhi and consequently continued to be the members of the Tenth Lok Sabha.

- (iv) On 9 March 2007, Speaker (Somnath Chatterjee) referred three petitions for disqualification submitted by a member (Rajesh Verma) against Mohammad Shahid Akhlaque, Ramakant Yadav and Bhalchandra Yadav) to the Committee of Privileges.

The Committee submitted their Report to the Speaker on 12 November 2007. After hearing the petitioner (Rajesh Verma) and the three respondents (Mohammad Shahid Akhlaque, Ramakant Yadav and Bhalchandra Yadav) from 10 to 13 December 2007 the Speaker, declared them disqualified from the membership of Lok Sabha vide his three separate decisions dated 27 January 2008. L.S. Bn. (II) dated 28-01-2008, paras, 4424-26.

- (v) On 9 March 2008, Speaker (Somnath Chatterjee) referred petition for disqualification submitted by a member (Avtar Singh Bhadana) against another member (Kuldeep Bishnoi) to the Committee of Privileges. After the Committee submitted their Report to the Speaker on 20 August 2008, he held a personal hearing in the matter on 2 September 2008, which was attended by Avtar Singh Bhadana while Kuldeep Bishnoi was not present. The Speaker, thereafter, gave his decision disqualifying respondent Bishnoi, from the membership of Lok Sabha vide order dated 10 September 2008. L.S. Bn. (II) dated 12-09-2008, para 6010.
- (vi) On 9 and 20 July 2008 the Speaker (Somnath Chatterjee) held a personal hearing with regard to the petition submitted by a member (Prof. Ram Gopal Yadav) against another member (Jai Prakash). While the petitioner attended the hearing, the respondent was not present. The Speaker, thereafter, gave his decision disqualifying respondent (Jai Prakash) from membership of Lok Sabha vide his order dated 11 September 2008. L.S. Bn. (II) dated 12-09-2008 para 6011.

During the Fourteenth Lok Sabha, when four cases under Rule 7(4) of the Members of Lok Sabha (Disqualification on Ground of Defection) Rules, 1985 were referred to the Committee of Privileges by the Speaker, Lok Sabha, the Committee took a view that in such matters, the Committee are required only to give their finds on the facts of the case and it isn't the Committee's remit to decide questions of law and arrive at conclusions on the merits of the case and make recommendations as that was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Speaker under the scheme of the Tenth Schedule<sup>79</sup>.

The Chairman or the Speaker of a House has also been empowered by the Tenth Schedule to deal with any wilful contravention by any person of the Rules in the same manner as a breach of privilege of the House<sup>80</sup>.

During the Fifteenth Lok Sabha, there have been instances when the petitioners withdrew their petitions. There is an instance when the petitioner after having given his petition and before the personal hearings were to be held in the matter, requested the Speaker for permission to withdraw the petition. The Speaker acceded to his request and the petition was treated as withdrawn.<sup>81</sup> In yet another instance, three petitions were allowed to be withdrawn after the matters were referred to the Committee of Privileges for examination and report<sup>82</sup>.

Tenth Schedule to the Constitution — An Appraisal

In the more than three decade-long operation of the Anti-Defection Law, various deficiencies and inconsistencies in the law came up for judicial scrutiny. Various provisions of the Tenth Schedule were challenged in different High Courts as being illegal and unconstitutional. Petitions were also filed in High Courts, from time to time against decisions taken by the Presiding Officers of different Legislatures under the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution. All such petitions were transferred by the Supreme Court to itself on the request of the Government of India, as important questions of law and interpretation of the Constitution were involved.

The Supreme Court, while admitting one of such transfer petitions, in their judgement delivered on 11 November 1991, (in their majority opinion), upheld the legality and constitutionality of all other provisions of the Tenth Schedule except paragraph 7 thereof. The apex Court held that paragraph 7 is ultra vires the Constitution and also held that in view of that provision which brings about a change in the operation and effect of articles 136, 226 and 227 of the Constitution, the relevant Bill should have been ratified by State Legislatures. However, applying the doctrine of severability, the law was declared valid without paragraph 7. The detailed judgement was given by the Court on 18 February 1992<sup>83</sup>.

Following the Judgement of the Supreme Court, the Presiding Officers at various fora, discussed the implications arising from such decision by the apex court. There was a general consensus among them that the Anti-Defection Law needs to be amended and the judgement given by the Supreme Court should be respected until the law is amended.

The trend of coalition Governments at the Centre and in many States has brought to the fore the lacunae in the Anti-Defection Law. On various fora, the finer points of the Law, particularly those relating to splits and mergers in political parties, came up for in-depth deliberations. In the Eleventh Lok Sabha, the Committee of Privileges, following a study on parliamentary privileges, rights and obligations of members by its Study Group, presented a Report on 'Ethics, Standards in Public Life, Privileges, Facilities to Members and other Related Matters to the Speaker on 27 November 1997. Among other things, the Anti-Defection Law was also dwelt upon in this Report. The Committee took a considered view that the lacunae in the Law had been largely responsible for varied interpretations of various provisions of the Law at the hands of Presiding Officers, which had led to criticism and a demand for review of the Anti-Defection Law itself. It was felt that the most contentious provisions in the Law are those relating to splits<sup>84</sup> and mergers. One of the main areas of criticism has been that while individual defections are punished, collective defections are condoned in the name of splits. Some other issues, viz. (a) time from which a split becomes operative; (b) effecting a split for facilitating mergers; and (c) absence of provision of certain eventualities such as expulsions of members from political parties, etc. were also taken note of. The Committee of Privileges recommended in their Report that the Anti-Defection Law as it stands at present may be discussed threadbare by the Presiding Officers of the Legislative Bodies in India and that the Government should take concrete measures for suitably amending the Law. While the provision relating to splits has since been omitted from the Tenth Schedule, other areas of concern are yet to be addressed.

By and large, the dominant view at present is that the Anti-Defection Law needs to be amended so as to leave no scope for any ambiguity.

The Supreme Court in their judgement delivered on 17 January 2013 in the Speaker, Orissa Legislative Assembly v. Utkal Keshari Parida (Civil) Appeal No. 469 of 2013 case dealt with in detail the question of maintainability of a disqualification petition filed by a person other than a member. The Court was of the view that provisions of the rules barring a nonmember from filing a disqualification petition was neither contemplated nor provided for in the Tenth Schedule. In the Court's view the statement of objects and reasons of the Bill, which finally became the Constitution (52nd Amendment) Bill, 1985 whereby the Tenth Schedule was added to the Constitution with effect from 1 March 1985, inter alia, indicated that the evil of political defection had become a matter of national concern and it was not checked, it would very well undermine the very foundation of our democracy and the principles which sustain the same. In such event, if the provisions of the Tenth Schedule are interpreted to exclude the right of any person interested to bring to the notice of the Speaker of the House the fact that any or some of its members had incurred disqualification from the membership of the House or any of the eventualities indicated in paragraphs 2 and 4 therein, it would render the inclusion of the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution otiose and defeat the objects and intent of the Fifty-second Amendment of the Constitution. The Court concluded that not only a member of the House, but any person interested, would also be entitled to bring to the notice of the Speaker the fact that a member of the House had incurred disqualification under the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution of India.

Mode of Election

When a general election falls due, the President, by one or more notifications in the Gazette, on such dates as may be recommended by the Election Commission, calls upon all parliamentary constituencies to elect members to the Lok Sabha in accordance with the provisions of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, and of rules and orders made thereunder. When a general election is held otherwise than on the dissolution of the existing Lok Sabha, no such notification is issued at any time earlier than six months prior to the date on which the duration of the Lok Sabha would expire under article 83(2)<sup>85</sup>.

As soon as the notification is issued, the Election Commission appoints the dates for filing nominations, for scrutiny, withdrawal of candidatures and the date or dates on which a poll, if necessary, shall be taken. The date by which a particular election shall be completed is also decided. This is followed by a public notice of the intended election by the Returning Officers for the respective constituencies<sup>86</sup>.

In a constituency where there is a reserved seat, a candidate is not deemed qualified to fill that seat unless he declares in his nomination paper the particular caste or tribe of which he is a member and the area in relation to which that caste or tribe is a Scheduled Caste/Scheduled Tribe of the State<sup>87</sup>.

A candidate for election has to make and subscribe an oath or affirmation bearing true faith and allegiance to the Constitution as by law established and undertaking to uphold the sovereignty and integrity of the country.

It is necessary for a candidate to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation after he has been nominated but before the date fixed for scrutiny of nomination papers. The candidate who has failed to do so along with the nomination paper or till the date of the scrutiny becomes disqualified to be chosen<sup>88</sup>.

87. Ibid., s. 33.

88. Pashupati Nath Singh v. Harihar Prasad Singh, A.I.R. 1968, S.C. 1064.

Once such an oath or affirmation is made before a competent authority in respect of one constituency, the candidate becomes bound by that oath or affirmation even if he gets elected from a different constituency. It is not necessary that he must make and subscribe the oath or affirmation repeatedly on his being nominated from more than one constituency<sup>89</sup>.

A mere misprint in the form of the oath or a mere inaccuracy in rendering an expression (in this case “Legislative Assembly”) in a regional language (in this case Gujarati) would not be fatal to the election of a candidate, if otherwise valid<sup>90</sup>.

A candidate for election is required to deposit a sum of ten thousand rupees to make his nomination valid; the candidate belonging to Scheduled Caste/Scheduled Tribe is required to deposit five thousand rupees only<sup>91</sup>.

The Returning Officer examines the nomination papers and decides on their validity or otherwise. He may reject any nomination paper which, in his opinion, does not meet the requirements of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, or the rules framed thereunder. He does not reject a nomination if any defect is of an insubstantial character. As soon as the period within which candidatures may be withdrawn expires, the Returning Officer prepares and publishes a list of validly nominated candidates<sup>92</sup>. A candidate for an election is entitled to appoint an election agent to perform such functions as are authorised by or under the Representation of the People Act, 1951<sup>93</sup>.

In the event of death of a contesting candidate set up by a recognised political party before the commencement of the poll, the Returning Officer announces an adjournment of the poll to a date to be notified later and reports the fact to the Election Commission and also to the appropriate authority. The Election Commission shall, on the receipt of a report from the Returning Officer, call upon the recognised political party, whose candidate has died, to nominate another candidate for the said poll within seven days of issue of such notice to such recognised political party. Where a list of contesting candidates had been published before the adjournment of the poll, the Returning Officer shall again prepare and publish a fresh list of contesting candidates so as to include the name of the candidate who has been validly nominated by the party<sup>94</sup>.

The total time allotted on any one day for polling at an election in a parliamentary constituency is not less than eight hours. Sufficient number of polling stations are set up in each constituency and the voters are required to go in person to their respective polling stations to cast their votes. No proxy is allowed. Special voters, service voters, voters on election duty and electors subject to preventive detention are the only persons entitled to vote by post<sup>95</sup>.

After counting of votes has been completed, the Returning Officer declares the result of the election and reports the same to the appropriate authorities, the Election Commission and the Lok Sabha Secretariat. The date on which the Returning Officer declares a candidate elected is deemed to be the date of election of that candidate. The Returning Officer issues a certificate of election to the elected candidate and obtains an acknowledgement of its receipt duly signed by him. This is sent later to the Secretary-General, Lok Sabha. The newly elected member is required to show his election certificate to the Officer of the House before making and subscribing oath or affirmation<sup>96</sup>.

Election of Members to Rajya Sabha

The qualifications for membership of the two Houses of Parliament are similar<sup>97</sup> except that in the case of a seat in the Rajya Sabha:

- (a) a person qualified to be chosen to fill a seat must not be less than thirty years of age; and
- (b) a person qualified to be chosen as a representative of any State (other than the State of Jammu and Kashmir) or Union territory must be an elector for a parliamentary constituency in that State or territory.

The representatives of each State and of the Union territories in the Rajya Sabha are elected by the elected members of the Legislative Assembly of the State and by members of the electoral college for that territory, as the case may be, in accordance with the system of proportional representation by means of single transferable vote<sup>98</sup>.

The electoral college for the Union territory of Delhi consists of the elected members of the Legislative Assembly constituted for that territory under the Government of National Capital Territory of Delhi Act, 1991<sup>99</sup>.

The electoral college for the Union territory of Pondicherry (now Puducherry) consists of the elected members of the Legislative<sup>100</sup> Assembly constituted for that territory under the Government of Union Territories Act, 1963<sup>101</sup>.

The Union territories of Andaman and Nicobar Islands, Lakshadweep, Dadra and Nagar Haveli, Daman and Diu and Chandigarh do not have any representatives in the Rajya Sabha.

If a person, who is a member of an electoral college, becomes subject to any disqualification for membership of Parliament under the provisions of any law relating to corrupt and illegal practices and other offences in connection with elections to Parliament, he ceases thereupon to be member of the electoral college<sup>102</sup>.

No election by the members of an electoral college under the Representation of the People Act, 1950, can be called in question on the ground merely of the existence of any vacancy in the membership of such college<sup>103</sup>.

For the purpose of filling the seats of members of the Rajya Sabha retiring on the expiration of their term of office, the President, by one or more notifications published in the Gazette on such date or dates as may be recommended by the Election Commission, calls upon the elected members of the Legislative Assembly or, as the case may be, the members of the electoral college of the State concerned to elect members of the Rajya Sabha in accordance with the provisions of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, and of the rules and orders made thereunder. No such notification is issued more than three months prior to the date on which the term of office of the retiring members is due to expire<sup>104</sup>.

Broadly, the administrative machinery and procedure for the conduct of elections to the Rajya Sabha and the Lok Sabha are the same. However, in the case of an election to fill a seat or seats in the Rajya Sabha, the Returning Officer<sup>105</sup> fixes, with the previous approval of the Election Commission, the place at which the poll is to be taken for such election and notifies the place so fixed in such manner as the Election Commission may direct. The Returning Officer also presides over such election at the place so fixed and appoints such polling officer or officers to assist him as he thinks necessary but he cannot appoint any person who has been employed by or on behalf of, or has been otherwise working for, a candidate in or about the election<sup>106</sup>.

Disputes Regarding Elections

An election can be called in question by an election petition presented on one or more of the grounds specified in the election law<sup>107</sup> by any candidate at such election or any elector, within forty-five days from the date of the election of the returned candidate:

A returned candidate cannot get rid of an election petition against him by resigning his seat in the Legislature, whatever the reason for his resignation may be<sup>108</sup>.

An election petition may be withdrawn only by leave of the High Court. There is nothing which fetters the judicial discretion of the Court to disallow such an application if the circumstances so warrant. In this connection, the Punjab and Haryana High Court has observed:

It is neither proper nor feasible to make an attempt to lay down categories of cases in which leave should be refused or given by the Court. Each case has to be dealt with according to its own peculiar circumstances. However, one general rule of guidance in all such cases where judicial discretion is to be exercised, is to see whether the application for withdrawal is made bona fide or whether it is merely a garb for escaping the consequences which would otherwise result<sup>109</sup>.

An election was challenged on the ground of certain corrupt practices and the gravamen of the charge was that some discretionary funds were placed at the disposal of the returned candidate who was a Minister in Haryana till the result of the election, and he used this position to favour some villages with a view to securing support for his candidature. While it was held that there was no evidence to prove that the returned candidate had bargained directly or indirectly for votes, the Supreme Court made the following observations:

Election is something which must be conducted fairly. To arrange to spend money on the eve of elections in different constituencies, although for general public good, is, when all is said and done, an evil practice, even if it may not be corrupt practice. The dividing line between an evil practice and a corrupt practice is a very thin one. It should be understood that energy to do public good should be used not on the eve of elections but much earlier and that even slight evidence might change this evil practice into corrupt practice. Payments from discretionary grants on the eve of elections should be avoided<sup>110</sup>.

111. See arts. 101 and 102.

112. Art. 102 (1)(a). This was amended by the Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976. The amended provision has not, however, come into force.

113. See. R.P. Act, 1951, s. 69.

Four members of the First Lok Sabha ceased to be members of that House on their election to the Rajya Sabha in 1956. Fifteen members of the Rajya Sabha ceased to be members of that House on their election to the Second Lok Sabha in 1957. In 1962, fifteen members of the Rajya Sabha ceased to be members of that House on their election to the Third Lok Sabha, and thirteen members of the Second Lok Sabha ceased to be members of that House on their election to the Rajya Sabha. Eleven members of the Rajya Sabha ceased to be members of that House on their election to the Sixth Lok Sabha in March 1977. Ten members of the Rajya Sabha ceased to be members of that House on their election to the Seventh Lok Sabha in January 1980. Nine members of the Rajya Sabha ceased to be members of that House on their election to the Eighth Lok Sabha in December 1984. Twelve members of the Rajya Sabha ceased to be members of that House on their election to the Ninth Lok Sabha in November, 1989. Two members of the Rajya Sabha ceased to be members of that House on their election to the Tenth Lok Sabha in June 1991. Again, four members of the Rajya Sabha ceased to be members of that House on their election to the Eleventh Lok Sabha in May 1996. Four Members of Fourteenth Lok Sabha ceased to be members of that House on their election to the Rajya Sabha in June 2004, November 2008 and March 2009 respectively. Three members of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha ceased to be members of that House on their election to the Rajya Sabha during January-February 2014.

114. The letter of resignation of a seat in the State Legislature must be addressed to the Presiding Officer of that House and not to any other authority.

During the Third General Elections held in 1962, 12 sitting members of the Lok Sabha were elected to State Legislatures. Eleven of them resigned their seats in the Lok Sabha before the expiry of the period of 14 days. The declaration regarding election of one member to the Andhra Pradesh Legislative Assembly was published in the State Gazette on 3 March 1962. Since he had not resigned his seat, he ceased to be a member of the Lok Sabha with effect from 18 March 1962. In 1967, the Lok Sabha seat of a member was declared vacant w.e.f. 25 February 1967 as he had not resigned his seat in the Assam Legislative Assembly of which he was a member at the time of his election. Similarly, the Lok Sabha seat of a member was declared vacant w.e.f. 13 May 1967 as declaration about his election to the Madras Legislative Council was published

- (4) If his election is declared void by the High Court<sup>115</sup>; or

The order of the High Court takes effect as soon as it is pronounced by the Court<sup>116</sup> Where the operation of an order is stayed by the High Court or, as the case may be, the Supreme Court, the order is deemed never to have taken effect<sup>117</sup>. Where the operation of the order is stayed until the disposal of the appeal and appeal is dismissed by the Supreme Court, the appellant ceases to be a member of the House not from the date of original order but from the date of the decision of the Supreme Court.

In one case, the election of a member had been declared void by the High Court and, on an application for stay order, the Supreme Court allowed the member to attend the House only for the days necessary to keep his seat alive; pending the disposal of his appeal by the said Court, he continued to be a member of the House subject to restrictions expressly mentioned in the order of the Supreme Court<sup>118</sup>.

in the State Gazette on 28 April 1967 and he had not resigned his Lok Sabha seat. The declaration regarding election of a member to the Haryana Legislative Assembly was notified in the State Gazette on 25 November 1986.

On 1 December 1986 the member wrote to Speaker that his seat in the Lok Sabha be declared vacant on the expiry of 14 days in terms of rule 2 of the Prohibition of Simultaneous Membership Rules, 1950. Accordingly, his seat was declared vacant w.e.f. 10 December 1986. No notification was issued. Election Commission was informed through a letter. Circular and para in Bulletin was issued. See also Prohibition of Simultaneous Membership Rules, 1950, rule 2.

During the Eleventh General Elections held in March 1998. One sitting member of the Lok Sabha was elected to Punjab Legislative Assembly. He did not take oath as member of Lok Sabha and retained the Assembly seat. Thereafter, his seat in Lok Sabha was declared vacant w.e.f. 24 March 1998 under Rule 2 of the Prohibition of Simultaneous Membership Rules, 1950. The declaration regarding election of one member to the Chhattisgarh Legislative Assembly was published in the State Gazette on 11 December 2008. Since he had not resigned his seat, he ceased to be a member of the Fourteenth Lok Sabha with effect from 26 December 2009.

117. Ibid., s. 116B(3).

118. Election of Dr. Y.S. Parmar to the Second Lok Sabha was declared void by the Election Tribunal and the order of the Tribunal was upheld by the Judicial Commissioner, Himachal Pradesh. Dr. Parmar then moved the Supreme Court for special leave to appeal and also filed an application for stay order. The Supreme Court on the application for stay inter alia passed the order that pending the hearing and final disposal of the appeal by them, Dr. Parmar shall not sit as a member in the Lok Sabha excepting for the days necessary to keep his seat alive and that he would not draw any remuneration as a member thereof. The interpretation given by the Ministry of Law to the above order was that Dr. Parmar continued to be a member subject to the restrictions expressly mentioned in the order as to attendance and remuneration; that he would not attend the House on any day except at intervals of 60 days; that he could exercise all the functions of a member on the days on which he attended and that he was entitled to all facilities and concessions due to a member except salary and allowances. On 17 October 1958, the Supreme Court, however, dismissed the appeal of Dr. Parmar and he ceased to be a member of the House with effect from that date.

The Election of Sitaram J. Gavali to the Eighth Lok Sabha from Dadra & Nagar Haveli was declared void by Bombay High Court on 2 April 1985. On an application by Gavali, High Court stayed operation of its order for thirty days on an undertaking by Gavali that he shall not participate in the proceedings of the House or vote in the Lok Sabha and that he shall attend the Lok Sabha

- (5) if he has been: (i) convicted or found guilty of an offence punishable with imprisonment under section 153A or section 171E or section 171F or section 505(2) and (3) of the Indian Penal Code; (ii) found guilty of an electoral offence mentioned in section 125 or section 135 or section 136 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951; (iii) has incurred any other disqualification mentioned in Part II, Chapter III of the said Act; or only to record his presence. On his appeal in Supreme Court, the Supreme Court vide its order dt. 26 April 1985, continued operation of stay granted by High Court with the same restrictions till further orders. Accordingly, the summons for 3rd to 8th Sessions of Eighth Lok Sabha were not issued to Gavali; he was, however, informed through letters at both addresses about the commencement and duration of sessions. The Apex Court in its final judgement on 25 March 1987 allowed appeal filed by Gavali and set aside the judgement of Bombay High Court. Gavali continued to be a member of the Eighth Lok Sabha without any break. Necessary information was published in Bn. (II), etc. Copies of judgement were placed in the Parliament Library.

The Election of Moreswar Save to the Tenth Lok Sabha from the Aurangabad constituency of Maharashtra was declared void by the High Court of Bombay on 16 April 1992. The Court had granted the stay of eight weeks, subject to paying cost within 2 days of the order. On his appeal, the Supreme Court, vide its order dated 11 July 1992, allowed Save to attend the sessions of the Lok Sabha and to sign the attendance register of Members, but he was not entitled to receive any emoluments during the pendency of that appeal nor permitted to exercise any right of voting. Accordingly, summons for the Fourth to Fifteenth Sessions of the Tenth Lok Sabha were not issued to Save. He was, however, informed through letters at his permanent and Delhi addresses about the commencement and duration of sessions. Subsequently, the Supreme Court vide its final judgement of 11 December 1995 allowed the appeal filed by Save setting aside the Bombay High Court's judgement dated 16 April 1992. Save continued to be a member of the Tenth Lok Sabha without any break. Necessary information in this regard was published in the L.S. Bn. (II), etc. Copies of the judgement were placed in the Parliament Library.

Yashwantrao Patil was elected to the Tenth Lok Sabha from the Ahmednagar parliamentary constituency of Maharashtra during the General Elections held during May-June 1991. In an election petition, the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, Aurangabad Bench, in its order dated 30 March 1993, declared the election of Patil to the Lok Sabha void on the ground of corrupt practices u/s 123(4) of the RP Act, 1951, and pronounced Balasaheb Vikhe Patil as duly elected. The High Court, further u/s 99 of RP Act, named another member, Sharad Pawar for commission of corrupt practice. The Court, however, granted a stay on the operation of its order for six weeks. Subsequently, the Supreme Court, in its order dated 10 May 1993, admitting an appeal by Pawar, imposed restriction on member's right to vote and participate in proceedings of the House and to draw emoluments. Further proceedings under section 8A of RP Act were stayed. Again, the Supreme Court in its order dated 14 May 1993 admitting another appeal by Yashwantrao Patil, continued the operation of the stay granted by the High Court and imposed restrictions on the member's right to participate in proceedings of the Lok Sabha, vote and draw emoluments until further orders. Both the members were, however, permitted by the Court to sign attendance register to avoid disqualification. Pawar, consequent upon his election to the Maharashtra Legislative Council, resigned from the membership of the House w.e.f. 3 September 1993. The Supreme Court in its final judgement pronounced on 19 November 1993 upheld the order of the High Court setting aside the election of Yashwantrao Patil but overruled the declaration made by the Court that Balasaheb Vikhe Patil was duly elected to the Lok Sabha. The Supreme Court also set aside the High Court's order naming Sharad Pawar for commission of corrupt practice. Yashwantrao Patil, accordingly, ceased to be a member of the House w.e.f. the date of judgement of the Supreme Court, i.e. 19 November 1993. Necessary information was published in Bn. (II) dated 2 December 1993 and circular in this regard was issued to all Officers/Branches. Copies of the judgement were also placed in the Parliament Library. Earlier, on the pronouncement of the order by the Bombay High Court, on 30 March and the Interim Order by the Supreme Court on appeal, similar action was taken.

- (6) if he remains absent from all the meetings of the House for a period of 60 days or more without the permission of the House<sup>119</sup>; or
- (7) if he is expelled consequent upon the adoption of a motion of expulsion<sup>120</sup> by the House; or
- (8) if he is elected as President of India and enters upon his Office as President<sup>121</sup>; or

Subsequently, on 21 January 1994, a letter was received from the Secretary, Election Commission requesting to place Yashwantrao Patil's case before the President of India as required under section 8A of RP Act, 1951. After examination of the matter, advice was also sought from the Ministry of Law (Leg. Deptt), who confirmed that the case is required to be placed before the President of India by the Secretary-General, Lok Sabha u/s 8A of RP Act, 1951. A note, along with the copies of the judgements of the Bombay High Court and the Supreme Court in the case, was sent by the Secretary-General to the Secretary to the President on 9 March 1994. The Election Commission was also apprised of the position in writing on 15 March 1994. The Election Commission, vide its letter dated 7 July 1994, intimated that the President of India in pursuance of the Section 8A(1) read with section 8A(3) of RP Act and acting according to opinion of the Election Commission, has ordered on 8 June 1994, that Yashwantrao Patil should be disqualified for a period of four years commencing on and from 19 November 1993. It was further stated that disqualification of Patil would subsist upto and including 18 November 1997. (Copy of Presidential Order was enclosed). No further action was taken thereafter.

119. Art. 101(4). This provision is only directory and not mandatory. In computing the period of 60 days, no account is taken of any period during which the House is prorogued or is adjourned for more than four consecutive days. Sixty days mean single unbroken period of 60 days. If a member is absent for 59 days but attends thereafter he may again be absent for 59 days without the permission of the House. The continuous period of 60 days need not necessarily be in the same session. A motion for the vacation of a seat under article 101(4) is moved by the Leader of the House or by such other member to whom he may delegate his functions in this behalf. On 19 April 1950, the seats of three members were declared vacant upon a motion made by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs. See P. Deb., (II), 19-4-1950, p. 3023.

On 5 December 1956, the seat of a member of the First Lok Sabha was declared vacant upon a motion made by the Chairman of the Committee on Absence of Members from the sittings of the House. See L.S. Deb., 5-12-1956, c. 1922. There are instances where members, on their appointment as Ministers in the States, have signed the Attendance Register of Lok Sabha. See L.S. Deb., 17-4-1999; also see Chapter XXXI—General Rules of Procedure.

120. See Chapter XII—'Conduct of Members', for Mudgal Case and others.
121. Consequent upon assuming office of the President of India, Pranab Mukherjee, the member representing the Jangipur Parliamentary Constituency of West Bengal ceased to be a member of Lok Sabha w.e.f. 25 July 2012 in terms of clause (1) of Art. 59 of the Constitution of India 9Notfn. No. 21/2/2012 dated 30.7.2012 Gaz. 11-3(ii) dated 30.7.2012.
122. Art. 66(2).
123. Art. 158(1).

The Lok Sabha seats of the following members were declared vacant on their entering upon the Office of Governor without resigning their seats:

- (1) Dr. P. Subbarayan, Governor of Maharashtra w.e.f. 16-4-1962—Notfn. No. 21/5/62/ T-dt. 1-5-1962, Gaz. (I-1), dt. 12-5-1962.

- (11) if he resigns his seat and his resignation is accepted by the Chairman or the Speaker, as the case may be<sup>124</sup>; or
- (12) if he has been disqualified for being a member of the House.

The resignation of the member is to be in writing under his hand and addressed to the Speaker or the Chairman, as the case may be. Once a member tenders an unqualified resignation and if from information received or otherwise and after making such inquiry as he thinks fit, the Chairman or the Speaker, as the case may be, is satisfied that such resignation is not voluntary or genuine, he does not accept such resignation<sup>125</sup>.

If a member hands over the letter of resignation to the Speaker personally and informs him that the resignation is voluntary and genuine and the Speaker has no information or knowledge to the contrary, the Speaker may accept the resignation immediately<sup>126</sup>. If the Speaker receives the letter of resignation either by post or through someone else, the Speaker may make such inquiry as he thinks fit to satisfy himself that the resignation is voluntary and genuine. If the Speaker, after making a summary enquiry, either himself/or through such other agency, as he may deem fit, is satisfied that the resignation is not voluntary or genuine, he does not accept the resignation<sup>127</sup>.

A letter of resignation becomes effective only after it is accepted by the Speaker<sup>128</sup>. A member may withdraw his letter of resignation at any time before it is accepted by the Speaker<sup>129</sup>. As soon as may be, after the Speaker has accepted the resignation of a member, the Speaker informs the House that the member has resigned his seat in the House and he has accepted the resignation. When the House is not in

(2) M.A. Ayyangar, Governor of Bihar w.e.f. 12-5-1962—Notfn. No. 21/5/62/T dt. 17-5-1962, Gaz. (I-1), dt. 26-5-1962.

(3) K.C. Reddy, Governor of Madhya Pradesh w.e.f. 11-2-1965—Notfn. No. 21/5/62/T-dt. 22-2-1965 Gaz. (I-1), dt. 27-2-1965.

(4) R.D. Bhandare, Governor of Bihar w.e.f. 4-2-1973—S.O. 106(E), Gaz. Ex. [II-3(ii)] dt. 22-2-1973.

124. Art. 101(3b). The Constitution, as originally framed, did not contain any provision for acceptance of the resignation by the Presiding Officer and that implied that the resignation became effective as soon as it was received by the Presiding Officer or the Secretariat. The element of acceptance of resignation was introduced by the Constitution (Thirty-third Amendment) Act, 1974 to put a check on forced resignation.

125. Art. 101(3)(b). Proviso.

126. Rule. 240(1 A).

127. Rule 240(1 B).

128. Dir. 47B(1).

129. Rule 240(1C). On 15 February 1999 an elected member from the Bhopal constituency of Madhya Pradesh sent in a letter of resignation from the membership of the Twelfth Lok Sabha to the Speaker. The member was then requested to confirm whether his resignation was voluntary and genuine. Meanwhile, the member not only participated in voting held on 26 February but also started signing Members' Attendance Register from 8 March onwards. When the member was reminded and asked to meet the Speaker in his Chamber, he met the Speaker in his Chamber and promised to send a letter in writing. Thereafter, before the Speaker accepted his resignation, the member stated vide his letter of 19 March 1999 that the issues that motivated him to tender his resignation had since been sorted out by the concerned Ministry and requested the Speaker not to pursue the matter any further. Then Speaker, accepting his request, treated the resignation tendered by the member as withdrawn.

Session, the Speaker has to inform the House immediately after the House reassembles<sup>130</sup>.

The resignation takes effect from the date from which it is accepted by the Speaker and it is not open to a member to withdraw the resignation after it is accepted by the Speaker<sup>131</sup>. If the member has specified a future date for the resignation to take effect, the resignation takes effect from the date so specified if the Speaker has accepted the resignation by that date<sup>132</sup>. The resignation cannot be accepted from a date earlier than the one on which it is received by the Speaker or in the Lok Sabha Secretariat<sup>133</sup>.

As soon as may be after the Speaker has accepted the resignation of a member, the Secretary-General causes the information to be published in the Lok Sabha Bulletin and the Gazette of India Extraordinary and forwards a copy of the notification to the Election Commission for taking steps to fill the vacancy thus caused. Where the resignation is to take effect from a future date, the information is published in the Bulletin and the Gazette not earlier than the date from which it is to take effect<sup>134</sup>. Reasons given by a member for resignation are not conveyed to the House.

A member who resigns the seat cannot make a statement on the floor of the House in explanation of the resignation<sup>135</sup>.

If the letter of resignation is received after the last session of the Lok Sabha but before its dissolution, members are informed about the resignation and its acceptance through the Bulletin.

On 31 August 2012, S.P.R. Reddy, an elected member from the Nandyal Parliamentary Constituency of Andhra Pradesh sent in a letter of resignation from the membership of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha to the Speaker, giving a reason for his resignation. The member was requested to meet the Speaker. The member met the Speaker and submitted a letter withdrawing his resignation on 5 September 2012. The Speaker accepting his request treated the resignation tendered by the member as withdrawn.

On 14 November 2012, Dr. Kavuru Sambasiva Rao, an elected member from the Eluru Parliamentary Constituency of Andhra Pradesh sent in a letter of resignation from the membership of Fifteenth Lok Sabha to the Speaker Dr. Rao requested the Speaker that the resignation may be accepted with effect from 1 January 2013.

Since the member was entitled to withdraw his resignation before 1 January 2013, it was decided to keep the resignation pending till 31 December 2012. Dr. Rao met the Budget Session to reconsider his decision regarding resigning his seat in the Lok Sabha. The Speaker acceded to the request. Dr. Rao again met the Speaker on 20 February 2013 (one day before the commencement of the Budget Session) and personally handed over a letter withdrawing his resignation from the membership of Lok Sabha. The Speaker accepted his request and treated resignation by the member as withdrawn.

130. Rule. 240(2).

131. Dir. 47B(2).

132. Dir. 47B(3).

133. Dir. 47B(4).

Prior to coming into force of the Constitution (Thirty-third Amendment) Act, 1974 the practice was that the resignation took effect from the date specified therein and if no date was so specified, then it took effect from the date of letter. If the letter bore no date, then the resignation used to take effect from the date on which it was received by the Speaker or the Lok Sabha Secretariat.

CHAPTER VI

Office of Profit

The concept of disqualification of a holder of an Office of Profit under the Government for being chosen as, and for being, a Member of Legislature originated from the need of a democratic Government to limit the control or influence of the Executive over the Legislature.<sup>1</sup> The provision is designated to protect the democratic fabric of the country. Further, holding of certain offices was considered incompatible with membership of legislatures due to physical impossibility of a person attending at two places, or heavy duties being attached to those offices. Exception was, however, made in the case of Ministers and other members of Government – with a view to having an effective coordination between the Executive and the Legislature.

Constitution of India vide articles 102(1) and 191(1) provides for disqualification of a person for being chosen as and for being a member of either House of Parliament and State Legislature if he holds an Office of Profit under the Union or the State unless the Parliament or the State Legislature declares by law that such office does not disqualify its holder.

Unless otherwise declared by Parliament by law, a person is disqualified for being chosen as, and for being, a member of either House of Parliament if he holds any office of profit under the Government of India or the Government of any State<sup>2</sup>. If any question arises as to whether a member of Parliament has become subject to any of the disqualifications laid down in the Constitution, including the one whether he is holding an office of profit or not, the question is referred for the decision of the President and his decision is final. However, before giving any decision on any such question, the President is required to obtain the opinion of the Election Commission and shall act according to such opinions<sup>3</sup>. It is important to note that in this matter the President does not act on the advice of his Council of Ministers.

The underlying object of this constitutional provision is to secure the independence of the members of Parliament or a State Legislature and to ensure that Parliament or the State Legislature does not consist of persons who have received favours or benefits from the Executive Government and who consequently, being

1. Third Report of the Joint Committee on Offices of Profit (Second Lok Sabha)
  2. Art. 102(1)(a). The corresponding provision for State Legislatures is art. 191(1)(a). The Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976, amended article 102(1)(a) of the Constitution, relating to 'Office of Profit'. According to the amended article, a person shall be disqualified for being chosen as, and for being, a member of either House of Parliament, if he holds any office of profit under the Government of India or the Government of any State as is declared by Parliament by law to disqualify its holder. However, article 102(1)(a), as it stood prior to the enactment of the Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976 was restored by the Constitution (Forty-fourth Amendment) Act, 1978.
  3. Art. 103 as substituted by the Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976, and the Constitution (Forty-fourth Amendment) Act, 1978.

under an obligation to the Executive, might be amenable to its influence. Obviously, the provision has been made in order to eliminate or reduce the risk of conflict between duty and self-interest among the legislators<sup>4</sup>.

If the Executive Government were to have untrammelled powers of offering to a member any appointment, position or office which carries emoluments of one kind or the other with it, there would be a risk that an individual member might feel himself beholden to the Executive Government and thus lose his independence of thought and action and cease to be a true representative of his constituents<sup>5</sup>.

Any restrictions which Parliament may deem necessary to impose upon its members have to be contained in legislation that is in a form easily interpreted by, and readily available to, those who may be directly affected.

Although certain enactments had been passed by Parliament, keeping in view the provisions of article 102 (1)(a), it was widely felt that none of the acts met comprehensively the needs of the situation<sup>6</sup>. In this background and following the presentation from members of Parliament, Speaker G.V. Mavalankar, in consultation with the Chairman of the Rajya Sabha appointed, on 21 August 1954, a Committee on Office of Profit under the Chairmanship of Pt. Thakur Das Bhargava to:

study various matters connected with disqualification of members and to make recommendations in order to enable the Government to consider the lines along which a comprehensive legislation should be brought before the House; and collect facts, data and make suggestions as to how the matter should be dealt with<sup>7</sup>.

The Committee (hereinafter referred to as the Bhargava Committee), in their Report, had observed that ordinarily members of Parliament should be encouraged to go on such Committees which are of an advisory character and represent the local or popular point of view in a manner which will effectively influence the officials' point of view. Members of Parliament by virtue of their membership are in a position to say and represent certain matters with some authority and confidence, and their views are likely to go a long way in influencing the view-point of officials. It is at the same time felt that consistent with the above view, members of Parliament should not be permitted to go on Committees, Commissions, etc. which jeopardise their independence or which will place them in a position of power or influence or in a position where they receive some patronage from Government or are themselves in a position to distribute patronage<sup>8</sup>.

The Committee recommended, inter alia, the introduction of a comprehensive Bill having schedules enumerating the different offices which should not incur disqualification, offices to which exemption was to be granted, and offices which would disqualify<sup>9</sup>. The Bhargava Committee felt that since a schedule of that nature could never be exhaustive or complete and frequent scrutiny would have to be made in cases of new bodies as well as the existing ones, a standing Parliamentary Committee should be appointed to undertake the work of such continuous scrutiny<sup>10</sup>.

In pursuance of the recommendations of the Bhargava Committee, the Government introduced in the Lok Sabha the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Bill on 5 December 1957. It was referred to a Joint Committee of the Houses and its Report was presented to the Lok Sabha on 10 September 1958.

The Bill, as introduced, did not contain any Schedules as recommended by the Bhargava Committee. The Joint Committee felt that the enactment should contain a Schedule enumerating the Government Committee whose membership would disqualify. The Joint Committee, accordingly, proposed a Schedule to the Bill, Part I of which enumerated the Committees, membership of which would entail disqualification and Part II, the Committees in which the office of Chairman, Secretary, or member of the Standing or Executive Committee would entail disqualification. The Joint Committee reiterated the recommendation of the Bhargava Committee for the appointment of a standing Parliamentary Committee to undertake the work of continuous scrutiny of the Schedule and of examining new offices<sup>11</sup>.

The Bill, as further amended and passed by Parliament, received the assent of the President on 4 April 1959<sup>12</sup>.

Keeping in view the cardinal principle that the disqualifications for membership should be on as wide a basis as possible, the three chief principles which operate as the main considerations affecting the law on the subject are:

incompatibility of certain non-ministerial offices with membership of the House (which must be taken to cover the question of a member's relations with, and duties to, his constituents);

the need to limit the control or influence of the Executive Government over the House by means of an undue proportion of office holders being members of the House; and the essential condition of a certain number of Ministers being members of the House for the purpose of ensuring control of the Executive by Parliament<sup>13</sup>.

12. The Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Act, 1959, repealed the earlier enactments on the subject. Besides the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Act, 1959 that takes various offices outside the purview of articles 102(1)(a) and 191(1)(a), specific provisions exist by way of declaratory clauses made in particular enactments to the effect that offices created thereunder are deemed not to be an Office of Profit within the meaning of these articles. Some of these enactments include the Coffee Act, 1942, the Rubber Act, 1947, the Press Council Act, 1978, and the Wakf Act, 1995. [P.D.T. Achary : The Law on Offices of Profit, The Parliamentarian, 2007, (Issue Three, India), p. 39].

For the duration of each Lok Sabha, a Joint Committee on Offices of Profit is set up to examine the composition and character of all 'Committees' subsequent to the ones examined by the Joint Committee to which the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Bill, 1957, has been referred, membership of which may disqualify a person for being chosen as and for being a member of Parliament, and make necessary recommendation in that regard<sup>14</sup>.

Before the constitution of this Committee, it was left to the Government to make necessary proposals in this connection in the shape of a Bill which was brought before Parliament. The main criterion taken into consideration by the Government to examine whether an office was an office of profit or not was the emoluments that a member was likely to receive if he held such an office. It was not a satisfactory position, insofar as other aspects of the matter such as position, power or patronage enjoyed by the holder of that office were also relevant factors to be taken into account even though there might not be any monetary advantage to the holder. Further, any Act on the subject could never be comprehensive inasmuch as, though it would crystallise the position on a particular date, cases might arise thereafter needing scrutiny. The Bhargava Committee had proposed that this matter should be taken out of the sphere of the Executive and vested in a Parliamentary Committee which could take an overall view, both politically and legally. Accordingly, the position was being kept under constant review by the Joint Committee on Offices of Profit which made recommendations in the matter from time to time<sup>15</sup>.

Some of the important recommendations made by the Committee were:

In order to obviate the danger of members of Parliament incurring disqualification, Government should issue instructions<sup>16</sup> to all the Public Undertakings, whether fully or partially owned by them, to provide in their rules that M.P.s serving on them shall not be entitled to any sum of money

  14. The Joint Committee on Offices of Profit (JCOP) was constituted for the first time during the Second Lok Sabha in August 1959. Thereafter, it was constituted in June 1962 (3rd L.S.), June 1967 (4th L.S.), July 1971 (5th L.S.), December 1980 (7th L.S.), May 1985 (8th L.S.), May 1990 (9th L.S.), September 1991 (10th L.S.), August 1996 (11th L.S.), July 1998 (12th L.S.), December 1999 (13 L.S.), August 2004 (14 L.S.) and December, 2009 (15th L.S.). (No such Committee was constituted during the Sixth Lok Sabha).

other than 'compensatory allowance' as defined in section 2(a) of the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Act, 1959<sup>17</sup>.

The Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Act, 1959 should also enumerate in its Schedule the bodies whose membership would disqualify a person for being chosen as, or for being, a member of either House of Parliament<sup>18</sup>.

The existing Parts I and II of the Schedule to the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Act, 1959 may be combined into one part so that the Chairmen and Secretaries of all the bodies enumerated therein are excluded from exemption from disqualification. A new part may be added in the Schedule to the Act wherein those bodies may be specified whose Secretaries alone are not exempted from disqualification<sup>19</sup>.

On 21 December 1973, the Government introduced in the Lok Sabha the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Amendment Bill, 1973<sup>20</sup>. The Bill sought to implement the recommendations of the Joint Committee made during the Second, Third and Fourth Lok Sabha. Before introduction in the House, the Bill was considered by the Joint Committee and revised in the light of its observations. The Bill was passed by the Lok Sabha on 17 December 1974<sup>21</sup>, and transmitted to the Rajya Sabha on 18 December 1974. It was pending in the Rajya Sabha till 18 January 1977, when on dissolution of the Lok Sabha, Bill lapsed as per the provision of article 107(5) of the Constitution.

Again on 19 May 1983, the Ministry of Law, Justice and Company Affairs forwarded a draft Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Amendment Bill, 1983 seeking to implement the recommendations of the Joint Committee on Offices of Profit contained in their (forty) Reports presented upto 11 August 1982. The Joint Committee considered the draft Bill and adopted their Tenth Report thereon on 27 April 1984 which was presented to the Lok Sabha and laid in the Rajya Sabha on 7 May 1984. The Bill inter alia sought to amend section 3 of the principal Act by substituting two schedules instead of one and incorporating various bodies recommended for disqualification. The draft Bill has not, however, been introduced in the Parliament so far.

To give effect to the recommendations of the Committee made in their Second Report (Tenth Lok Sabha), the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Act, 1959 was amended in 1993.

In the usual sense of the word, an ‘office’ means “a right to exercise a public or private employment and to take fees and emoluments thereunto belonging”<sup>25</sup>.

The expression “Office of Profit” only means an office which yields income or profit. The word “office” has been a subject matter of judicial consideration as back as in 1922. The expressions<sup>26</sup> “office” or ‘employment’, defined by justice Rowlatt as one subsisting permanent, substantial position – which had an existence independent from the person who filled it, which went on, and was filled in succession by the successive holders.

“Profit” normally connotes any advantage, benefit or useful consequences. Generally, it is interpreted to mean monetary gain but in some cases benefits other than monetary gain may also come within its meaning. “Office of Profit” is one to which some power of patronage is attached or in which the holder is entitled to exercise the executive functions, or which carries dignity, prestige or honour to the incumbent thereof.

The expression “Office of Profit” has not been defined in the Constitution or in the Representation of the People Act, 1951, or in the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Act, 1959, evidently because it is not easy to frame an all embracing definition, covering all the different kinds of posts which exist under Government and those which might hereafter be created. Broadly speaking, it signifies that Government must not be in a position to seduce a member by placing him in a position where he can exercise authority, where he thinks he is somebody important, even if he gets no pecuniary remuneration<sup>27</sup>. However, courts and other authorities have enunciated certain broad criteria in this connection in their judgments from time to time, and these are set out as follows:

Three things have to be proved before a person can be held to incur disqualification—that he holds an office; that it is an office of profit; and that it is an office under the Government of India or the Government of a State<sup>28</sup>.

In order to bring a case for disqualification, the ‘element of profit’ is not enough by itself. It must first be proved that what was held was an ‘office’.

Further, the essential requirement is that the candidate himself must hold the 'office'. The 'office' cannot be held in benami<sup>29</sup>.

An "office of profit" means an employment with fees and emoluments attached to it<sup>30</sup>. Hence, where pay or salary is attached to an office, it immediately and indisputably makes the office an "office of profit"<sup>31</sup>.

In order that an office may be "an office of profit" it is not necessary that there must be some sort of regularity of income; neither is it necessary that there should be actual making of profit by the incumbent; it is enough if the holder of the office may reasonably be expected to make a profit out of it<sup>32</sup>.

The Rajasthan High Court held:

In order that an office may be an office of profit, it is not necessary that there must be a fixed pay attached to the office. If the holder of the office can charge any fee or remuneration for exercising the functions of his office, he holds an office of profit<sup>33</sup>.

The word "profit" in the present context does not necessarily mean any remuneration in cash, but it certainly means some kind of advantage or gain which is tangible or which can be perceived. Hence, the mere influence which one gains by virtue of his position as member of a Committee which has no remuneration attached to it, is not profit within the meaning of article 102 or 191, and the member of such a Committee would suffer no disqualification by being a member thereof<sup>34</sup>.

To constitute an "office of profit" for the purpose of incurring disqualification, prestige and like advantages alone attached to the office will not suffice. Pecuniary advantage is an essential element, and once there is or there can be pecuniary gain, its quantum is immaterial<sup>35</sup>.

The expression "office of profit" has been held to mean an office capable of yielding a profit or from which a man might reasonably be expected to make a profit. The actual making of profit is not necessary. Profit means gain or any material benefit, and the amount of such profit is immaterial<sup>36</sup>.

The essential characteristics of an "office of profit" are—it involves an appointment by the State in one form or the other; it carries emoluments payable mostly periodically; it is for a limited period; it is terminable; it is not assignable; it is not heritable; and the holder of the office must be sui juris<sup>37</sup>.

The emoluments may be in the nature of pay, salary, honorarium, fees, daily allowance, travelling allowance, reimbursement of expenses or compensatory allowance.

As already stated, where pay or salary is attached to an office, it immediately and indisputably makes the office an “office of profit”<sup>38</sup>.

If consideration is paid in the shape of ‘sitting fee’ or ‘attendance fee’, not being daily allowance, it becomes a ‘profit’ inasmuch as it does not even purport to cover any actual expenses. Such consideration or remuneration is deemed to constitute ‘profit’ even though, on detailed accounting, it may be found that no financial advantage has, in fact, been gained by the member in question<sup>39</sup>.

Travelling allowances do not act as a disqualification if one draws not more than what is required to cover the actual out-of-pocket expenses. House rent allowance and conveyance allowance are not profits as the allowances are utilised for the purposes of paying the house rent and meeting conveyance charges; they do not give a pecuniary benefit to the person to whom they are paid. If the quantum of daily allowances is such as not to be a source of income, no disqualification shall be incurred<sup>40</sup>.

The payment of a ‘sitting fee’ of Rs. 25 in addition to travelling allowance/daily allowance has been deemed to constitute ‘profit’<sup>41</sup>. Even when the amount payable by way of sitting fee/daily allowance is well below the ‘compensatory allowance’<sup>42</sup>, in coming to a conclusion whether an office ought to be exempted from disqualification, the Joint Committee on Offices of Profit have taken into account, besides ‘compensatory allowance’, other criteria such as whether the office involves exercise of executive and financial powers and thereby enables the holder to wield influence and patronage<sup>43</sup>. Where the holder of an office is not in a position to wield this influence and patronage and is also not entitled to any remuneration other than the ‘compensatory allowance’, he does not incur disqualification by receiving the allowance.

42. Compensatory allowance means any sum of money payable to the holder of an office by way of daily allowance (such allowance not exceeding the amount of daily allowance to which a member of Parliament is entitled under the Salaries and Allowances of Members of Parliament Act, 1954), any conveyance allowance, house rent allowance or travelling allowance for the purpose of enabling him to recoup any expenditure incurred by him in performing the functions of that office—see Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Act, 1959, s. 2(a).

43. 1R (JCOP—5LS), para 26.

The Joint Committee on Offices of Profit have been following the undernoted criteria for deciding the question as to which of the offices should disqualify and which should not disqualify a person for being chosen as and for being a member of Parliament:

- (i) Whether the holder draws any remuneration like sitting fee, honorarium, salary, etc., i.e. any remuneration other than the ‘compensatory allowance’ as defined in section 2(a) of the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Act, 1959;

[The principle thus is that if a member draws not more than what is required to cover the actual out-of-pocket expenses and does not give him pecuniary benefit, it will not act as a disqualification];

- (ii) Whether the body in which an office is held exercises executive, legislative or judicial powers or confers powers of disbursement of funds, allotment of lands, issue of licences, etc. or gives powers of appointment, grant of scholarships, etc.; and
- (iii) Whether the body in which an office is held wields influence or power by way of patronage.

If reply to any of the above criteria is in the affirmative, then the offices in question will entail disqualification<sup>44</sup>.

A person appointed to an office to which some remuneration is attached incurs disqualification whether he accepts payment or not<sup>45</sup>.

The word “office” does not necessarily imply that it must have an existence apart from the person who may hold it. There could be cases where in order to make use of the special knowledge, talent, skill or experience of certain persons, posts are created which exist only for so long as these persons hold them. It will be difficult to hold that such persons are not holders of offices. Hence, the mere fact that a post which a person holds will cease to exist as soon as he gives it up or that another person cannot be appointed to that post is not a ground for holding that the person does not hold an “office”<sup>46</sup>.

In this connection, the Supreme Court observed :

The word “office” has various meanings depending upon its context. The words “its holder” occurring in article 102(1)(a) or 191(1)(a) indicate that there must be an office which exists independently of the holder of the office. Further, the very fact that the Legislature of a State has been authorised by article 191 to declare an office of profit not to disqualify its holder, contemplates existence of an office apart from its holder. In other words, the Legislature of a State is empowered to declare that an office of profit of a particular description or name would not disqualify its holder and not that a particular holder of an office of profit would not be disqualified<sup>47</sup>.

The Allahabad High Court has held that the engagement of a person by the All India Radio as a Part-Time Correspondent did not amount to his appointment to an office, where the duties of Part-Time Correspondent were assigned to him in his individual capacity for the time being and after the termination of his employment no one was employed as Part-Time Correspondent<sup>48</sup>.

A person incurs disqualification only if he holds an office of profit under the Government of India or the Government of a State<sup>49</sup>. No such disqualification is incurred if the office is held under any local or other authority subject to the control of the said Government. Holding office under statutory corporations need not necessarily mean holding office under the Government even though the initial capital of the corporations is contributed by the Government, the members of the corporation are appointed by the Government and the Government have very large powers of control and supervision over the activities of the corporation<sup>50</sup>.

However, the Supreme Court in A.K. Bhattacharya's case<sup>51</sup> seems to lay emphasis on the measure and nature of control of the Government on the local body in determining whether an office therein is an office of profit or not:

The principle behind the provision in article 102 (1) (a) is that there should not be any conflict between the duties and the interest of an elected member. In order to judge whether employees of any local authority or other authority under the control of Government become holders of office of profit under the Government for the purpose of article 102(1) (a), the measure and nature of control exercised by the Government over the employee must be judged in the light of the facts and circumstances in each case so as to avoid any possible conflict between his personal interests and duties of the Government.

The object of enacting provisions like article 302(1)(a) is that a person who is elected to Parliament or a Legislature should be free to carry on his duties fearlessly without being subjected to any kind of governmental pressure. The measure of control by the Government over a local authority should be judged in order to eliminate the possibility of conflict between duty and interest and to maintain the purity of the elected bodies.

It has also been held by the Supreme Court that all the determinative factors need not be conjointly present. The critical circumstances, not the total factors, prove decisive. A practical view, not pedantic basket of tests, should guide in arriving at a sensible conclusion<sup>52</sup>.

The Supreme Court, in several decisions<sup>53</sup>, has laid down the tests for finding out whether an office in question is an office under a Government and whether it is an Office of Profit. Those tests are: (i) Whether the Government makes the appointment; (ii) Whether the Government has the right to remove or dismiss the holder; (iii) Whether the Government pays the remuneration; (iv) What are the functions of the holder—Does he perform them for the Government; and (v) Does the Government exercise any control over the performance of those functions<sup>54</sup>.

A distinction is ought to be made between the holder of an Office of Profit under the Government and holder of a post or service under the Government.

To determine whether an office is under the Government, it is not necessary to see whether the Government have some disciplinary or supervisory powers over the incumbent of the office<sup>55</sup>.

For the purpose of determining whether an Office of Profit is under the Government, primarily it has to be seen whether Government have the power to appoint a person to that office and remove him from that office. In this connection, the Supreme Court, in one of the cases, observed:

The power of the Government to appoint a person to an Office of Profit or to continue him in that office or revoke his appointment at their discretion, and payment from out of Government revenues, are important factors in determining whether that person is holding an Office of Profit under the Government, though payment from a source other than Government revenues is not always a decisive factor<sup>56</sup>.

Elaborating the case law on this point, the Supreme Court, in another case, observed:

For holding an Office of Profit under the Government, one need not be in the service of Government and there need be no relationship of master and servant between them.

The decisive test for determining whether a person holds any Office of Profit under the Government is the test of appointment. It is not correct to say that the several factors which enter into the determination of this question (that is, the appointing authority, the authority vested with power to terminate the appointment, which determines the remuneration, the source from which the remuneration is paid, and the authority vested with power to control the manner in which the duties of the office are discharged and to give directions in that behalf) must all co-exist and each must show subordination to Government and that if one of the elements is absent, the test of a person holding an office under the Government, Union or State, is not satisfied. The circumstance that the source from which the remuneration is paid is not from public revenue is a neutral factor—not decisive of the question. Whether tests will be held on one factor or the other will depend on the facts of each case. However, where the several elements, the power to appoint, the power to dismiss, the power to control and give direction as to the manner in which the duties of the office are to be performed, and the power to determine a question of remuneration are all present in a given case, then it must be held that the officer in question holds the office under the authority so empowered<sup>57</sup>.

The Office of Profit for the purpose of disqualification must be under the Government with the result that should the office be under some personality juridically distinct from the Government, such an office would not attract disqualification<sup>58</sup>.

On a reference made by the President of India, the Chief Election Commissioner opined that even if the office of the Mayor of Pondicherry was capable of being regarded as an office of profit by virtue of the allowances attached to it, it could not be regarded as an office under the Government. Therefore, a member of the Legislative Assembly of Pondicherry was not disqualified for being a member by reason of his holding the office of the Mayor of Pondicherry<sup>59</sup>.

The appointment made by an authority other than in his capacity in which he exercises the executive power of the State, cannot be deemed to be an appointment made by Government<sup>60</sup>. Thus, the office of Vice-Chancellor does not entail any disqualification. The Vice-Chancellor is appointed by the Governor in his capacity as the Chancellor of the University, distinct from his office as head of the Executive, and the appointment is deemed not to have been made by, nor is the office of the Vice-Chancellor said to be, under the State Government<sup>61</sup>.

Members of Parliament and State Legislatures have been held not to be holding office of profit as they are neither appointed by the Government nor are they removable by the Government although they draw their salaries and allowances from Government revenues<sup>62</sup>.

For almost similar reasons, the Allahabad High Court has held that the Chairman of the Legislative Council, Uttar Pradesh, does not hold any office of profit under the State Government<sup>63</sup>.

Further, the Joint Committee on Offices of Profit, at their sitting held on 15 July 1988, decided that all the Ministries of Government of India and the State Governments might be asked to obtain prior approval of the Speaker, Lok Sabha or the Chairman, Rajya Sabha, as the case may be, before nominating any member of Parliament to any Government Committee/Body unless the Act under which such Committee/Body has been set up provides for appointment of member or where members of Parliament are saved from incurring disqualification by the provisions in the relevant Act itself as is the case with the Rubber Board, Coffee Board, Tea Board, etc.

Thus, requests are received from the Central/State Governments seeking the Speaker's approval to the nomination of members of Parliament on various Committees/Bodies constituted by them. These requests are placed before the Committee with a view to examining whether the Office of Member/Director/Chairman of the Government Body in question constitutes an Office of Profit under the Government which would disqualify the member from being a member of Parliament. Requests from members seeking clarification about the Office of Profit under Government are also examined by the Committee and members are apprised of the decision of the Committee.

An assessor is not disqualified because he does not hold an Office of Profit under the Government but merely gives assistance to the State in the administration of justice<sup>64</sup>.

A person serving as a teacher in a grant-in-aid school does not hold an office of profit under the Government merely because the school receives grants from the Government for payment of a portion of the dearness allowance and the pay of teachers. The most important test for determining whether an office is held under the Government is whether the power of appointment and dismissal vests in the Government<sup>65</sup>.

If a particular post is created by the Government and then a grant of land is made to the person holding that post to remunerate him for his service in lieu of cash payment, then it may be held that he is holding an office under the Government because in such a case it is the office which is created first and then it is determined by the Government how to remunerate the office holder for his services. If, however, a grant of land is made by the Government to a certain person out of regard for his meritorious service or some other personal consideration for the grantee and if in such a case some service is also required from him, then it cannot be said that he is holding any particular office under the Government. In the second case, he is primarily a grantee and the service, if any, required from him is subsidiary and it is only a term attached to that grant<sup>66</sup>.

An ex-Ruler of an Indian State who received a sum of money annually as privy purse from the Union Government did not hold an office of profit under the Government within the meaning of article 102 or 191<sup>67</sup>.

A person is disqualified for being chosen as a member of Legislature if he holds an office of profit under the Government at the time of filing his nomination paper<sup>68</sup>. The disqualification is not removed on his submitting an unqualified resignation of his office or by ceasing to work but only when the resignation has been accepted by the proper authority prior to the filing of the nomination paper<sup>69</sup>. The disqualification is not removed if the resignation has been accepted by an authority not competent to accept it. In such a case, the acceptance of the resignation is invalid and the person submitting his resignation will be disqualified since he must be considered to have continued to hold office<sup>70</sup>.

As opposed to offices to which certain duties are attached more or less of a permanent character, there are offices which are of a transient, occasional or contractual nature, e.g., lawyers engaged by the Government; technical advisers to the Government for specific projects; authors commissioned by the Government to write articles, guide books, etc.; persons engaged in giving broadcasts from All India Radio; Medical practitioner working as a Panel Doctors appointed under (ESI) Employees State Insurance and the like.

The work of writing of a book by a member of Parliament is not an office and payment of remuneration by the Government does not make it an Office of Profit under the Government<sup>71</sup>. A lawyer who is an approved Railway pleader, that is, a pleader who is engaged by the Government for conducting Railway cases, who does not receive any retaining fee but only a fee for the cases conducted, does not hold an office of profit under the Government<sup>72</sup>. Similarly, an advocate appointed as the Special Government pleader to assist the Government pleader, in a particular case, does not hold an Office of Profit<sup>73</sup>.

A person who undertakes to execute some work under the Public Works Department and enters into a contract deed with the Government to that effect does not hold office under the Government<sup>74</sup>.

Article 102 or article 191 recognises the power of Parliament or the Legislature of a State to declare by law that the holder of an office would not be disqualified for being chosen as a member. There is nothing in the words of either article to indicate that this declaration cannot be made with retrospective effect. The word “declared” in these articles does not imply any limitation on the powers of Parliament or the State Legislature; declaration can be made effective as from an earlier date. In relation to the power to validate election retrospectively by law, the Supreme Court observed—

It is true that it (the power) gives an advantage to those who stand when the disqualification was not so removed as against those who may have kept themselves back because the disability was not removed. That might raise questions of the propriety of such retrospective legislation but not of the capacity to make such laws<sup>75</sup>.

According to the scheme for the conduct of elections, the Supreme Court has held that the candidate should not be not-qualified or disqualified when the scrutiny of nominations is taken up by the returning officer for the purpose of finalising the list of nominated candidates. This, in the opinion of the Court, is the proper construction to put on the words “the date fixed for the scrutiny of nominations”. A broad and liberal interpretation must be given to S.3 6(2) (a) in order to give full effect to the parliamentary intent. Accordingly, the Court held that as the resignation of appellant must be treated as having taken effect before the scrutiny of the nominations was commenced, the appellant cannot be regarded as holding an office of profit at the relevant time<sup>76</sup>.

The object of enacting article 191(1)(a) is plain. A person who is elected to a Legislature should be free to carry on his duties fearlessly without being subjected to any kind of Government pressure. If such a person was holding the office which brings him remuneration and the Government has a voice in his continuance in that office, there was every likelihood of such person succumbing to the wishes of the Government. For holding the office of profit under the Government, a person need not be in the services of the Government and there need not be any relationship of master and servant between them<sup>77</sup>.

The dissolution of the existing Lok Sabha is not a condition precedent for holding a General Election to it. It is no doubt true that article 102 (1) (a) says that if a person holds any office of profit under the Government of India or the Government of any State other than an office declared by Parliament by law not to disqualify its holder, he is disqualified for being chosen as and for being a member of either House of Parliament. In any event, the membership of Parliament is not an office under the Government. So, the fact that the Lok Sabha had not been dissolved on the date on which the election was held would not amount to a disqualification in case of a member of the Lok Sabha for being a candidate at the next general election<sup>78</sup>.

In another case, the Supreme Court was of the opinion that the State Government did not exercise any control over officers like Accountant-in-charge and that he continued to be an employee of the municipality though his appointment was subject to confirmation by the Government<sup>79</sup>.

The holder of the office of the Chief Parliamentary Secretary was not disqualified for being chosen as a member of the Assembly under “the Act of 1971”. That being the legal position, it could not be said that the respondent was not qualified to be elected as a member of “the Assembly”. As such, the respondent was entitled to hold the office of Chief Parliamentary Secretary to the Government of Himachal Pradesh even after dissolution of the Legislative Assembly<sup>80</sup>.

In yet another case<sup>81</sup>, the Supreme Court held that an office of profit is an office which is capable of yielding a profit or pecuniary gain. Holding an office under the Central or State Government, to which some pay, salary, emoluments, remuneration or non-compensatory allowance is attached, is “holding an office of profit”. Nomenclature is not important. If the “pecuniary gain” is “receivable” in connection with the office then it becomes an office of profit. The court further held the fact that whether the petitioner is affluent or was not interested in the benefits/facilities given by the State Government or did not, in fact, receive such benefits till date, are not relevant to the issue.

The Joint Committee to Examine the Constitutional and Legal Position Relating to Office of Profit

On 31 July 2006, during the reconsideration of the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification Amendment) Bill by the Lok Sabha, an assurance was given on the floor of the House that the various points raised in the message of the Hon’ble President would be examined by the Joint Committee of both the Houses of Parliament. Accordingly, the Minister of Law and Justice moved a motion in the Lok Sabha on 17 August 2006 for constitution of Joint Committee to examine the constitutional and legal position relating to Office of Profit and the motion was adopted by the House on the same day. The motion regarding the appointment of the Committee was concurred in Rajya Sabha on 18 August 2006. Thus, a Committee of 15 members of Parliament (10 from Lok Sabha and 5 from Rajya Sabha) was constituted to examine the Constitutional and Legal Position Relating to Office of Profit with the following terms of reference:—

- (i) to examine, in the context of settled interpretation of the expression “Office of Profit” in article 102 of the Constitution and the underlying constitutional principles therein, and to suggest a comprehensive definition of “Office of Profit.”
- (ii) to recommend, in relation to “Office of Profit,” the evolution of generic and comprehensive criteria which are just, fair and reasonable and can be applied to all States and Union Territories;
- (iii) to examine the feasibility of adoption of system of law relating to prevention of disqualification of members of Parliament as existing in the United Kingdom and considered by the Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976; and
- (iv) To examine any other matter incidental to the above.

After deliberating upon the above terms of reference, the Committee made inter alia certain observations and recommended<sup>82</sup> the amendment of article 102(1)(a). The Committee opined that article 191(1)(a) may also be amended on the similar lines in order to maintain uniformity. The Committee submitted its Report to the Parliament on 22 December 2008.

82. Observations/Recommendations of the Committee:—

- (i) A precise definition of office of profit is very necessary, primarily because without knowing what constitutes an office of profit and what does not, the exercise of giving exemptions from holding any office of profit seems to be a vacuous one.

The recommendation of the Joint Committee to Examine the Constitutional and Legal Position Relating to Office of Profit was forwarded to the Government of India for necessary action.

- (ii) The Committee have strongly felt that while defining an Office of Profit it is also essential to identify the generic criteria of the offices/posts which would not constitute Offices of Profit or in other words which would not be deemed as offices of profit. And this aspect has to be the part of the definition itself. Accordingly, the Committee have identified the following three categories of offices which should not be deemed to be Offices of Profit:—
1. Minister for the Union or for States
  2. Office in Parliament or State Legislatures
  3. Advisory Offices in Union or States
- (iii) The Committee have recommended that article 102(1)(a) should be amended on the following lines:—

Article 102(1)

“A person shall be disqualified for being chosen as, and for being, a member of either House of Parliament”

- (a) If he holds any Office of Profit under the Government of India or the Government of any State, other than an office declared by Parliament by law not to disqualify its holder.
- I. Provided that the holder of such office should not draw any salary/remuneration except for compensatory allowance;
  - II. Provided further that a person shall not be deemed to hold an Office of Profit under the Government of India or the Government of any State by reasons only that—
    - (i) he is a Minister for the Union or for such a State;
    - (ii) he is holding an office in Parliament or such a State Legislature;
    - (iii) he is holding an advisory office for the Union or for such a State.

Explanation : For the purposes of this clause

- (a) “Office of Profit” means any office—
- (i) Under the control of the Government of India, or the Government of a State, as the case may be, whether or not the salary or remuneration for such office is paid out of the public revenue of the Government of India or of the Government of State; or
  - (ii) Under a body, which is wholly or partially owned by the Government of India or the Government of any State and the salary or remuneration is paid by such body; and
    - (A) the holder of which is capable of exercising executive powers delegated by the government including disbursement of funds, allotment of lands, issuing of licenses and permits or making of public appointments or granting of such other favours of substantial nature; or legislative, judicial or quasi-judicial functions; and/or
    - (B) the holder under (i) or (ii) is entitled to draw salary or remuneration irrespective of whether he actually receives it.
- (b) “offices in Parliament and State Legislature” means the offices which are directly connected with the discharge of legislative functions in Parliament or in a State Legislature e.g. office of Leader of Opposition in Parliament, office of Leader and Deputy Leader of Party and recognized Parties/Groups in Parliament, the Chief Whips, Deputy Chief Whips or Whips in Parliament/State Legislature, etc.

- (c) “salary” means salary or pay scale attached to the office whether or not the holder of such an office draws such salary.
  - (d) “remuneration” means any pecuniary gain commensurate with the status and responsibilities attached to the office, but shall not include the expenditure incurred on staff and infrastructure for running office.
  - (e) “compensatory allowance” means any sum of money payable to the holder of an office by way of daily allowance (such allowance not exceeding the amount of daily allowance to which a member of Parliament is entitled under the [Salaries and Allowances and Pensions of Members of Parliament Act, 1954 (30 of 1954)] any conveyance allowance, house rent allowance or travelling allowance for the purpose of enabling him to recoup any expenditure incurred by him in performing the functions of that office.
  - (f) “advisory office” means any office (by whatever name called) which is associated with purely giving counsel or recommendation on any particular subject/policy, in respect of any matter of public importance/interest and no salary or remuneration except for compensatory allowance is attached with it.

CHAPTER VII

Presiding Officers of Lok Sabha

Office of the Speaker

The institution of Speaker, or President<sup>1</sup> dates back to 1921 when the Central Legislative Assembly was constituted for the first time under the Montague-Chelmsford Reforms. Previously, it was the Governor-General of India who used to preside over the sittings of the Legislative Council<sup>2</sup>.

Under the statutory provisions, the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly was to be elected by the House except for the first four years when he was to be appointed by the Governor-General<sup>3</sup>. While the appointed Speaker could be removed from office by order of the Governor-General, the elected Speaker could be removed only by a vote of the Assembly with the concurrence of the Governor-General. It was also provided that an elected Speaker would cease to hold office if he ceased to be a member of the Assembly. The Speaker could resign in writing, addressed to the Governor-General<sup>4</sup>.

Sir Frederick Whyte, a member of the House of Commons, known for his ability, special qualifications and a deep knowledge of parliamentary procedure, was nominated and appointed by the Governor-General as the first Speaker of the Central Legislative Assembly for a period of four years<sup>5</sup>.

The rule regarding the election of the Speaker was made for the first time in 1925 by the Governor-General<sup>6</sup>. This rule filled a lacuna in the original procedure and laid down the method of nomination and election of the Speaker and prescribed the stages of the election<sup>7</sup>.

All elections to the Office of the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly from 1925 to the time when the Assembly ceased to exist on the coming into force on 15 August 1947, of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, were held in accordance with the procedure prescribed in the aforesaid rule. The election was held by ballot on a day fixed by the Governor-General<sup>8</sup>. The outgoing Speaker would announce the names of the candidates together with the names of the proposers and seconders. Voting used to take place in the House itself with the ballot box placed at the Table. One by one the members would be called by the Presiding Officer and ballot papers handed over to them by the Secretary of the Assembly. After all the members had recorded their votes one by one, in secrecy, in a room behind the Speaker's Chair and placed them in the ballot box, the ballot papers were scrutinised and counted by the Presiding Officer and the result announced immediately. On receipt of a message from the Governor-General approving the election, the message would be read out by the Presiding Officer whereafter the Speaker-elect would take the Chair.

Vithalbhai J. Patel was the first non-official member to be elected as the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly on 24 August 1925<sup>9</sup>. He was put up for Speakership by the Swarajist Party. The election was a keenly contested one and T. Rangachariar lost by a narrow margin of two votes to Patel who secured 58 votes<sup>10</sup>. The outgoing Speaker, Sir Frederic Whyte presided over the sitting of the House when the election of Patel took place. The election was approved by the Governor-General, the same day, i.e. 24 August 1925, and Patel took the charge immediately. Vithalbhai Patel was re-elected Speaker of the Assembly on 20 January 1927. During his first term of office, he had established a good reputation as a Presiding Officer and his position had become so unchallenged that in spite of many of his rulings which, though remarkable, were not to the liking of the Government of the day, he was unanimously re-elected both by the official as well as non-official members of the Assembly<sup>11</sup>.

Speaker Patel resigned his office<sup>12</sup> on 28 April 1930. He was succeeded by Sir Muhammad Yakub on 9 July 1930<sup>13</sup> but he stayed only for one session, the seventh and the last session of the Third Legislative Assembly. On 17 January 1931, the Assembly elected Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola as its Speaker<sup>14</sup>. Sir Ibrahim resigned on 7 March 1933, on grounds of health. He was succeeded by Shanmukham Chetty who was elected unanimously on 14 March 1933<sup>15</sup>. Sir Abdur Rahim, who was elected Speaker on 24 January 1935<sup>16</sup>, occupied the high office for a longer period i.e. for ten years. The life of the Assembly was extended from time to time, first on the ground of contemplated constitutional changes and later for the reason that as the Second World War was going on it would not be proper to disturb the country's political situation by holding elections<sup>17</sup>.

Soon after the cessation of war, elections were held in the country and the Sixth Legislative Assembly came into being on 21 January 1946. G.V. Mavalankar was put up as a candidate for Speakership by the Congress Party and was elected on 24 January 1946<sup>18</sup>. The election, having been approved by the Governor-General, Mavalankar took office the same day.

Independence and after: Under the Indian Independence Act, 1947<sup>19</sup>, the Central Legislative Assembly and the Council of States ceased to exist after 14 August 1947, and the Constituent Assembly of India, which had been functioning since 9 December 1946, for the purpose of framing the Constitution, was empowered to function as the Legislature for the country. It was provided that—the powers of the Federal Legislature or Indian Legislature under the Government of India Act, 1935, as in force in relation to each Dominion, shall, in the first instance, be exercisable by the Constituent Assembly of the Dominion<sup>20</sup>.

It was, however, felt that it would be desirable to maintain the distinction between the Constitution-making function of the Constituent Assembly and its ordinary function as a Legislature. In this connection, the President of the Constituent Assembly (Dr. Rajendra Prasad) made the following observations on 20 August 1947<sup>21</sup>:

I think the question about the status and functioning of the Assembly is an important one and we have to take into consideration the rules which we have framed for the conduct of our business here as also the adaptations of the Government of India Act which have been made and the Independence Act. Taking all these things into consideration, we have to find out whether we can function either compartmentally in two compartments or we should function as one body. These are questions which require consideration and I think the suggestion which has been made by the Leader of the House that a small sub-committee should be appointed for the purpose of going into them and for making suggestions in regard to the rules which would guide us, is a suggestion which should be acceptable to the House and I would like to know if the House would like to have that done.

The House having agreed, a Committee under the Chairmanship of G.V. Mavalankar was appointed on 20 August 1947, with the following terms of reference<sup>22</sup>:-

- (i) What are the precise functions of the Constituent Assembly under the Indian Independence Act?
- (ii) Is it possible to distinguish between the business of the Constituent Assembly as a Constitution-making body and its other business and can the Constituent Assembly set apart certain days or periods solely for the former?
- (iii) Should the members representing the Indian States in the Constituent Assembly be given the right to take part in proceedings which do not relate to Constitution-making or to the subjects in respect of which they have acceded?
- (iv) What new Rules or Standing Orders, if any, and what amendments, if any, in the existing Rules or Standing Orders should be made by the Constituent Assembly or its President?

On 29 August 1947, after considering the Mavalankar Committee Report, the Constituent Assembly resolved<sup>23</sup> that the business of the Assembly as a Constitution-making body should be clearly distinguished from its function as the Dominion Legislature and that a provision should be made for the election of a Speaker to preside over the Assembly while functioning in the latter capacity.

In accordance with the aforesaid Resolution, the Indian Legislative Rules in force immediately before the establishment of the Dominion of India were modified and adapted by the Speaker (President) of the Constituent Assembly.

The Constituent Assembly (Legislative) as a distinct body met for its first sitting in the Assembly Chamber on 17 November 1947, with the President of the Constituent Assembly (Dr. Rajendra Prasad) in the Chair. Welcoming the members to the First Session of the Constituent Assembly (Legislative), Dr. Prasad observed<sup>24</sup>:

As you are aware, under the Independence of India Act the Legislative Assembly as well as the Council of States ceased to exist after the 14th August last, and the functions of both Houses were to be carried on thereafter by the Constituent Assembly. This is the first occasion when the Constituent Assembly has met for that purpose. It was felt that it would be desirable to maintain the distinction between the Constitution-making function of the Constituent Assembly and its ordinary function as a Legislature. For that purpose it was thought desirable to have someone to preside over the deliberations of the Assembly when it did its work as a Legislature because of certain anomalies which had arisen on account of my being the President of the Constituent Assembly and also a Member of the Government. You have, therefore, now to proceed to elect a Speaker, who will be independent of the Government and carry on the functions of the Speaker and preside over your deliberations.

Only one nomination, that of G.V. Mavalankar, had been received for the Office of the Speaker. He was, therefore, declared as duly elected. Dr. Rajendra Prasad vacated the Chair which was then occupied by Speaker Mavalankar<sup>25</sup>.

By virtue of article 379<sup>26</sup>, the Speaker of the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) continued as the Speaker of the Provisional Parliament on the commencement of the Constitution. The Constitution came into force on 26 January 1950 but as time was required for holding general elections in the country, a provision was made in the Constitution that the Provisional Parliament and its Speaker should continue till the date when the President summoned the new Parliament elected under the provisions of the Constitution. Accordingly, G.V. Mavalankar continued to be the Speaker till 17 April 1952, when Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha duly constituted after the first general elections held earlier in that year, were summoned to meet. On that day, the Provisional Parliament ceased to function and consequently the Speaker of the Provisional Parliament also ceased to hold Office of the Speaker from that date. Since the House was to meet and elect its Speaker after some time, the President, on the same day, i.e. 17 April 1952, made an order under article 95(1) appointing the outgoing Speaker G.V. Mavalankar, who had been elected as a member of First Lok Sabha, to perform the duties of the Speaker until the first sitting of the House.

This was in conformity with the principle of the provisions of article 94, under which, whenever Lok Sabha is dissolved, the Speaker does not vacate his office until immediately before the first sitting of Lok Sabha after the dissolution. The President's Order was thus in the nature of a link for the continuance of the Speaker between the fading away of the Provisional Parliament and the constitution of the First Lok Sabha<sup>27</sup>.

On 11 May 1952, the President issued an order under article 99 appointing G.V. Mavalankar and M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar to be the persons before either of whom members of the First Lok Sabha could make and subscribe the oath or affirmation in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution. Thus, Mavalankar, who was also performing the duties of the Speaker, presided at the sittings of Lok Sabha held on 13 and 15 May 1952, till members had made, and subscribed the oath or affirmation. After the oath-taking by members was completed on 15 May 1952, Mavalankar vacated the Chair. At this stage, the Secretary read out an order of the President appointing B. Das, the senior-most member of Lok Sabha, as Speaker pro tem. B. Das then occupied the Chair till the election of the Speaker.

Constitutional Provisions and Rules regarding Election of the Speaker : The election of the Speaker and Deputy Speaker of Lok Sabha is now governed by provisions of article 93<sup>28</sup>.

In 1952, while adapting the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) Rules for the Lok Sabha, radical changes were introduced in the procedure regarding election of the Speaker. The following were the main changes—

The Speaker and the Deputy Speaker of the First Lok Sabha were chosen on 15 and 30 May 1952, respectively, when G.V. Mavalankar was chosen as Speaker and Ananthasayanam Ayyangar as Deputy Speaker.

On the occurrence of the vacancy in the Office of Speaker, consequent on the death of Speaker Mavalankar on 27 February 1956, Ananthasayanam Ayyangar was chosen on 8 March 1956 as Speaker.

On the previous day, Ayyangar resigned from the Office of Deputy Speaker. The vacancy thus caused was filled by choosing Sardar Hukum Singh as Deputy Speaker on 20 March 1956.

For the Second Lok Sabha, Ananthasayanam Ayyangar and Sardar Hukum Singh were chosen as Speaker and Deputy Speaker, respectively—the former on 11 May 1957 and the latter on 17 May 1957.

Sardar Hukum Singh and S.V. Krishnamoorthy were chosen Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Third Lok Sabha on 17 and 23 April 1962, respectively.

Dr. N. Sanjiva Reddy and R.K. Khadilkar were chosen as Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Fourth Lok Sabha on 17 and 28 March 1967, respectively.

In the vacancy caused by the resignation of Speaker, Dr. N. Sanjiva Reddy on 19 July 1969, Dr. G.S. Dhillon was chosen as Speaker on 8 August 1969.

G.G. Swell was chosen as Deputy Speaker on 9 December 1969, in the vacancy caused by the resignation of R.K. Khadilkar on 1 November 1969.

Dr. G.S. Dhillon was chosen as Speaker and G.G. Swell as Deputy Speaker of the Fifth Lok Sabha on 22 and 27 March 1971, respectively.

On the occurrence of vacancy in the Office of Speaker, consequent on the resignation by Speaker Dhillon on 1 December 1975, B.R. Bhagat was chosen, on 5 January 1976, as Speaker.

Dr. N. Sanjiva Reddy and Godey Murahari were chosen as Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Sixth Lok Sabha on 26 March and 1 April 1977, respectively.

In the vacancy caused by the resignation of Speaker Dr. N. Sanjiva Reddy on 13 July 1977, K.S. Hegde was chosen as Speaker on 21 July 1977.

Dr. Bal Ram Jakhar and G. Lakshmanan were chosen as Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Seventh Lok Sabha on 22 January 1980 and 1 February 1980, respectively.

Dr. Bal Ram Jakhar and M. Thambi Durai were chosen as Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Eighth Lok Sabha on 16 and 22 January 1985, respectively.

Rabi Ray and Shivraj V. Patil were chosen as Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Ninth Lok Sabha on 19 December 1989 and 19 March 1990, respectively.

Shivraj V. Patil and S. Mallikarjunaiah were chosen as Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Tenth Lok Sabha on 10 July and 13 August 1991, respectively.

Purno Agitok Sangma and Suraj Bhan were chosen as Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Eleventh Lok Sabha on 23 May and 12 July 1996, respectively.

Ganti Mohana Chandra Balayogi and P.M. Sayeed were chosen as Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Twelfth Lok Sabha on 24 March and 17 December 1998, respectively.

Ganti Mohana Chandra Balayogi and P.M. Sayeed were chosen as Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Thirteenth Lok Sabha on 22 and 27 October 1999, respectively.

On the occurrence of the vacancy in the Office of Speaker, consequent on the death of Speaker Balayogi on 3 March 2002, Manohar Joshi was chosen on 10 May 2002 as Speaker.

Somnath Chatterjee and Charnjit Singh Atwal were chosen as Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Fourteenth Lok Sabha on 4 and 9 June 2004, respectively.

Meira Kumar and Kariya Munda were chosen as Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha on 3 and 8 June, 2009 respectively.

- (i) The notice of the motion regarding election of the Speaker was to be accompanied by a statement by the member whose name was proposed in the notice that he was willing to serve as Speaker, if elected. Previously, it was sufficient for the proposer to state in the nomination paper that he had ascertained that the member nominated was willing to serve as Speaker.
- (ii) The election of the Speaker by ballot was eliminated and the election was to be held by open voting in the House.
- (iii) Even though there was only one candidate for office, the motion regarding his election was formally to be put to the House and carried.

Only a few minor changes have since been made in the Rule and the procedure for election of the Speaker broadly continues to be the same<sup>29</sup>.

Mode of Election

The date for the election of the Speaker has to be fixed by the President<sup>30</sup>. The date convenient for the purpose is suggested by the Prime Minister in a communication to the Secretary-General. However, lately in practice the Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs while communicating the dates for holding the first Session of a new Lok Sabha, after the General Election, states therein the date decided by the Government for the election of Speaker and no separate communication is received in this regard from the Prime Minister. Secretary-General then submits a note embodying the suggestion of the Prime Minister/Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs to the President for his order. After the President has approved the proposal, members of Lok Sabha are informed through the Bulletin.

Simultaneously, entry regarding "Election of Speaker" is made in an advance List of Business issued for the day on which election of the Speaker is fixed; the date is normally so chosen that members have a few days' time to give notices of motions<sup>31</sup>.

At any time before noon on the day preceding the date so fixed, any member may give notice in writing, addressed to the Secretary-General, of a motion that another member be chosen as the Speaker of the House, and the notice has to be

30. See Rule 7(1).

31. In the past, the gap between the date of election and date of issue of paragraph in the Bulletin was as follows :—

Date of issue of para in the Bulletin	Date of election

seconded by a third member and accompanied by a statement by the member, whose name is proposed in the notice, that he is willing to serve as Speaker, if elected. If the day preceding the date fixed for holding the election happens to be a Sunday or public holiday, notice of motions for election of Speaker can be tabled till 15.15 hours on the preceding working day. A member cannot, however, propose his own name or second a motion proposing his own name, or propose or second more than one motion<sup>32</sup>. Notice of motion for election of the candidate selected by the ruling party or the coalition is normally given by the Prime Minister or the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs.

All the notices of motions which are in order are entered in the order in which they are received in point of time in the Revised List of Business which is issued on the day preceding the day fixed for election of the Speaker.

Where notice of two identical motions is given by the same member, only one motion which is received first in point of time is included in the List of Business.

A member in whose name a motion stands on the List of Business may, when called, move the motion or withdraw the motion, and while doing so he has to confine himself to a mere statement to that effect<sup>33</sup>. The motion, if moved, is then seconded by the member whose name stands on the List of Business as seconder and he has also to confine himself to a mere statement to that effect.

The motions which have been moved and duly seconded are put to the vote of the House one by one in the order in which they have been moved, and decided, if necessary, by division. If any motion is carried, the person presiding, without putting later motions, declares that the member proposed in the motion which has been carried, has been chosen as the Speaker of the House<sup>34</sup>.

Even though there is only one candidate for the office, the motion regarding his election must formally be put to the House and carried.

Immediately after the result of election is declared, the Prime Minister, the Leader of the House (if the Prime Minister is not the Leader of the House) and the Leader of Opposition go to the seat of the Speaker-elect, bow to him and conduct him to the Chair.

Felicitations are offered by the Prime Minister and other members on behalf of different sections of the House and the Speaker makes a brief reply. Thereafter, the House proceeds with its regular business, if any, on the List of Business<sup>35</sup>.

The election of the Speaker is notified in the Gazette by the Secretariat<sup>36</sup>.

proceeded with. Two motions regarding election of Dr. Bal Ram Jakhar (16 January 1985) were moved and placed before the House. After the first motion was carried, the second one was not proceeded with. Out of four motions regarding election of Rabi Ray (19 December 1989), three motions were moved and placed before the House. One motion, third in the list could not be moved since the mover was not present in the House. After the first motion was carried, the rest were not proceeded with. Out of eleven motions regarding election of Shivraj V. Patil (10 July 1991), only one motion was moved and the same was adopted by the House. All the thirteen motions regarding election of Purno Agitok Sangma (23 May 1996) were moved and placed before the House. After the first motion was carried, the rest were not proceeded with. All the fourteen motions regarding election of G.M.C. Balayogi (22 October 1999) were moved and placed before the House. After the first motion was carried, the rest were not proceeded with. All the eighteen motions regarding election of Somnath Chatterjee (4 June 2004) were moved and placed before the House. After the first motion was carried, the rest were not proceeded with. Out of fifteen motions regarding election of Meira Kumar (3 June 2009), only eleven motions were moved and placed before the House. After the first motion was carried, the rest were not proceeded with.

The business of the House was, however, taken up after the election of M.A. Ayyangar on 8-3-1956 (L.S. Deb., 8-3-1956 c. 1968), Dr. G.S. Dhillon on 8-8-1969 (L.S. Deb., 8-8-1969, c. 230) K.S. In these cases, vacancies were caused mid-term on account of death/resignation of the Speaker.

model of Speakership was generally followed. The Presiding Officer kept himself completely aloof from party politics.

Speaker Patel dissociated himself from the Swarajist Party of which he was an active member prior to his election and during his entire term of office he kept himself aloof from party interest. In the election of 1926, he did not stand on the Congress ticket but stood as an independent candidate from his old constituency and was returned unopposed<sup>37</sup>.

The Presiding Officers who succeeded Speaker Patel in the Central Legislative Assembly—Muhammad Yakub, Ibrahim Rahimtoola, Sir Shanmukham Chetty and Sir Abdur Rahim—held more or less similar views on the need for impartiality and non-party character on the part of the Presiding Officer<sup>38</sup>.

With the advent of popular governments in the provinces, in 1937, the question of a Presiding Officer severing his connections with his party became slightly more open, but on the whole there was agreement that impartiality demanded sincere attempts to break previous political connections.

The question as to how far the Speaker should be connected with their political parties and how far they should take part in politics has been engaging the attention of the Conference of Presiding Officers of Legislative Bodies in India. The 1951 Conference was of the opinion that a convention should be established that the seat from which the Speaker stands for re-election should not be contested and that the Speaker should not take part in party politics.

The position regarding participation in politics by Speakers was explained to the House by Speaker Mavalankar on 15 May 1952, at the time of his election as Speaker of Lok Sabha, in the following words:

...It is obviously not possible, in the present conditions of our political and parliamentary life, to remain as insular as the English Speaker, so far as political life goes. But, the Indian Speaker acting as such will be absolutely a non-party man meaning thereby that he keeps aloof from party deliberations and controversies. He does not cease to be a politician merely by the fact of his being Speaker. We have yet to evolve political parties and healthy conventions about Speakership, the principle of which is that once a Speaker, he is not opposed by any party in the matter of his election, whether in the constituency or in the House, so long as he wishes to continue as a Speaker. To expect the Speaker to be out of politics altogether without the corresponding convention is perhaps entertaining contradictory expectations.

...Though a Congressman, it would be my duty and effort to deal with all members and sections of the House with justice and equity, and it would be my duty to be impartial and remain above all considerations of party or of political career<sup>39</sup>.

The Conference of Presiding Officers held at Gwalior in 1953 adopted a resolution to the effect that a convention should be established that the seat from which the Speaker stands for re-election should not be contested in the election, and steps for making a beginning in that direction may be pressed upon the Government by the Chairman of the Conference<sup>40</sup>. In pursuance of the said resolution, Chairman of the Conference (G.V. Mavalankar) took up the matter with the then Congress President (Jawaharlal Nehru). The Working Committee of the Congress considered the matter and sent a communication to Mavalankar which was disclosed by him at the Conference of Presiding Officers held at Srinagar in 1954 in the following words:

Obviously they (the Congress Working Committee) accept the desirability of laying the wider convention that the Speaker's seat should not be contested but that will require the concurrence of other political parties which they felt was not possible to obtain. But the important point is that they have accepted that it is a right convention and further they have also accepted the position as set out, in my letter, that so far as possible they should not set aside a Speaker while considering his nomination for general election and then his election to the Speakership. So far as possible the practice should be to give him the party ticket so that his future candidature at the general election is assured. I think, so far as it goes, the decision is a good advance in the desired direction. All conventions grow bit by bit and have to be built up step by step. In my view, we have laid the first brick very firmly and we have now to strive further.

I may mention here the necessary counterpart of this convention: it is that the Speaker has to abstain from active participation in all controversial topics of politics. The essence of the matter is that a Speaker has to place himself in the position of a judge. He has not to become a partisan so as to avoid unconscious bias for or against a particular view and thus inspire confidence in all sections of the House about his integrity and impartiality. If we are able to build up this convention on our own, then only we shall be able to justify, in course of time, the other one about the Speaker's seat being uncontested<sup>41</sup>.

Speaker Ayyangar accepted the view held by his predecessor in this matter. While assuming the Office as Speaker on 8 March 1956, he said:

I assure every section of this House, and every group and even every individual who does not belong to any particular group that I will never let down their privileges. A member's privileges as a member shall be constantly before me. I shall try to stick to traditions, follow the older ones and whenever new ones have to be established, you may take it from me that I will try to do that... I do not make any difference between party and party<sup>42</sup>.

At the time of his election as Speaker for the second time, Ayyangar, while referring to a suggestion made that he should cease to be a member of the Congress Party, said:

It may be that I am not resigning my membership from the party, but I shall so conduct myself in this Office as to infuse confidence in the minds of all to raise the standards, conventions and traditions of this House<sup>43</sup>.

Speaker Ayyangar continued to be a member of the Congress Party but he resigned his membership from the Congress Parliamentary Party.

The present position is that the Speaker, like any other member, represents his constituency from which he is elected to Lok Sabha<sup>44</sup> and his seat is contested. Speaker Ayyangar who stood as a Congress candidate was opposed by three independent candidates, but no political party had put up its candidate against him. Speaker Dhillon's seat was also contested—he stood as a Congress candidate and was opposed by five candidates, of whom three were independent candidates and two party nominees.

Speaker Bhagat's seat was also contested—he stood as a Congress candidate and was opposed by nine candidates of whom eight were independent candidates and one party nominee<sup>45</sup>.

Speaker K.S. Hegde's seat was contested in 1980 and he lost to a Congress (I) candidate.

Speaker Bal Ram Jakhar's seat was contested in 1984 and 1989. He was re-elected in 1985, but he lost the election in 1989 to a Janata Dal candidate, for which there were nineteen contestants.

Speaker Rabi Ray's seat was also contested in 1991 and he was re-elected. Rabi Ray contested as a JD candidate and was opposed by seven candidates.

Speaker Shivraj V. Patil's seat was also contested in 1996 and he was re-elected as a Congress candidate from amongst 24 contestants.

Speaker Purno Agitok Sangma's seat was also contested in 1998 and he was re-elected as a Congress (INC) candidate from amongst 4 contestants.

Speaker G.M.C. Balayogi's seat was also contested in 1999 and he was re-elected as a Telegu Desam Party (TDP) candidate from amongst five contestants.

Speaker Manohar Joshi's seat was also contested in 2004 and he lost the election where the total number of contestants were seven.

Speaker Somnath Chatterjee did not contest election for the Fifteenth Lok Sabha.

Speaker Meira Kumar's seat was contested in 2014 and she lost to a Bhartiya Janata Party (BJP) candidate, for which there were 11 contestants.

44. On 19 November 1959, before the Andhra Pradesh and Madras (Alteration of Boundaries) Bill, 1959, was taken up for consideration, Speaker Ayyangar, who was in the Chair, observed as follows:

“Before we take up the next item of business, I would like to make a brief statement. This boundary matter relates to my constituency and, therefore, I do not propose sitting here. Howsoever just I may try to be, I do not want to create an impression that I am deciding one way or the other. I shall, therefore, ask the Deputy Speaker, Sardar Hukam Singh, to take the Chair and get through this Bill.”

The Speaker then vacated the Chair and did not preside over the sittings of the House while that Bill was under discussion by the House—see L.S. Deb., 19-11-1959, c. 688; 20-11-1959, c. 914; 23-11-1959, c. 1155.

On 16 May 2006 when the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Amendment Bill, 2006 and on 31 July 2006 when the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Amendment Bill, 2006, as passed again by Rajya Sabha, respectively, were taken up for consideration and passing, Speaker Somnath Chatterjee chose to abstain from presiding over the proceedings of the House, lest he should be seen as an interested party, in the passing of the Bill.

45. B.R. Bhagat lost election to a Janata Party candidate.

At the Conference of Presiding Officers in 1967, the Chairman of the Conference appointed a Committee of Presiding Officers to examine, inter alia, as to what conventions, etc., should be adopted or evolved to enable Parliament/Legislatures to function effectively<sup>46</sup>.

The Committee felt that impartiality of the Speaker being an indispensable condition of the successful working of the parliamentary democracy, it is essential that the Speaker should sever all connections with the party to which he may have belonged. In order to achieve this in principle, the Committee considered it desirable that a convention should be established to the effect that the seat from which the Speaker stands for election or re-election to the House should not be contested in the elections, and in this connection the Committee recommended the following guidelines:

Before each general election or mid-term election, as the case may be, the majority party which formed the Government before the elections should seek consensus among all the parties likely to contest at the elections whether they are agreed that the existing Speaker should be the Speaker in the new House;

If the Speaker has functioned impartially and efficiently during his tenure of office, he should be continued as a matter of course;

The consensus should be based on majority decision at a meeting of the representatives of various parties and not necessarily on unanimity. Once the decision has been arrived at to continue the existing Speaker, all parties should be debarred from putting up any candidates in opposition to him and should agree to support him against any independent candidate who may stand against him;

When the existing Speaker is elected as a member of the House, he must not contest or otherwise become the Chief Minister or a Minister. He shall be eligible for election as Speaker uncontested;

Where no consensus is reached before the election to the House, all parties are free to put up candidates for the Speaker's seat. The existing Speaker is in that case free to contest on a party ticket if he so likes;

After the elections to the House are over, the majority party should consult all the parties in the House as to their choice of the Speaker of the House. While making the selection it should be borne in mind that in circumstances prevailing in India today, it is essential that a person to be chosen as Speaker should be sufficiently high up in the political hierarchy and enjoy nearly as much prestige as the Leader of the House. If a consensus is arrived at and the Speaker is elected uncontested, the Speaker should resign from the party;

46. Known as Page Committee, after the name of its Chairman, V.S. Page, Chairman of Maharashtra Legislative Council (hereafter referred to as such). Recommendations contained in the Report of the Page Committee were adopted at the Conference of Presiding Officers held at Trivandrum (now known as Thiruvananthapuram) in October 1968.

In case consensus is not reached and the election of the Speaker is contested, the Speaker should, after election, resign from the Legislature Party;

The Speaker should after assumption of office sever all connections from controversial party politics. Further, he should not be a member of any Committee appointed by the Government. However, if any such Committee is concerned with social or constructive work, he might accept its Chairmanship;

In the case of Presidential Proclamation under article 356 of the Constitution in respect of any State, the second proviso to article 179 of the Constitution regarding the Speaker should not be suspended. Further, in such cases the provisions of the Constitution relating to the powers which the Speaker exercised before the Proclamation should not be suspended.

While the Speaker stands on party ticket for his election to the House, he may or may not continue to be the member of his party after his election as Speaker. Even when he does not sever connections with his party, he has refrained from attending any party meeting. However, a convention has, more or less, developed at the Union for the Speaker to dissociate himself from his party. Dr. N. Sanjiva Reddy resigned from the Congress Party on being elected as Speaker of Fourth Lok Sabha. Dr. G.S. Dhillon, on being chosen as Speaker in the vacancy caused by the resignation of Speaker Sanjiva Reddy and also on his re-election as Speaker of the Fifth Lok Sabha, resigned from the Congress Party in Parliament but continued to be a member of the Congress Party<sup>47</sup>.

B.R. Bhagat, K.S. Hegde, Dr. Bal Ram Jakhar, Rabi Ray, Shivraj V. Patil, Purno Agitok Sangma, G.M.C Balayogi, Manohar Joshi, Somnath Chatterjee and Meira Kumar on being chosen as Speakers, did not formally resign from the party on whose ticket they were elected to Lok Sabha. However, they affirmed that they belonged to the whole House and not to a particular party. They also refrained from attending any party meetings while holding the office.

The Tenth Schedule to the Constitution added by the Constitution (Fifty-second Amendment) Act, 1985, stipulates that a member of a House belonging to any political party shall be disqualified for being a member of the House if he voluntarily gives up his membership of such political party.<sup>48</sup> Special provision has, however, been made therein to enable a person who has been elected to the office of the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker of the Lok Sabha or of the Legislative Assembly of a State or to the office of the Deputy Chairman of the Rajya Sabha or the Chairman or the Deputy Chairman of Legislative Council of a State, to sever his connections with the political party to which he belonged and to rejoin it when he ceases to hold that office without incurring disqualification<sup>49</sup>.

Term of Office as Speaker

The Speaker holds office from the date of his election till immediately before the first meeting of Lok Sabha after the dissolution of the one to which he was elected. He is eligible for re-election. The Speaker vacates his office, if he ceases to be a member of Lok Sabha. Like any other member, he also ceases to be a member of Lok Sabha as soon as any of the contingencies provided in articles 101 and 102 arise. On the dissolution of Lok Sabha, although both the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker cease to be members of the House, only the Deputy Speaker vacates his office<sup>50</sup>.

As and when the Office of the Speaker falls vacant, a notification to that effect is published in the Gazette.

The Speaker has to discharge the functions of his office throughout his term and cannot delegate his functions to the Deputy Speaker during his absence from the station or during his illness.

The Speaker may, at any time, resign his office by writing under his hand to the Deputy Speaker<sup>51</sup>, even though the Office of the Deputy Speaker might be vacant. Similarly the letter of resignation by the Deputy Speaker has to be addressed to the Speaker even though that office might be vacant<sup>52</sup>.

49. The Tenth Schedule to the Constitution of India provides:

5. Notwithstanding anything contained in this Schedule, a person who has been elected to the Office of the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker of the House of the People or the Deputy Chairman of the Council of States or the Chairman or the Deputy Chairman of the Legislative Council of a State or the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of a State, shall not be disqualified under this Schedule,—

- (a) If he, by reason of his election to such Office, voluntarily gives up the membership of the political party to which he belonged immediately before such election and does not, so long as he continues to hold such office thereafter, rejoin that political party or become a member of another political party; or
- (b) If he, having given up by reason of his election to such office his membership of the political party to which he belonged immediately before such election, rejoins such political party after he ceases to hold such office.

50. See art. 94.

51. Art. 94(b).

In the old Legislative Assembly, the letter of resignation was required to be addressed to the Governor-General, who was also vested with the authority to approve the election of the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker-s. 63C as set out in the Ninth Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935.

52. M.A. Ayyangar resigned from the Office of the Deputy Speaker of Lok Sabha on the afternoon of 7 March 1956. The letter of resignation was addressed to the Speaker and sent to the Secretariat even though the Office of the Speaker was then vacant. The Secretary informed Lok Sabha on 8 March 1956 of the resignation of the Deputy Speaker—see L.S.S. Notfn. No. 496-T/56. Gaz. Ex (1-1), 7-3-1956 and L.S. Deb., 8-3-1956, c. 809.

Where the Speaker wishes to resign his office, the formalities with which he has to comply are as follows:

- (i) the letter of resignation should be in writing—that is to say, it may be written in hand or typewritten and should bear his signature at the end; and
- (ii) the letter should be addressed to the Deputy Speaker—this means that it should be addressed to him by designation and not by name.

The letter must bear a date and if the text of the letter is silent as to the date from which resignation is to become effective, the resignation becomes effective from the date of the letter. If the letter does not bear any date, it becomes effective from the date on which it is received by the Deputy Speaker or, by the Secretary-General.

The House is informed of the resignation of the Speaker by the Deputy Speaker and if the Office of the Deputy Speaker is vacant, by the Secretary-General who receives the letter of resignation in that case.

The resignation is notified in the Gazette and the Bulletin<sup>53</sup>.

Right of Speaker to Resign on Dissolution of the House<sup>54</sup>

Although on the dissolution of the Lok Sabha/Vidhan Sabha, both the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker cease to be members of the House like other members, in effect only the Deputy Speaker vacates his office. Under the second proviso to article 94 (which corresponds to article 179) it is enjoined that whenever the Lok Sabha is dissolved, the Speaker shall not vacate his office until immediately before the first meeting of the Lok Sabha after dissolution. A view may be taken that the Speaker cannot resign after dissolution of the House and that the restriction placed on him in this behalf is deliberate since even after the dissolution of the House, the Speaker has to perform certain functions such as managing the affairs of the Secretariat, forwarding Bills passed by the Houses to the President, etc.

Besides, article 95 contemplates that when the Office of the Speaker is vacant, the duties of his Office shall be performed by the Deputy Speaker or if the Office of the Deputy Speaker is also vacant, his duties may be performed by such other member of the House as the President may appoint for the purpose.

The question as to whether a Speaker can resign his office when the House is dissolved and there is no one to perform the functions of his office, was considered in depth on a reference to that effect made by a member of the Eighth Lok Sabha. The facts of the case are as follows:

53. See, for instance, L.S.S. Notfn. No. 496-T/56, in Gaz. ex. (1-1), 7-3-1956, and Bn. (II), 7-3-1956, para 2938.

N. Sanjiva Reddy resigned the Office of the Speaker (4th Lok Sabha) on 19 July 1969 at 17.00 hours. The letter of resignation was addressed to the Deputy Speaker. The Deputy Speaker recorded the time of receipt thereon. It was published in Bn. (II) of that date. No announcement was made in the House.

See also L.S. Deb., 5-1-1976, c. 1. The Deputy Speaker informed Lok Sabha that Dr. G.S. Dhillon had resigned the Office of the Speaker on 1 December 1975 at 17.00 hours.

54. See Subhash C. Kashyap: "Speaker's Right to Resign", JPI, Vol. XXXIV, No. 3, September 1988.

The Andhra Pradesh Legislative Assembly was dissolved on 22 November 1984. The Speaker (N.R. Venkataratnam) continued in office in accordance with the second proviso to article 179. However, before the new Assembly could be constituted, he sought election to Lok Sabha and was declared duly elected. He resigned from the Office of the Speaker on 10 January 1985. Subsequently, he wrote to the Secretary-General, Lok Sabha that by virtue of the second proviso to article 179 he would still continue as Speaker of the Andhra Pradesh Legislative Assembly, though without any remuneration. According to him, the resignation remained ineffective in view of the second proviso to article 179.

The question that arose for consideration as a result of the above reference was whether Venkataratnam's resignation from the Speakership of the Andhra Pradesh Legislative Assembly was called for and whether it remained ineffective in view of the second proviso to article 179.

One legal opinion in the matter was that having chosen to be elected the Speaker of a representative body, Venkataratnam had to hold on until immediately before the first meeting of the Assembly after the dissolution and that the Speaker of an Assembly could not exercise the right of resignation after the dissolution of the Assembly as there were certain functions which had to be exercised by the Speaker even after the Assembly was dissolved. Also any interpretation to the effect that the Speaker could resign after the Assembly had been dissolved would render the proviso ineffective.

The matter was examined in depth by the Secretary-General, Lok Sabha, who felt that the following points merited further consideration:

- (i) Article 179 is exactly similar to article 94, the latter applying to the Speaker, Lok Sabha. There is a somewhat similar provision in respect of the Vice-President in article 67 which provides for the term of the Vice-President being five years but says that (a) he may resign, (b) he may be removed from office, and (c) he shall continue even after the expiration of the term until a successor is elected. The question arises whether (c) would prevent a Vice-President from resigning his office at will. If this interpretation were to be accepted then perhaps (c) will over-ride not only proviso (a) regarding resignation but also proviso (b) regarding removal from office because as contra-distinguished from Lok Sabha, the Rajya Sabha is a continuing House. Also a situation arose when Vice-President, V.V. Giri who was acting as the President, consequent on the demise of the erstwhile President Dr. Zakir Husain on 3 May 1969, decided to contest the Presidential election and though not required under the law to do so, decided to resign his office before filing his nomination papers. Even though there was no President in office to whom he could address his letter of resignation and even though there was no successor to enter upon his office, Giri did resign and his resignation became immediately effective. Even though it was not a case of expiration of a term the precedent seems relevant and seems to point out that a more viable interpretation would be that (c) is only an enabling provision which enables the Vice-President and enjoins upon him to continue to hold office even after the expiration of the term until his successor enters upon his office. It cannot be interpreted to mean that a Vice-President can be compelled to stay in office against his wish and cannot resign at will.

- (ii) Article 179 inter alia provides that (a) Speaker shall vacate his office if he ceases to be a member of the Assembly, (b) he may resign at any time, and (c) he may be removed from his office... etc. There are two provisos to the article. The first proviso specifically refers to removal from office which is mentioned in clause (c). The second proviso specifically refers to vacation of the seat which is mentioned in clause (b). There is no proviso referring to resignation which is mentioned in clause (b). It would thus seem that the second proviso is only an enabling provision which has to be read with clause (a). Since clause (a) categorically states that the Speaker shall vacate his office if he ceases to be a member, it was necessary to add the proviso to say that he shall not vacate office even after ceasing to be a member in the case of dissolution of the Assembly. The second proviso does not stand in the way of a Speaker resigning "at any time" under clause (b) and it could not be the intention of the article to compel a high functionary like the Speaker to continue in office against his will.
- (iii) The interpretation that the Speaker may resign at will at any time despite the second proviso does not render the second proviso ineffective because as stated above the proviso was necessary for enabling a Speaker to continue in office after he ceases to be a member on the dissolution of the House.
- (iv) It is very significant that clause (a) uses the word "vacate" and the second proviso also uses the word "vacate" and does not use the word "resign." If the intention of the Constitution-makers was to preclude resignation also, they would have certainly said in the second proviso that the Speaker shall not vacate or resign. In fact, they did not even use the common connotation term "shall continue" which is used for the Vice-President in article 67.
- (v) As for performing of the duties of the Speaker in case he resigns after the dissolution of the Assembly, the matter has been considered at the All India Presiding Officers and Secretaries Conferences more than once. For example, when at the Conference in 1976, the following question was raised "how the duties attached to the Office of the Speaker shall be carried on in case the Speaker resigns or dies or is otherwise incapacitated during the period of dissolution of the Assembly?", it was fully accepted that the Speaker could so resign after the dissolution of the Assembly. Also, other eventualities like death and incapacity were envisaged. In either of these cases, there was a problem of someone discharging the duties of the Speaker. Even if by so interpreting the second proviso to article 179, the resignation of the Speaker was barred, the problem remained in case of death or incapacity which could not be prevented by any interpretation of the proviso. At the Presiding Officers Conference, it was felt by the Chair that the Constitution was silent on the point as to who will discharge the duties of the Speaker in such an eventuality. However, he felt that the Governor or the President could do the needful and the administration of the Secretariat could be carried on through the Chief Minister or the Prime Minister, as the case may be.

- (vi) It is understood that an eventuality of there being no Speaker after the dissolution of an Assembly had actually arisen in Himachal Pradesh where the Speaker was removed from his office by the Legislative Assembly on 14 December 1984, and the Assembly was dissolved on 23 January 1985 without another Speaker being elected.
- (vii) So far as the question of addressing the resignation letter to the Deputy Speaker is concerned, our consistent approach has been that a letter has to be and can be addressed to the Office of the Deputy Speaker even if the office happens to be vacant. In fact, even in V.V. Giri's case under article 67, the fact that the office of the President to whom the letter of resignation was to be addressed happened to be vacant at that time, did not prevent Giri from resigning. The then Attorney-General was also consulted and it was found that while there was no provision in the Constitution to govern such a situation, article 67 also did not provide for the resignation becoming effective only after acceptance and as such it became effective on resignation. Article 67 in the case of Vice-President and so also articles 94 and 179 in the case of Speaker, Lok Sabha and State Legislatures, respectively specifically contemplate a right to resign and the resignation becomes effective as soon as the resignation is tendered<sup>55</sup>.

In the light of above, Secretary-General, Lok Sabha, sought the considered opinion of the Attorney-General on the following points:

- (a) whether the second proviso to article 179 prevented N.R. Venkataratnam from resigning from his Office of the Speaker, Andhra Pradesh Legislative Assembly;
- (b) whether despite his resignation he continued to be Speaker of the Andhra Pradesh Legislative Assembly, i.e. whether his resignation has not become effective immediately after it was made.

Endorsing the views of the Secretary-General, Lok Sabha, in the matter, the learned Attorney-General, observed inter alia:

The circumstance that there is no Deputy Speaker because of the dissolution of the Assembly should not deprive the Speaker of his right to resign. This is on the principle of the maxim of law 'impotentia excusat legem' or 'lex non cogit ad impossibilia', i.e., when there is a necessary or invincible disability to perform the mandatory part of the law that impotentia excuses. The law does not compel one to do that which one cannot possibly perform.

This view is re-inforced if one refers to article 180. Article 180 provides that while the Office of the Speaker is vacant, the duties of Office shall be performed by the Deputy

55. Under the Constitution, the resignation of constitutional functionaries like the Vice-President and the Speaker does not depend upon the acceptance by any authority before being effective. In Union of India v. Gopal Chandra Misra (A.I.R. 1978 SC 694), the Supreme Court observed that in the case of a Government servant, resignation becomes effective only when it is accepted by the competent authority, but not so in the case of a High Court Judge when he resigns under proviso (a) to art. 217 (1) of the Constitution. In his case, resignation becomes effective and the tenure stands terminated on the date from which he, of his own volition, chooses to quit office. The position would appear to be the same in the case of the aforesaid constitutional functionaries.

Speaker or if the Office of the Deputy Speaker is also vacant, by such member of the Assembly as the Governor may appoint for the purpose. Therefore, a situation is contemplated by the Constitution where both the Office of the Speaker and of the Deputy Speaker are vacant. Therefore, merely because the Assembly is dissolved, and there is no Deputy Speaker, it cannot disable the Speaker from tendering his resignation. It is true that when both the Offices of the Speaker and Deputy Speaker are vacant, the Governor may appoint such member of the Assembly as the Speaker and when there is a dissolution of the Assembly, there will be no member of the Assembly to be appointed as Speaker by the Governor. But this should not militate against the right of the Speaker to resign...

As to the specific points on which opinion was sought, the Attorney-General opined: “(i) the second proviso to article 179 does not prevent N.R. Venkataratnam from resigning his office; and (ii) his resignation became effective when he tendered the resignation.”

Removal of Speaker or Deputy Speaker

The Speaker or the Deputy Speaker is removable from his office by a resolution of Lok Sabha passed by a majority of all the then members of the House. The term ‘all the then members’ in article 94(c) means the actual membership of the House, no account being taken of the seats which are vacant<sup>56</sup>. At least fourteen days’ notice has to be given of the intention to move such a resolution. In computing the period of fourteen days, both the terminal days are excluded<sup>57</sup>.

A member wishing to give notice of a resolution for the removal of the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker, is required to do so in writing to the Secretary-General<sup>58</sup>. The notice may be given by two or more members jointly. On receipt of notice, a motion for leave to move the resolution is entered in the List of Business in the name of the members concerned on a day fixed by the Speaker provided that the day so fixed has to be any day after fourteen days from the date of the receipt of notice of the resolution<sup>59</sup>.

56. According to Speaker Mavalankar, the expression “all the then members of the House” means that “there has to be a majority of live membership” and not latent membership, or in other words, a majority of ‘members chosen and living’ as the expression is used by the American writers. This is made amply clear by prefixing the words “the then” to the word “members”.

According to Justice M.C. Setalvad, former Attorney-General of India, “It is a majority of ‘all the then members’ of the House. In other words, though the total membership may consist, say of 200 members, half a dozen seats thereof may, for one reason or other, be vacant or unfilled. If so, ‘all the then members’ would be 200 minus these six so that the majority will have to be a majority out of the remaining 194 members”.

57. Maxwell, 10th ed. p. 351.

58. Rule 200(1).

59. Rule 200(2).

A notice of a resolution signed by 21 members for the removal of Speaker Mavalankar was received on 3 December 1951. The resolution was included as the first item in the List of Business for 18 December 1954, which was circulated to members on 14 December 1954.

A notice of a resolution signed by 23 members for the removal of Speaker Sardar Hukum Singh was received on 8 November 1966. Motion for leave to move the resolution was included in the List of Business for 24 November 1966. The item was included after the items re. papers to be laid, in accordance with Direction 2.

A resolution for removal of the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker received without due notice is not proceeded with<sup>60</sup>.

On 6 March 1968, a member of the Opposition in the Punjab Legislative Assembly was named by the Speaker and thereafter ordered to be removed from the House. Subsequently, the Speaker agreed to drop the matter on an assurance of good conduct given by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. This led to pandemonium and the Speaker adjourned the House for half an hour.

When the House re-assembled, two identical motions, expressing lack of confidence in the Speaker for his failure (i) to maintain the dignity and decorum of the House, and (ii) to have his orders duly implemented in the House, were tabled. The motions were admitted and the Speaker observed that he would fix a date for discussion.

When the House met on 7 March, the Speaker, in a ruling on points of order raised, observed that the no-confidence motions against him, admitted on the previous day, were “violative of article 179(c) of the Constitution and should be deemed to have not been moved at all”. This led to a continuous pandemonium and eventually the Speaker adjourned the House for two months, which created a serious crisis as the Budget for 1968-69 had yet to be passed by the Assembly.

Referring to these incidents, Speaker Reddy observed:

The Speaker’s action in revising his ruling regarding the removal of a member led to subsequent developments. However, the Speaker was within his rights to change his order in the changed circumstances.

We have to remember that the Office of the Speaker is an august one. He is one who should be shown all respect by every section of the House. In fact, he cannot discharge his onerous responsibilities effectively if he is denied such respect. It follows that motions, or resolutions for the removal of the Speaker should not be brought forward in a light-hearted manner. There are constitutional provisions, rules and conventions in this regard which should be followed scrupulously<sup>61</sup>.

At the sitting of Lok Sabha, while any resolution for the removal of the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker from his office is under consideration, the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker, as the case may be, cannot preside even though he is present in the House<sup>62</sup>. Subject to the aforesaid provisions, a member of the Panel of Chairpersons can preside in the absence of the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker, as the case may be.

60. A notice of motion of no-confidence in the Deputy Speaker of the Provisional Parliament, which was received on 11 October 1951, was not proceeded with on the ground that the notice was short of the prescribed period of fourteen days, as the Session was scheduled to adjourn sine die on 16 October 1951.

61. In his address at the Emergent Conference of Presiding Officers on 6 April 1968.

62. Art. 96(1) and Rule 201(1).

It has been held that consideration by the House of a motion for leave to move the resolution does not amount to consideration of the resolution for removal, and it would not be unconstitutional if the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker, as the case may be, does not vacate the Chair while a motion

The Speaker has the right to speak and otherwise to take part in the proceedings of Lok Sabha while any resolution for his removal from office is under consideration in the House and is entitled to vote only in the first instance on such resolution or any other matter during such proceedings but not in the case of an equality of votes<sup>63</sup>.

The member in whose name the motion for leave to move the resolution stands in the List of Business, except when he wishes to withdraw it, moves the motion when called upon to do so, but no speech is permitted at this stage<sup>64</sup>.

The Chair thereupon places the motion before the House and requests those members who are in favour of leave being granted to rise in their places and a count is taken without recording any names. If not less than fifty members rise accordingly, the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker or the person presiding, as the case may be, declares that the leave is granted and that the resolution will be taken up on such day, not being more than ten days from the date on which leave is asked for, as he may appoint. If less than fifty members rise, the Chair informs the member that he has not the leave of the House<sup>65</sup>. On the appointed day the resolution is included in the List of Business to be taken up after the question and before any other business for the day is entered upon<sup>66</sup>.

for leave to move the resolution for his removal is under consideration in the House. [A.J. Faridi v. R. V. Dhulekar (Chairman of U.P. Legislative Council) A.I.R. 1963, Allahabad 75]. However, as a matter of propriety, Rule 20 1(1) provides that the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker, as the case may be, shall vacate the Chair even when a motion for leave to move the resolution is taken up.

When a resolution for the removal of the Speaker was moved in Lok Sabha on 18 December 1954, the Deputy Speaker presided over the sitting of Lok Sabha. The Speaker did not attend the sitting of the House on that day.

On 24 November 1966, when the motion for leave to move the resolution for removal of the Speaker was taken up, the Deputy Speaker presided from the commencement of the sitting. The Speaker took the Chair soon after the leave to move the resolution was not granted by the House—L.S. Deb., 24-11-1966, cc. 536-39.

On 15 April 1987, when the motion for leave to move the resolution for removal of the Speaker was taken up, the Deputy Speaker presided. The Speaker did not attend the sitting of the House for the whole day.

63. Art. 96(2). This is different from the normal provision. Under article 100(1), the Chairman or the Speaker or any other person acting as such cannot vote in the first instance, but shall have and exercise a casting vote in the case of an equality of votes.
64. Rule 201(2). The Resolution for removal of the Speaker of Lok Sabha was moved on 18 December 1954, by a member who was the first signatory of the notice. No speech was made by him at that time.
65. Rule 201(3).
66. Rule 202.

On 18 December 1954, when leave to move the resolution for removal of the Speaker of the Lok Sabha was granted by the House, more than 50 members having risen in their places, the Deputy Speaker who was in the Chair fixed the time for discussion on the same day at 15.30 hours, and two hours (15.30 to 17.30 hours) were allotted for the discussion on the resolution. The resolution was discussed and negatived by the House—L.S. Deb., 18-12-1954, cc. 3398-456.

The same procedure was followed on 15 April 1987, on a similar resolution for the removal of the Speaker of Lok Sabha. The resolution was discussed and negatived by the House—L.S. Deb., 15-4-1987, c. 564.

Except with the permission of the Speaker or the person presiding, a speech on the resolution is not permitted to exceed fifteen minutes in duration. The mover of the resolution when moving the same may, however, speak for a longer time with the permission of the Chair<sup>67</sup>.

A resolution for removal of the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker must be specific with respect to charges and the members should refer to specific points while speaking on such a resolution.

The Deputy Speaker made the following observations when a point of order was raised regarding the admissibility of the resolution for the removal of Speaker Mavalankar<sup>68</sup>:

Unless there are specific charges which could be met, and of which due notice has been given, this Resolution is clearly out of order. But as the hon. Leader of the House said, with respect to such a serious matter, I do not want to disallow this motion on a technicality...

Though prima facie this Resolution has not been worded properly, yet since this happens to be a Resolution for the removal of the Speaker, I would say that I am going to admit it now; of course subject to hon. members supporting it, I am going to allow it. I do not want to stand on technicalities because it is one of first impression, and a matter of this kind ought to be thrashed out in the House. To obviate the difficulty and to focus attention on particular points, whoever speaks first on behalf of the signatories to this Resolution may start by saying—one, two, three—these are the things relating to questions and again, one, two, three—these relate to adjournment motions. So far as ‘etc.’ is concerned, ‘etc.’ is not a legal language. Therefore, I am not going to allow any discussion further or allow ‘etc.’ to be clothed with flesh and blood here on the floor of the House. Therefore, I will allow discussion only on these points. Condoning the fact that regularity has not been adopted in this matter of giving the details and making it more specific, I would ask that whichever hon. member might begin must set out the three or four questions which he intends placing before the House for the purpose of focusing attention with respect to the questions, and also the three or four adjournment motions, which he wants to place before the House in respect of adjournment motions. No other subject which the hon. Speaker had dealt with during the course of his regime would be allowed to be referred to merely because the word ‘etc.’ is there. Therefore, the discussion will be specific. I admit this Resolution subject to all these observations.

Again, in a similar situation, the Deputy Speaker made the following observations regarding the admissibility of the resolution for removal of Speaker Jakhar<sup>69</sup>:

...Further, the notice suffers from many infirmities which I should like to place before the House. As members are aware, article 94 of the Constitution confers upon the House the power to remove the Speaker by a resolution passed by “a majority of all the then members of the House.” Rules 200 to 203 framed under this article lay down the procedure to be followed in this respect. But that is not all. Such a resolution is governed not only by the aforesaid article of the Constitution and the rules mentioned above, but also by article 96 of the Constitution and the general rule applicable to other resolution, viz. Rule 173 of the Rules of Procedure.

Article 96(2) provides, inter alia, that the Speaker shall have the right to speak in, and otherwise to take part in the proceedings of the House when any resolution for his removal from office is under consideration in the House.

67. Rule 203. The time fixed for speeches in the case of resolution regarding removal of Speaker Mavalankar was 15 minutes, except the first Speaker in support of the resolution who was given 20 to 25 minutes.

68. L.S. Deb., 18-12-1954, cc. 3300-01.

69. L.S. Deb., 15-4-1987, cc. 562-64.

Rule 173 of the Rules of Procedure, inter alia, provides that in order that a resolution may be admissible, it shall satisfy the following conditions, namely:—

- (i) It shall be clearly and precisely expressed;
- (ii) It shall raise substantially one definite issue.

In the light of the foregoing, the resolution should have been specific with respect to the charges. The notice under consideration refers to ‘rulings given by the Speaker of the House, including the one on 19 March 1987, on the question of privilege and adjournment motions.... It also speaks of denial by the Speaker to the members their right to raise “vital constitutional issues and procedural issues and burning problems”. It is, therefore, not at all specific with respect to the charges.

Viewed in the light of the constitutional provisions as well as the requirements of the Rules of Procedure, as mentioned above, I am of the view that it is not a matter of mere technicality but one of substance. As the Speaker has the right to participate in and to vote on such a resolution, it is only fit and proper that he must know precisely what the charges against him are so that he could reply to them.

Principles of natural justice also demand the same. Inasmuch as the charges are not specific, are not “clearly and precisely expressed” and do not raise “one definite issue”, of which due notice has been given, the resolution would be prima facie out of order.

...However, notwithstanding all this, I would not like to stand between the members who have given the notice and the rest of the House. Since this happens to be a resolution given under article 94 of the Constitution and concerns the removal of the Speaker himself.

I would leave it to the House to decide for itself whether leave should be granted to the member...

Speaker *Pro tem

When the offices of both the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker fall vacant, the duties of the Office of the Speaker are performed by such member of Lok Sabha as the President may appoint for the purpose<sup>70</sup>. The person so appointed is known as the Speaker pro tem and this nomenclature distinguishes him from the Speaker elected by the House. After his appointment, the Speaker pro tem continues in office till the Speaker is chosen.

After the General Elections, the Speaker pro tem is appointed to administer oath/affirmation to the newly elected members of Lok Sabha and conduct the election of the Speaker. He vacates Office soon after the Speaker is chosen by the House. The Speaker pro tem takes oath as a member of Lok Sabha before the President in Rashtrapati Bhavan at the earliest available opportunity and in any case before he actually takes the Chair to conduct the proceedings of the House. He signs the Roll of Members immediately on taking the Chair in the House which signifies his taking seat in the House.

The name of a member to be appointed as Speaker pro tem is suggested by the Prime Minister, who, in his discretion may place the matter before the Cabinet. Normally the seniormost member of the Lok Sabha is chosen for appointment, as the Speaker pro tem<sup>71</sup>, and orders of the President for such appointment, as per practice so far followed after each General Election, are taken by the Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs and forwarded to Lok Sabha Secretariat for notification<sup>72</sup>.

On receipt of the order duly signed by the President, a notification is issued in the Gazette. A paragraph is also issued simultaneously in the Bulletin for the information of members<sup>73</sup>.

On 7 March 1956, M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, the then Deputy Speaker and the only candidate proposed to the vacancy in the Office of the Speaker, caused by the demise of G.V. Mavalankar, resigned his office of Deputy Speaker in view of his impending election as Speaker on the next day. At 17.30 hours, after receipt of resignation, the Secretary submitted a note to the President informing him that both the offices of Speaker and Deputy Speaker were vacant and that the Prime Minister had suggested that Sardar Hukam Singh, a member of Lok Sabha be appointed to perform the duties of the Speaker until the election of the Speaker by Lok Sabha on 8 March 1956, the date previously appointed by the President for the purpose. The President approved the order.

71. B. Das was appointed as Speaker pro tem in 1952. Seth Govind Das was appointed as Speaker pro tem in 1957, 1962, 1967 and 1971. Jagjivan Ram was appointed as Speaker pro tem in 1980 and 1985. Prof. N.G. Ranga was appointed as Speaker pro tem in 1989. Indrajit Gupta was appointed as Speaker pro tem in 1991, 1996, 1998 and 1999. On the constitution of 14th Lok Sabha (2004), Somnath Chatterjee, the seniormost member was appointed by the Hon'ble President as Speaker pro tem to perform the duties of the office of Speaker from the commencement of sitting of 14th Lok Sabha on 2 June, 2004 until the commencement of sitting on 4 June, 2004. As Somnath Chatterjee became a candidate for the post of Speaker, Lok Sabha, Hon'ble President, by his another order, appointed Balasaheb Vikhe Patil as Speaker pro tem to perform the duties of the office of the Speaker from the commencement of the sitting of Lok Sabha on 4 June, 2004 till the election of Speaker. Manikrao Hodlya Gavit was appointed as Speaker pro tem in 2009. They were members of Lok Sabha for maximum terms at the time of their appointments. There was a departure in 1956 when Sardar Hukam Singh who was not the seniormost member of the House but was being proposed for office of the Deputy Speaker later, was appointed as Speaker pro tem. In 1977, D.N. Tiwari was appointed as Speaker pro tem. He too was not the seniormost member of the House.
  72. In 1952, 1957, 1962, 1967 and 1971, orders of the President for appointment of the Speaker pro tem were obtained by the Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs and published in the Gaz. by them. In 1977, 1980, 1985, 1989, 1991, 1996, 1998, 1999, 2004 and 2009 orders were obtained by the Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs but were forwarded to the Lok Sabha Secretariat for publication. These were published in Gaz. Ex. (1-1) 38/I(2)-I, 24-3-1977; Gaz. Ex. (1-1) 38/I(2)/80/T; 16.1.1980.
Gaz. Ex. (1-1) 38/I(2)/85/T, 7-1-1985; Gaz. Ex. (1-1) 38/I(2)/89/T, 12-12-1989; Gaz. Ex. (1-1) 38/I(2)/91/T, 5-7-1991; Gaz. Ex. (1-1) 38/I(2)/96/T, 23-5-1996; Gaz. Ex. (1-1) 38/I(2)/98/T, 28.3.1998.
Gaz. Ex. (1-1) 38/I(2)/99/T, 16-10-1999; Ex. (1-1) 38/I(2)/2004/T, 31-5-2004; and Gaz. Ex. (1-1) 38/I(2)/2009/T, 29.5.2009.
  73. If orders regarding appointment of the Speaker pro tem are obtained by the Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs direct without communicating the proposal of the Prime Minister or the Cabinet to the Lok Sabha Secretariat, the notification in the Gazette is issued by the Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs themselves and a copy of the order of the President forwarded to the Secretariat—For instance see DPA/Notfn. No. S.34/52, 17-4-1952, Gaz. Ex. (1-1) 17-4-1952 and No. S.34/52, 15-5-1952, Gaz. Ex. (1-1), 15-5-1952.

The order was immediately published in the Gazette<sup>74</sup> and also in the Bulletin<sup>75</sup>.

The Office of the Speaker having become vacant immediately before the first sitting of the Second Lok Sabha in accordance with the second proviso to article 94, the President appointed Seth Govind Das, the seniormost member as Speaker pro tem for 10 and 11 May 1957, till the election of Speaker.

The Speaker pro tem has all the powers of the Speaker under the Constitution, Rules of Procedure or otherwise<sup>76</sup>. He, however, functions only till the House elects the Speaker<sup>77</sup>.

Oath by Speaker

The Speaker on assuming his office is not required to make and subscribe any oath or affirmation. The only oath or affirmation he makes and subscribes is as a member of Lok Sabha which he does before his election as Speaker. Likewise, Deputy Speaker is also not required to make and subscribe any oath on assuming his office.

Dress of the Speaker

From 1921 to 1946, the Speakers of the Central Legislative Assembly used to wear robes and wigs normally while presiding over the meetings of the Assembly. There were, however, occasions when the Presiding Officers did not put on the ceremonial dress.

In 1937, a notification was issued from the office of Secretary to the Governor-General prescribing the dress to be worn by the Presiding Officers of the Council of State and of the Central Legislative Assembly and by the Presiding Officers of Legislative Councils and Legislative Assemblies in Governor's provinces. The Conference of Presiding Officers held in July 1939, considered the questions as to what should be the dress of the Presiding Officer (i) while in the House, and (ii) while attending State functions, vis-a-vis the above notification. The consensus was that the sartorial notification was not binding on them.

77. As the Office of both Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the Karnataka Legislative Council were vacant, the Governor of Karnataka, under article 184(1), appointed another member of the Council to perform the duties of the Office of the Chairman with effect from the 1 July 1984, until the election of the Chairman. The Council met twice thereafter on 29 November 1984 and on 18 March 1985 but no date was fixed for the election of the Chairman. As a protest the Opposition members gave notice of a resolution for removal of the Chairman pro tem. In the meanwhile, Notification dated 19 March 1985 was issued by the Governor fixing 8 April 1985 as the date for election of the Chairman. However, the Chairman pro tem resigned from his Office with effect from 26 March 1985 and the notice of the resolution for his removal became ineffective.

There has been no instance in Lok Sabha when the Speaker pro tem functioned as a regular Speaker for any length of time. There has also been no instance in Lok Sabha when a notice of resolution for removal of the Speaker pro tem was tabled by any member.

When G.V. Mavalankar assumed the Office of the Speaker of the Central Legislative Assembly in 1946, the use of any robe or wig by the Speaker was discarded for the first time. As Speaker of the First Lok Sabha also, he did not wear any formal dress. That practice continues.

Office of the Deputy Speaker

The Office of the Deputy Speaker in India (known as Deputy President till 1947) is as old as the Central Legislature itself. A Deputy Speaker, as in the case of Speaker, ceased to hold Office if he ceased to be member of the Assembly. He could resign his office by writing under his hand addressed to the Governor-General and could be removed by a vote of the Assembly with the concurrence of the Governor-General<sup>78</sup>.

Section 22 of the Government of India Act, 1935, inter alia, laid down provisions with regard to the election, duties, vacation of Office and salary of the 'Deputy Speaker', but these provisions never came into force due to the non-implementation of the federal part of the Act. Although this section of the Act of 1935 was brought into operation after Independence by the India (Provisional Constitution) Order, 1947, provisions relating to the Deputy Speaker contained therein were omitted.

Election of Deputy Speaker

The rule regarding the election of Deputy Speaker was for the first time made in 1920 by the Governor-General, and all elections to this office during the period 1921-47 were held by a ballot in accordance with the procedure prescribed in the aforesaid rule<sup>79</sup>.

In the event of a contest, the candidate who received the majority of votes was declared by the Speaker as duly elected but if the Governor-General withheld his approval to any election, a fresh election, was to be held in accordance with the prescribed procedure. A member whose election had not been approved by the Governor-General could not be proposed as a candidate during the continuance of that particular Assembly<sup>80</sup>. An announcement regarding Governor-General's message approving the election of a particular candidate as the Deputy Speaker was made by the Speaker.

Sachidanand Sinha was the first Deputy Speaker of the Central Legislative Assembly, elected on 3 February 1921. The announcement regarding the approval of his election by the Governor-General was made in the House on 22 February 1921; Sinha resigned following appointment as member of the Executive Council of the Governor of Bihar and Orissa. While his resignation was announced on 1 September 1921, his successor, Sir Jamsetjee Jajeebhoy, was elected on 21 September 1921<sup>81</sup>. He was followed in Office by Diwan Bahadur T. Rangachariar (4-2-1924), Sir Muhammad Yaqub (31-1-1927), Dr. H.S. Gour (11-7-1930), Shanmukham Chetty (19-1-1931), Abdul Matin Chaudhuri (21-3-1933), Akhil Chandra Dutta<sup>82</sup> (5-2-1935), and Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan (5-2-1946), who remained in office till the midnight of 15 August 1947.

In 1947, while adapting the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly for the Constituent Assembly (Legislative), the relevant rule was omitted, and the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) Rules, 1947 did not provide for the Office of the Deputy Speaker. But in 1948, during the Second Session of the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) which commenced on 28 January 1948, need was felt for having a Deputy Speaker to preside over the sittings of the Assembly in the absence of the Speaker. Necessary amendments were accordingly made in the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) Rules and the Office of the Deputy Speaker was revived.

Like the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker of the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) continued under article 379 as the Deputy Speaker of Provisional Parliament on the enforcement of the Constitution.

Constitutional Provisions and Rules regarding Election of Deputy Speaker: The election of Deputy Speaker is now governed by provisions of article 93. In 1952, while adapting the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) Rules for Lok Sabha, radical changes were introduced in the procedure regarding election of the Deputy Speaker. As in the case of the Speaker, the election of the Deputy Speaker by ballot was eliminated and the election was to be by open voting in the House. Even when there was only one candidate for the Office, the motion regarding his election was formally to be put to the House and carried.

The changes made in the rule thereafter have only been of a minor nature and the procedure for election of the Deputy Speaker broadly continues to be the same<sup>83</sup>.

Election of Deputy Speaker under new Rule: The procedure for choosing the Deputy Speaker is the same as for the Speaker, except that the date for the election of Deputy Speaker is fixed by the Speaker<sup>84</sup>. Members are informed of the date of election through the Bulletin.

The first election to the office of Deputy Speaker under the Constitution and the present Rule was held on 30 May 1952.

81. Sir Jajeebhoy was elected by a casting vote because of a tie between him and his rival, Dr. H.S. Gour.

82. Since the life of the Assembly was extended from time to time upto 1945, Dutta remained in Office for about a decade.

83. So far, in Fifteen Lok Sabha, 14 members have occupied the Office of Deputy Speaker. Out of them, 4 have been from the ruling party and rest of them have been from other, mainly opposition parties. Thus a practice is in vogue wherein the Office of Deputy Speaker is occupied by a member other than the ruling party.

84. Rule 8(1).

The form of motion for choosing the Deputy Speaker is the same as for choosing the Speaker.

As specific rules have been made for dealing with motions for choosing the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker, such motions are treated as distinct from other general motions and as such no speech can be made by a member at the time of moving his motion<sup>85</sup>.

The election of the Deputy Speaker is notified in the Gazette by the Secretariat.

Term of Office as Deputy Speaker

The Deputy Speaker holds office from the date of his election till the dissolution of Lok Sabha. He is eligible for re-election.

The Deputy Speaker must vacate his office if he ceases to be a member of Lok Sabha.

He may even cease to be a member of Lok Sabha as soon as any of the contingencies provided in articles 101 and 102 arises.

As and when the Office of the Deputy Speaker falls vacant, a notification to that effect is published in the Gazette.

The procedure regarding resignation from the Office of Deputy Speaker is the same as for the Speaker. He may, at any time, resign his office by writing under his hand to the Speaker. The letter of resignation has to be addressed to the Speaker even though the Office of the Speaker might be vacant<sup>86</sup>.

The letter should not only be sent/put in the course of transmission, but should be actually received by the Speaker. The letter of resignation can be withdrawn before the same is actually received by the Speaker<sup>87</sup>. The House is informed of the resignation of the Deputy Speaker by the Speaker and if the Office of the Speaker is vacant, then by the Secretary-General who receives the letter of resignation in that case.

The resignation is notified in the Gazette.

85. When the motion for choosing the Deputy Speaker had been moved on 23 April 1962, a member submitted that though the rules did not so permit, he may be allowed to avail himself of the right of members to speak on any motion. The Speaker observed that specific rules having been laid down for choosing the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker, such motions were treated as distinct from the motions in general. The member was, therefore, not allowed to speak on the motion for choosing the Deputy Speaker.

86. M.A. Ayyangar resigned from the Office of the Deputy Speaker of Lok Sabha on the afternoon of 7 March 1956. The letter of resignation was addressed to the Speaker, Lok Sabha, and sent to the Secretariat even though the Office of Speaker was then vacant. Secretary informed Lok Sabha on 8 March 1956, of the resignation by the Deputy Speaker—see L.S.S. Notfn. No. 496-T(I)/56, 7-3-1956; Gaz. Ex. (1-1) 7-3-1956; and L.S. Deb., (I) 8-3-1956. c. 409.

87. On 27 June 1983, a letter was received from G. Lakshmanan, Deputy Speaker, Lok Sabha, addressed to Speaker, Lok Sabha, intimating that his letter dated 25 June 1983 sent by him from Madras by registered post resigning from Office of Deputy Speaker, Lok Sabha, might be treated as cancelled and no action be taken thereon. Subsequently, letter dated 25 June 1983 from G. Lakshmanan offering his resignation from Office of Deputy Speaker, Lok Sabha, was received in New Delhi by registered post at 1.30 p.m. on 29 June 1983.

On 7 July 1983, the matter was referred for legal opinion. It was as follows:

“the correct interpretation to be placed on the expression ‘addressed to the Hon’ble Speaker’ would appear to be that the letter of resignation should not only be sent/put in the course of transmission, but should also be actually received by the Hon’ble Speaker. As a necessary corollary to this, it would follow that the juristic act of resignation was not complete prior to the receipt of the letter dated 25 June 1983, by the Hon’ble Speaker, i.e. prior to 1.30 p.m. on 29 June 1983. In other words, the resignation of his Office by the Deputy Speaker was still inchoate and had not become irrevocable.

As the letter of resignation was not a complete juristic act or the resignation was inchoate in the sense that the same had not resulted in terminating the office of the Deputy Speaker on 27 June 1983, the Deputy Speaker was within his rights to withdraw the same as has actually been done by the letter dated 27 June 1983. The Constitution does not contain any bar to such withdrawal...It is, thus, evident that the Deputy Speaker was within his rights to withdraw the resignation prior to 1.30 p.m. on 29 June 1983.

In fine, it would appear to be correct to say that G. Lakshmanan, Deputy Speaker, continues to hold the office of Deputy Speaker”.

After considering the matter in the light of the legal opinion, the Speaker held that G. Lakshmanan continued to hold the Office of the Deputy Speaker. Consequent on the issue being raised in Lok Sabha on 25 July 1983, the matter was referred for obtaining the opinion of the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General concurred with the earlier legal opinion and the matter was treated as closed. L.S. Deb., 26-7-1983, c. 7.

CHAPTER VIII

Parliamentary Functionaries

I. Speaker

The all important conventional and ceremonial head of the Lok Sabha is the Speaker<sup>1</sup>. Within the walls of the House, his authority is supreme. This authority is based on the Speaker's absolute and unvarying impartiality—the main feature of his Office, the law of its life. This obligation of impartiality appears in the constitutional provision which ordains that the Speaker is entitled to vote only in the case of equality of votes<sup>2</sup>. Moreover, his impartiality within the House is secured by the fact that he remains above all considerations of party or political career, and to that effect, he may also resign from the party to which he belonged<sup>3</sup>.

Though his powers and duties have been laid down in the rules and, to some extent, in the Constitution, the rules which he has to administer are of an elastic character and in some matters he has to exercise his discretion. His duties are very arduous, and in their discharge he must be actuated by a sense of justice and fairness, uninfluenced by passion or prejudice. He has to impress the House generally with confidence in the soundness and impartiality of his judgments, with the conviction that he considers himself the conscience and guardian of the House.

As the principal spokesman of the House, he represents its collective voice and is its sole representative to the outside world.

Communications from the President to the House are made through the Speaker<sup>4</sup>. When a message from the President, whether with respect to a Bill pending in Parliament or otherwise<sup>5</sup>, is received by the Speaker, he reads it to the House and gives necessary directions in regard to the procedure that is to be followed for the consideration of matters referred to in the message, and in giving those directions he can suspend or vary the rules to such extent as may be necessary<sup>6</sup>. Similarly, communications to the President are made through the Speaker in the form of a formal address after a motion has been made and carried by the House<sup>7</sup>. In the same way, the Speaker is the representative of the House in its relations with the Rajya Sabha.

1. The term "Speaker" appears to be somewhat paradoxical, since he is the only member of the House who does not take part in its debates except in the discharge of his duties as the Presiding Officer. But the original function of the Presiding Officers of the British House of Commons was "to sum up the case of both sides at the end of the debate, and to 'speak' the views of the House in the contentions with the Crown". Michael MacDonagh: The Book of Parliament, London 1897, p. 115; see also Philip Laundy: The Office of the Speaker in the Parliaments of the Commonwealth, London, 1984, pp. 11-57.

As the representative of the House to the outside world, the Speaker communicates the decisions of the House to the authorities concerned, requiring them to comply with the terms of such decisions. Similarly, he communicates to the House letters and documents addressed to him, as Speaker, such as those relating to the rights and privileges of the House and its members, and messages received by him from foreign countries and Legislatures. He also issues warrants to execute the orders of the House, where necessary.

Powers and Functions

The House commences its sitting when the Speaker, or any other member competent to preside over the sitting under the Constitution or the Rules, is in the Chair<sup>8</sup>. Utmost respect and attention is paid to him by all members of the House. Whenever the Speaker rises to speak, he is heard in silence and any member who is then speaking or offering to speak is required to resume his seat. No one is expected to leave the Chamber when the Speaker is addressing the House. His rulings cannot be questioned except on a substantive motion, and they constitute precedents which are collected for future guidance.

The Office of the Speaker is provided for in the Constitution<sup>9</sup>, and his salary and allowances are charged on the Consolidated Fund of India<sup>10</sup>. The Constitution also confers on him a special position insofar as relations between the two Houses in certain matters are concerned. It is the Speaker who determines what matters are 'money' matters as these fall within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Lok Sabha. If the Speaker certifies a Bill as a Money Bill, his decision is final<sup>11</sup>. Every Money Bill is so certified by him, when it is transmitted to Rajya Sabha as also when it is presented to the President for his assent<sup>12</sup>.

Whenever a joint sitting is called, in the event of a disagreement between the two Houses on a legislative measure, the Speaker presides over such a joint sitting and all the Rules of Procedure operate in regard to the joint sitting under his directions and orders<sup>13</sup>. Under the Constitution, the Speaker, as already stated, exercises only a casting vote in the case of equality of votes<sup>14</sup>. However, if at any sitting of the House a resolution for the removal of the Speaker from his Office is under consideration, he is not to preside at that sitting but can vote only in the first instance on such resolution or any other matter during such proceedings but not in the case of an equality of votes<sup>15</sup>. The Constitution also prescribes certain of his duties: he is empowered to adjourn the House or to suspend its sitting in the event of the absence of a quorum<sup>16</sup>, and he is authorised, in his discretion, to permit any member who is unable to express himself in Hindi or in English to address the House in his mother tongue<sup>17</sup>.

The Speaker does not take any part in the deliberations of the House except in the discharge of his duties as the Presiding Officer. However, on a point being raised or on a request made by a member, he may address the House at any time on a matter under consideration with a view to aiding members in their deliberations<sup>18</sup>. Such instances are rare<sup>19</sup> but whenever he does address the House those expressions are not to be taken in the nature of a ruling.

It is customary for the Speaker to make appropriate references in the House on solemn occasions, and other important occasions and anniversaries like the anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights by the United Nations, May Day, anniversary of the dropping of the atom bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, and also to pay homage to the memory of the martyrs of Jallianwala Bagh<sup>20</sup> and to those who died in the attack by terrorists on Parliament House on 13 December 2001.

Similarly, the Speaker may place before the House motions or resolutions to mark events of great national or international importance<sup>21</sup>, to express the sentiments of the House on some occurrence of national or international importance<sup>22</sup> or a tragedy<sup>23</sup> or some occasion to express happiness of the nation<sup>24</sup>. Such motions or resolutions are unanimously adopted without discussion as these are brought before the House after consulting leaders of parties and groups and arriving at a consensus.

Since 1969, it is the practice that the Speaker makes references to the presence of the foreign distinguished visitors, including Parliamentary Delegations, in the Special Box in the House when members cheer the visitors by thumping the desks<sup>25</sup>.

Having regard to the state of business of the House, the Speaker fixes the hour of commencement or termination of sitting and determines the days on which the House will sit<sup>26</sup>. He also determines the time when a sitting of the House is adjourned sine die or to a particular day, or to an hour or part of the same day, and can call a sitting of the House before the date or hour to which it has been adjourned or at any time after the House has been adjourned sine die, but before its prorogation<sup>27</sup>. In consultation with the Leader of the House, he determines the order of the Government Business which can be varied only if he is satisfied that sufficient grounds exist for doing so<sup>28</sup>. He has also the power to recognise parties and groups in the House<sup>29</sup>.

The Lok Sabha was not, however, prorogued. The Speaker, exercising his powers under proviso to Rule 15, reconvened the sittings of the Lok Sabha from 1 October, which continued till 5 October 1990; (iv) Similarly, the First Session of the 11th Lok Sabha commenced on Wednesday, 22 May 1996 and was adjourned sine die on 28 May 1996. The Lok Sabha was not, however, prorogued. The Speaker, exercising his power under Proviso to Rule 15, reconvened the sittings of the Lok Sabha from 10 June 1996, which continued till 12 June 1996; (v) Likewise, the Fourteenth Session of Thirteenth Lok Sabha commenced on 2 December 2003 and was adjourned sine die on 23 December 2003.

The Speaker regulates the debates and proceedings of the House. Even at the secret sittings which can be held at the request of the Leader of the House, it is the Speaker who determines the manner of reporting the proceedings and the procedure to be adopted on such occasion<sup>30</sup>. He is charged with the maintenance of order in the House and enforces the observance of Rules by the members. To this end, he is equipped with all the necessary powers<sup>31</sup>. He determines when a member should be called upon to speak<sup>32</sup> and how long he be allowed to speak. He can also impose time-limit on speeches, whenever necessary<sup>33</sup>. He proposes questions for the consideration of the House and puts them for its decision<sup>34</sup>. He rules on points of order raised by members and his decision is final<sup>35</sup>.

Various powers are conferred on the Speaker in relation to questions to Ministers. Though the guiding principles regarding admissibility of questions are laid down in the Rules, their interpretation is vested in the Speaker<sup>36</sup>. He may also vary the Question Hour, normally the first hour of every sitting<sup>37</sup>, waive the rules relating to notice of questions<sup>38</sup> and permit a question to be asked at short notice if it relates to matter of public importance and is, in his opinion, of an urgent character<sup>39</sup>, decide that a written answer to any question would be more appropriate than oral answer, and if he thinks fit, call upon the member to state in brief his reasons for desiring an oral answer<sup>40</sup>, permit a question not reached for oral answer to be answered at the end of the Question Hour if the Minister represents to the Speaker that the question is one of special public interest<sup>41</sup>, direct that a question be answered, at the request of a member,

The Lok Sabha was not, however, prorogued. The Speaker, exercising his power under Proviso to Rule 15 reconvened the sitting of the Lok Sabha from 29 January 2004, which continued till 5 February 2005; (vi) Similarly, the Seventh Session of Fourteenth Lok Sabha commenced on 16 February 2006 and was adjourned sine die on 22 March 2006. The Lok Sabha was not, however, prorogued. The Speaker, exercising his power under Proviso to Rule 15 reconvened the sittings of Lok Sabha from 10 May 2006 which continued till 23 May 2006; and (vii) Likewise, the Fifteenth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha commenced on 5 December 2013 and was adjourned sine die on 18 December 2013. The Lok Sabha was not, however, prorogued. The Speaker, exercising her power under Proviso to Rule 15 reconvened the sittings of Lok Sabha from 5 February 2014 which continued till 21 February 2014.

notwithstanding the absence of the member in whose name the question stands<sup>42</sup>, and when all questions for oral answers have been called, time permitting, call again any question which has not been asked by reason of the absence of the member in whose name it stands. Provision has been made in the Rules for half-an-hour discussion on matters arising from the answers to questions provided they are of sufficient public importance, but the decision as to whether a matter conforms to the requirements of the relevant Rules rests with the Speaker<sup>43</sup>.

The Speaker also decides on the admissibility of resolutions and motions. He has a general discretion in regard to the admissibility of resolutions and motions similar to the one relating to the admissibility of questions<sup>44</sup>. He decides whether a motion expressing want of confidence in the Council of Ministers is in order<sup>45</sup>, and whether a 'cut' motion, that is a motion for reduction of a demand for grant, is or is not admissible under the Rules<sup>46</sup>. If the Speaker is of the opinion that a motion for adjournment of a debate or the recirculation or recommittal of a Bill is of a dilatory nature in abuse of the Rules of the House, he can forthwith put the question thereon or decline to propose the question<sup>47</sup>. The Speaker is empowered to select amendments in relation to Bills and motions<sup>48</sup>, and can refuse to propose an amendment which, in his opinion, is frivolous<sup>49</sup>. In addition, his consent is required to a motion to adjourn the business of the House for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance<sup>50</sup>, to a motion for discussing a matter of general public interest, and to any motion for<sup>51</sup> adjourning the debate on a Bill<sup>52</sup>.

The consent of the Speaker is also necessary for the presentation of petitions to the House<sup>53</sup>, for calling the attention of a Minister to any matter of urgent public importance<sup>54</sup>, and for any member to point out a mistake or inaccuracy in a statement made by a Minister or any other member<sup>55</sup>. Further, the consent of the Speaker is required by a Minister wishing to make a personal statement in explanation of his resignation<sup>56</sup>, and his permission is likewise necessary if a member wants to make a personal explanation<sup>57</sup>.

In pursuance of the provision of the Constitution or the Rules of Procedure or Directions by the Speaker or an Act of Parliament and the Rules and Regulations made thereunder, papers are laid on the Table of the House with the permission of the Speaker. The Speaker can, however, withhold the laying of a paper on the Table of the House, if he is of opinion that the paper relates to an order which is not made in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution or the law. The Speaker may permit a discussion on a point of order questioning the laying of paper in the above circumstances<sup>58</sup>.

In consultation with the Leader of the House, he allots the days and fixes the duration for which the Budget, the Appropriation Bill and the Finance Bill are to be discussed by the House<sup>59</sup>. His views on the proposals of the Government for commencement and prorogation of a session, dissolution of the Lok Sabha and for fixation of dates for the presentation of the General and Railway Budgets are communicated to the President when he signs the necessary orders under the Constitution or the Rules.

On 29 March 1974, the President issued an order authorising expenditure from the Consolidated Fund of the Union territory of Pondicherry, which had come under President's Rule on 28 March 1974. The Presidential order was to be laid on the Table of the House on 2 April 1974. On that day, some members contended that as the Legislative Assembly of the Union territory of Pondicherry had been dissolved, the power to withdraw moneys from the Consolidated Fund of the Union territory of Pondicherry could only be exercised by Parliament. They urged the Speaker that the order, which was illegal and unconstitutional, should not be allowed to be laid on the Table of the House. On 3 April 1974, the Minister of Law, while replying to the points raised by members stated that following the dissolution of Pondicherry Legislature on 28 March 1974, the budget and financial statement of Pondicherry was forwarded to the Union Government on 29 March 1974, which was the last working day of the Lok Sabha before the end of the financial year 1973-74. So, if the Vote on Account had to be passed by the House, it had to be passed on the 29th, which was not practicable at all. The Minister submitted that what Government had done was not only correct under the circumstances, but was also legal and constitutional. After listening to both the sides, the Speaker, however, observed that he was not going to allow the Presidential order to be laid on the Table of the House "at present".

procedure to be followed by them<sup>63</sup>. He guides them by holding periodic consultations with them, and if any doubt arises on any point of procedure or otherwise, the matter is referred to the Speaker whose decision is final. Even otherwise, the Speaker keeps in close touch with the proceedings of all committees. Certain powers relating to committees are reserved for the Speaker—a committee cannot hold a meeting outside the Parliament House/Parliament House Annexe without his previous permission<sup>64</sup>, nor can it call officials of State Governments to give evidence before it without his previous approval<sup>65</sup>, appeals from members of a committee against the decisions of the Chairman in the matter of expunctions, disorderly behaviour, etc., are decided by the Speaker<sup>66</sup>, and where a question arises whether the production of a document or the evidence of a person is relevant to its deliberations, the question is referred to the Speaker and his decision is final<sup>67</sup>. Similarly, if the Government claims that a particular paper, record or document is secret and the contents thereof should not be divulged in the public interest but the Committee insist on its production before them, the matter is placed before the Speaker for guidance and his directions are carried out. Moreover, there are certain committees, viz., the Business Advisory Committee, the General Purposes Committee, and the Rules Committee, which work directly under the Speaker's chairmanship.

The Speaker also determines the question as to whether a member of the House has become subject to disqualification on ground of defection in terms of the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution.

Rulings of the Speaker

It is the right of the Speaker to interpret the Constitution and Rules, so far as matters in or relating to the House are concerned, and no one, including the Government, can enter into any argument or controversy with the Speaker over such interpretation<sup>68</sup>. The Speaker's rulings constitute precedents by which subsequent Speakers, members and officers are guided. Such precedents are collected, and in course of time, formulated as rules of procedure or followed as conventions. The Speaker's rulings, as already stated, cannot be questioned except on a substantive motion<sup>69</sup>. A member who protests against the ruling of the Speaker commits contempt of the House and the Speaker<sup>70</sup>. The Speaker's decision is equally binding whether given in the House or on a departmental file<sup>71</sup>. The Speaker is not bound to give reasons for the decisions<sup>72</sup> so taken. Members cannot criticise directly or indirectly, inside or outside the House, any ruling given, opinion expressed or statement made, by the Speaker. If a member desires to make a submission to the Speaker on the floor of the House regarding a ruling, the Speaker may permit the member to do so after satisfying himself that it does not unduly interfere with the proceedings of the House. The member making such a submission cannot criticise the decision but can seek elucidation on any point, or request the Chair to consider the ruling in the light of the facts submitted by him<sup>73</sup>.

Observations made by the Speaker in the House cannot be interpreted in private correspondence. He does not enter into public or press controversies regarding observations made by him from the Chair.

It is not customary for the Speaker to enter into correspondence with private individuals regarding the scope and functions of parliamentary committees and other matters of procedure or with regard to the proceedings of the House. Where, however, a communication is received from a member of the Rajya Sabha about anything said in the House against him, the Speaker may, in his discretion, forward it to the Minister or the member concerned for such action as he may deem necessary<sup>74</sup>. The Speaker is also not bound to lay on the Table any communication or representation received by him<sup>75</sup>.

Disciplinary Powers of the Speaker

Maintenance of order in the House is a fundamental duty of the Speaker. He derives his disciplinary powers from the Rules, and his decisions in matters of discipline are not to be challenged except on a substantive motion<sup>76</sup>. The Speaker may check irrelevance or repetition in the speech of a member and intervene when a member makes an unwarranted or defamatory remark, by asking him to withdraw that remark or to make amends. The Speaker may also, in his discretion, order the expunction of any defamatory or indecent words used in the debate<sup>77</sup> or of anything said by a

A proposal to have a specific rule to the effect that the Speaker shall not be bound to give reasons for his decision on a motion or on any matter was discussed by the Rules Committee on 26 April 1966. The Committee felt that such a rule was not necessary as the Speaker had the inherent power not to give reasons for his decisions on notices or other matters. member who has not been called upon to speak<sup>78</sup>. He may direct any member guilty of disorderly conduct to withdraw from the House, and name a member for suspension if the member disregards the authority of the Chair and persists in obstructing the proceedings of the House. Further, in the event of grave disorder occasioned by a member coming into the well of the House or abusing the Rules of the House persistently and wilfully obstructing its business by shouting slogans or otherwise, such member shall, on being named by the Speaker, stand automatically suspended from the service of the House for five consecutive sittings or the remainder of the session, whichever is less<sup>79</sup>. He may also adjourn or suspend the business of the House in case of grave disorder<sup>80</sup>.

Miscellaneous Functions of the Speaker

The Speaker is the ex-officio President of the Indian Parliamentary Group<sup>81</sup>, which, in India, functions as the National Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union and the main Branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. The Speaker nominates, in consultation with the Chairman of the Rajya Sabha, personnel for various parliamentary delegations to foreign countries. He occasionally leads these delegations himself. The Speaker is also the Chairperson of the Conference of Presiding Officers of Legislative Bodies in India.

The Speaker makes obituary references in the House, delivers valedictory addresses on the expiry of the term of the House and also makes formal references to important national and international events<sup>82</sup>.

The Speaker is empowered under the Rules to correct patent errors in a Bill after it has been passed by the House and to make such other changes in the Bill consequential on the amendments accepted by the House<sup>83</sup>. When a Bill is passed by Parliament and is in possession of the House, the Speaker is required to authenticate the Bill with his signature before presenting it to the President for assent<sup>84</sup>.

For instances see also the heading References on solemn occasions under Chapter XVIII-‘Arrangement of Business and List of Business’.

83. Rule 95.

84. Rules 128(1) and 154.

All matters not specifically provided for in the Rules and all questions relating to the detailed working of the Rules are regulated in such manner as the Speaker, from time to time, directs<sup>85</sup>. As already stated, these directions are compiled and published for guidance. However, the Speaker has only those powers which are given to him by the House or the Rules. He cannot start a new procedure of his own<sup>86</sup>.

The Speaker is the head of the Secretariat which functions under his ultimate control and direction<sup>87</sup>. The Speaker's authority over the secretarial staff of the House, its precincts and its security arrangements is supreme. All strangers, visitors and press correspondents are subject to his discipline and orders, and breach of order may be punished by means of exclusion from the precincts of the Parliament House or stoppage of admission tickets to the galleries for definite or indefinite period, or in more serious cases, dealt with as a contempt or breach of privilege. The Speaker is responsible for the protection of the rights of the members, and for ensuring that all reasonable amenities are provided for them. Should a member be arrested on a criminal charge, or sentenced to imprisonment, or detained under an executive order, the fact must immediately be reported to the Speaker by the magistrate or the executive authority<sup>88</sup>; such intimation is also essential in the event of the release of the member<sup>89</sup>. No member can be arrested, nor can a legal process, civil or criminal, be served on him, within the precincts of the House without obtaining the Speaker's permission<sup>90</sup>. Such permission is necessary whether the House is in session or not. No alteration or addition can be made in the Parliament House and no new structure can be erected in the Parliament Estate without the Speaker's permission.

The importance of the prestige and authority of the Speaker has been recognised from the outset of the country's independence. Speaking on 8 March 1948, on the occasion of the unveiling of the portrait of Speaker Patel, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru observed:

The Speaker represents the House. He represents the dignity of the House, the freedom of the House and because the House represents the nation, in a peculiar way, the Speaker becomes the symbol of the nation's freedom and liberty. Therefore, it is right that that should be an honoured position, a free position and should be occupied always by men of outstanding ability and impartiality<sup>91</sup>.

The Speaker's supreme authority inside the House is based on his capacity to inspire members with a confidence about his sincere efforts to give rulings to the best of his ability and judgment, uninfluenced by passion or prejudice, unswayed by their impact on his personal position. All the powers vested in him are intended to enable him to ensure the smooth functioning of the House. In no case would it be justified for the Speaker to use his powers arbitrarily or in such manner as to prevent the House from functioning.

In order to set at rest any doubts that might have arisen as a result of the attitudes adopted in 1967-68 by the Speakers of the West Bengal and Punjab Legislative Assemblies, the Page Committee, while commenting on the duties and responsibilities of the Speaker and his relations with the House, made the following observations:

The fundamental principle is that the House, subject to the provisions of the Constitution, is sovereign in the matter of its own rules of procedure and conduct of business... Hence, whatever powers have been conferred by the rules on the Speaker are intended to serve one purpose, i.e., the House should be enabled to function at all times in the interest of the country and the powers conferred on the Speaker should be used by him in the interest of the House.

The principal duty of the Speaker is to regulate the proceedings of the House and to enable it to deliberate on and decide the various matters coming before it. Thus, in considering the various notices or points raised before him, the Speaker should always bear this in mind and where in doubt, he should act in favour of giving an opportunity to the House to express itself. The Speaker should not so conceive his duties or interpret his powers as to act independently of the House, or to override its authority, or to nullify its decisions. The Speaker is a part of the House, drawing his powers from the House for the better functioning of the House, and in the ultimate analysis, a servant of the House, not its master<sup>92</sup>.

Further, the Speaker should not normally on his own raise a matter and then give his decision thereon. He should give his ruling when a point of order is raised and after he has heard the members, if necessary. And on a point of order he should not give a ruling which has the effect of reversing a decision already taken by the House on any matter<sup>93</sup>.

While the Speaker has considerable discretion in regard to adjourning the House, this discretion has to be exercised by him within reasonable limits and in a manner so as not to obstruct the working of the House.

As observed by Speaker Reddy<sup>94</sup>, it is the first duty of the Speaker to enable the House to function and not to shut it out. The House is paramount, not the Speaker, who can claim no inherent right to override or bypass the House, or to arrogate to himself powers and functions which belong to the House.

92. Report of the Page Committee, para 35.

In a few simple and well-chosen words, Speaker Lenthall, in his reply to King Charles I, expressed unequivocally and for all time where the Speaker's first duty lay: "May it please Your Majesty, I have neither eyes to see, nor tongue to speak in this place, but as the House is pleased to direct me, whose servant I am here; and I humbly beg Your Majesty's pardon that I cannot give any other answer than this to what Your Majesty is pleased to demand of me." (Philip Laundy: The Office of Speaker; London, 1964, p. 211).

93. Report of the Page Committee para 40(i) and (ii).

94. Address by Speaker Reddy at the Emergent Conference of Presiding Officers on 6 April 1968.

In the West Bengal Legislative Assembly by adjourning the House sine die, the Speaker rendered the very House, which could take a decision in the matter, whether the Ministry enjoyed the confidence of the majority of the Assembly, ineffective.

In the Punjab Legislative Assembly, the Speaker's decision to adjourn the House for two months created a serious crisis in the Punjab as the Assembly had yet to pass the budget for the year 1968-69. In this context, the Supreme Court observed: "The Legislature cannot be allowed to hibernate due to adjournment by the Speaker for a period beyond 31 March while the financial business languishes and the constitutional machinery and democracy itself are wrecked"<sup>95</sup>.

It is not for the Speaker to give his rulings on legal issues or to pronounce on the legality of a Ministry. In this connection, Speaker Reddy observed:

If a controversy arises as to whether a Ministry is 'legal' or not, the proper forum to settle the matter is the Court. But the House is not helpless for even if the Court upholds the appointment of the Chief Minister and other Ministers, the House can vote them out of office if it wants. The Speaker does not come into the picture at all, and if he takes upon himself to pronounce on the legality of the Ministry and precludes the House from expressing its views in the matter, he is arrogating to himself the functions of the House and the Courts. Not only that, if the Speaker just does not allow the House to function, he is, in effect, releasing the Ministry from its obligations and responsibility to the House<sup>96</sup>.

To conclude, the Speaker has to be sensitive to the atmosphere in the House. Sometimes when there is excitement, uproar, incriminatory observations, or continuous interruption in the House, he has to employ subtle wit and healthy humour to control the situation, to relieve tension, and to create conditions in which orderly and relaxed debate can proceed. This is a gift which may be either natural or cultivated, but it is certainly a weapon of great potency with a wise and capable Speaker.

The Speaker enjoys the sixth place in rank and precedence along with the Chief Justice of India<sup>97</sup>.

II. Deputy Speaker

The Office of the Deputy Speaker has grown in importance and has come to acquire a more prominent position after the enforcement of the Constitution in 1950. Like the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker is elected by the Lok Sabha from amongst its members<sup>98</sup>. He is not subordinate to the Speaker, but holds an independent position and is answerable to the House alone. He holds Office until he ceases to be a member of the House, or until he himself resigns his Office or is removed by a resolution of the House passed by a majority of the members of the House<sup>99</sup>.

During the days of the Central Legislative Assembly, the House used to meet only for short periods and that too at long intervals. At present, the House sits for nearly seven months in a year and each sitting lasts for about seven hours. It is not practicable for the Speaker to be present in the House throughout a particular sitting. Every now and then, when he has to attend to his other duties, he has to vacate the Chair, and in his absence it is usually the Deputy Speaker who presides over the deliberations of the House<sup>100</sup>. Further, the Deputy Speaker is required to perform the duties of the Office of the Speaker, whenever that Office is vacant<sup>101</sup>.

The Deputy Speaker has the same powers as the Speaker when presiding over a sitting of the House and all references to the Speaker in the Rules are deemed to be references to the Deputy Speaker when he so presides<sup>102</sup>. It has been consistently held that no appeal lies to the Speaker against a ruling given by the Deputy Speaker or any other person presiding over a sitting of the House in the absence of the Speaker. The ruling given from the Chair settles the matter then before the House and cannot be reopened by anyone<sup>103</sup>.

However, whenever a point raised in the House needs some consideration or involves application of precedents or study, it is open to the Deputy Speaker or the Chairman to leave the matter for the decision of the Speaker.

After the resignation of N. Sanjiva Reddy from the Office of Speaker on 19 July 1969 as he was a candidate for the Office of the President of the Republic of India, the Deputy Speaker assumed the duties of the Speaker and continued to perform them till the new Speaker was elected on 8 August 1969—L.S.S. If the Deputy Speaker is a member of a parliamentary committee, he is appointed as the Chairman of that Committee<sup>104</sup>. Usually the Deputy Speaker is nominated to a number of parliamentary committees.

During the absence of the Speaker from any joint sitting of the Houses of Parliament, the Deputy Speaker presides and exercises the powers of the Speaker at such a sitting as is the case when he is presiding over the deliberations of the House<sup>105</sup>.

Unlike the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker can speak in the House, take part in its deliberations and vote as a member on any question before the House, but he can do this only when the Speaker is presiding. When he is himself in the Chair, the Deputy Speaker cannot vote except in the event of equality of votes.

The Deputy Speaker has a right to take part in politics of the party to which he belongs, although in practice, as far as possible, he keeps aloof from active participation and controversial issues in order to maintain his position of impartiality in the House<sup>106</sup>.

A convention has been established in the Lok Sabha that the Deputy Speaker does not sponsor Bills, resolutions, etc., nor does he table questions.

A question as to whether the Deputy Speaker “could exercise the rights of an ordinary member to participate in debates and attack or criticise the Government and take part in divisions of the House” was raised at the Conference of Presiding Officers held in 1953, and diverse views were expressed on the subject. The Chairman (Speaker Mavalankar), concluding the debate on the point, observed:

The question of the Deputy Speaker is a question which each Deputy Speaker has to consider himself and decide. Undoubtedly, he is a member. But I think he has also to remember that he has to preside in the Legislature and, therefore, a responsibility lies on him to so conduct himself in the debates that members of the parties do not take him to be party man. And this limitation applies not only to his taking part in politics outside but also so far as the language of expression of views is concerned. That is a question on which he has to exercise his discretion.

The Deputy Speaker is a whole time officer of the House. He does not engage himself in any profession, business or private practice.

As in the case of the Speaker, the salary of the Deputy Speaker is charged on the Consolidated Fund of India and is not subject to the vote of the House<sup>107</sup>.

The Deputy Speaker occupies the tenth place<sup>108</sup> in the order of precedence along with the Deputy Chairman of the Rajya Sabha, Ministers of State of Union and members of the Planning Commission.

III. Panel of Chairpersons

At the commencement of the House or from time to time, as the case may be, the Speaker nominates<sup>109</sup> from amongst the members a panel of not more than ten<sup>110</sup> Chairpersons (earlier referred to as Chairmen). In the absence of the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker, one of them presides over the House when so requested by the Speaker or in his absence, by the Deputy Speaker<sup>111</sup>. There is always need of some other persons who can act in the Chair, off and on, as the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker between them may not be able to take the entire load of presiding throughout the duration of the sitting each day. They may require some relief and time to attend to other work outside the House.

After taking into consideration the engagements for the day of the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker and also ascertaining the convenience of members of the Panel of Chairpersons, a roster is prepared each day indicating the hours during which the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker and individual members of the Panel of Chairpersons are to preside. Depending upon developments and the nature of business before the House, suitable changes can be made in the roster at short notice.

In nominating a member to the Panel of Chairpersons, the Speaker gives consideration to his previous experience as a member of Panel of Chairpersons in Lok Sabha or Rajya Sabha or as Speaker, Deputy Speaker, Chairperson or Deputy Chairperson in a State Legislature. Consideration is also given to the various parties in the House as also women members. It has been a convention for the Speaker to nominate some women members on the Panel and to select some members from Opposition groups as members of the Panel. The selection is entirely in the hands of the Speaker but he may consult the leaders of political groups in the Lok Sabha before making a choice finally. It is not necessary that the Panel should have ten members all the time. A Panel of Chairpersons of less than ten members can also be constituted and the remaining member(s) nominated later on.

Any member of the Panel of Chairpersons, when presiding over a sitting of the House, has the same powers as the Speaker when so presiding<sup>112</sup>. The rulings of a Chairperson are not subject to any criticism nor open to any debate or appeal. In order, that there is an authoritative ruling, a Chairperson often reserves major issues for decision by the Speaker. A reference to the Chairperson's conduct while in the Chair amounts to contempt of the House and, therefore, he is shown all respect as the Presiding Officer of the House.

A Chairperson is free to participate fully in all discussions in the House and to take active part in the issues, including controversial issues before the House. He attends the meetings of his party and is sometimes an active member of his party.

112. Rule 10.

A Chairperson holds Office until a new Panel of Chairpersons is nominated<sup>113</sup>, unless he resigns earlier from the Panel or is appointed a Minister<sup>114</sup> or elected as Deputy Speaker. Generally, he holds Office for one year but the same person may be renominated from time to time. In case a Chairperson resigns from the Panel, the information is published in the Bulletin and no announcement to that effect is made in the House. Reasons, if any, given in the letter of resignation are, however, not published<sup>115</sup>.

IV. Chairpersons of Parliamentary Committees

The Chairpersons of all parliamentary committees<sup>116</sup> under the jurisdiction of the Speaker, except that of Joint Committee on Salaries and Allowances of Members of Parliament, are appointed by the Speaker from amongst the members of the respective Committees<sup>117</sup>. In the case of Joint Committee on Salaries and Allowances of Members of Parliament, the Committee elects its Chairperson at their first sitting after nomination of members of both the Houses to the Committee by Presiding Officers. While appointing the Chairperson of a Committee, the Speaker takes into consideration the seniority of the member, his experience as a member of the Panel of Chairpersons or as the Chairperson of any other parliamentary committee, and the subject or nature of work of the Committee. If the Speaker himself is a member of a Committee, he invariably is the Chairperson of that Committee<sup>118</sup>. Where the Speaker is not a member but the Deputy Speaker is, then the latter is appointed the Chairperson<sup>119</sup>. In the case of Select or Joint Committee on Bills, if a member of the Panel of Chairpersons or the Chairperson of a Standing Parliamentary Committee, or the Chairperson of a Select or Joint Committee on an allied Bill happens to be a member of the Committee, he is generally appointed the Chairperson of the Committee. If the Prime Minister happens to be a member of a Committee, he may be appointed the Chairperson of the Committee notwithstanding the fact that a member of the Panel of Chairpersons is also a member of that Committee<sup>120</sup>. Ministers/Members who are members of the Rajya Sabha may also be appointed Chairpersons of Select or Joint Committees (originating in the Lok Sabha) on Bills<sup>121</sup>. It is not obligatory that the Chairperson of a Committee must be from the ruling party<sup>122</sup>. If the Chairperson of a Committee resigns, or is, for any reason, unable to act, the Speaker appoints any other member of the Committee as Chairperson in his place<sup>123</sup>.

Announcement to this effect was made by the Speaker in the House on the same day. On 3 March 2011, the Speaker made an announcement in the House that Satpal Maharaj had been nominated as member of Panel of Chairmen in place of Beni Prasad Verma who had been appointed as Minister.

121. For instance, (i) the Minister of Defence, who was a member of the Rajya Sabha, was appointed as the Chairman of the Joint Committee on the Reserve and Auxiliary Air Force Bill, 1952; and (ii) Syed Sibtey Razi, who was a member of the Rajya Sabha, was appointed as the Chairman of the Joint Committee on the Copyright (Second Amendment) Bill, 1992.

122. As per established convention, Chairperson of the Public Accounts Committee is appointed from amongst the members of one of the opposition parties/groups on the Committee.

By convention, the Deputy Speaker is nominated as a member of the Committee on (i) Private Members' Bills and Resolutions; and (ii) Library Committee and under Rule 258 is appointed as Chairperson of these two Committees.

In addition, a Select/Joint Committee on a Bill may have as its Chairperson, a member who does not belong to the ruling party, for instance, the Joint Committee on the (i) State Bank of India (Subsidiary Banks) Bill, 1959; and (ii) Air (Prevention and Control of Pollution) Bill, 1978.

123. Rule 258(2). Following are the instances when Chairperson of a Committee was unable to act and the Speaker, under Rule 258(2), appointed another member of Committee to act as Chairperson:

- (i) In absence (abroad) of Chairman, P.A.C. (C. Pattabhai Raman) during September- December 1961, R.L. Chaturvedi was appointed Chairman of P.A.C.
- (ii) In absence (abroad) of Chairman, CPU (Pt. D.N. Tiwary), Surendranath Dwivedy was appointed Chairman of CPU on 25 September 1967.
- (iii) In absence (abroad) of Chairman, EC (P. Venkatasubiah), Shantilal Shah was appointed Chairman of EC on 28 October 1968.
- (iv) In absence (abroad) of Chairman, EC (K.N. Tewari), Liladhar Kotoki was appointed Chairman of EC on 7 September 1972.
- (v) In absence (abroad) of Chairman, CPU (Subhadra Joshi), Amrit Nahata was appointed Chairman of CPU on 23 April 1973.
- (vi) In absence (abroad) of Chairman, CPU (Subhadra Joshi), Nawal Kishore Sharma was appointed Chairman of CPU on 18 May 1973.
- (vii) In absence (abroad) of Chairman, EC (R.K. Sinha), Tulsidas Dasappa was appointed Chairman of EC on 31 August 1975.
- (viii) In absence (abroad) of Chairman, SCTC (Ram Dhan), Suraj Bhan was appointed Chairman of SCTC on 23 September 1977.
- (ix) In absence (abroad) of Chairman, CP (H.V. Kamath), Ugrasen was appointed Chairman of CP on 23 September 1977.
- (x) During illness of Chairman, JC on Catering in Parliament House Complex (Ram Naik), Sushma Swaraj was appointed Chairman, JC on Catering in Parliament House Complex on 9 May 1994.
- (xi) Due to inability to discharge duties of Chairman, Committee on Food, Civil Supplies & Public Distribution (Ram Kapse), Shyam Bihari Mishra was appointed Chairman of the Committee on 23 June 1994.
- (xii) On resignation of Chairman, Committee on Defence (Indrajit Gupta), Sharad Dighe was appointed Chairman of the Committee on 8 February 1996.
- (xiii) During illness of Chairman, SCTC (Gobinda Chandra Naskar), Biren Singh Engti was appointed to act as Chairman of the SCTC on 24 August 2011.

The Speaker may appoint a member as a member as well as Chairperson of the Committee simultaneously<sup>124</sup>. In the absence of the Chairperson from any sitting of the Committee, the Committee chooses another member to act as the Chairperson for that sitting<sup>125</sup>.

Duties and Powers

The Chairperson has the duties and powers in respect of proceedings of the Committee more or less similar to those of the Speaker in respect of the proceedings and deliberations of the House. He appoints the Chairperson of a sub-Committee, which the Committee may decide to set up<sup>126</sup>. He fixes the date and time for holding the sittings of the Committee<sup>127</sup>. If at any time fixed for any sitting of the Committee, or at any time during any such sitting, there is no quorum, the Chairperson may either suspend the sitting until there is quorum or adjourn the sitting to some future day<sup>128</sup>. Any procedural matter arising at the sittings of the Committee is decided by the Chairperson. If any doubt arises on any point of procedure or otherwise, the Chairperson, may, if he thinks fit refer the point to the Speaker whose decision is final<sup>129</sup>. The Speaker may also himself, from time to time, issue such directions to the Chairperson of a Committee as he may consider necessary for regulating the procedure or work of the Committee<sup>130</sup>. In the deliberations of a Committee, if there is an equality of votes on any matter, the Chairperson or the person acting as such, has a second or casting vote<sup>131</sup>. Minutes of the sittings of a Committee are approved by the Chairperson, and its report is signed by him on behalf of the Committee, before it is presented to the Speaker or the House<sup>132</sup>. He has also the power to correct patent errors or matters of factual nature in the report before its presentation to the Speaker or the House<sup>133</sup>. All communications between a Committee and the Speaker or the

At the Conference of Secretaries of Legislative Bodies, held at Jaipur in October, 1957, a question was raised whether the provision regarding casting of a first vote by the Chairman of a Committee, when the Presiding Officers in the House had been denied the right to vote in the first instance, was in consonance with the provisions of articles 100(1) and 189(1). The general consensus was that the provision of such a normal or first vote by Chairman of a Committee was not contrary to the Constitution; for, whereas the Speaker did not take part in the debates in the House as a member, Chairman of a Committee not only actually guided the deliberations of the Committee but also played a leading role in formulating the conclusions reached by the Committee which were incorporated in the report. Since the Chairman, unlike the Speaker, was not debarred from participating in the discussion, he should not lose his normal vote. The casting vote is exercised only where there is a tie.

V. Council of Ministers

The Constitution provides for a Council of Ministers headed by the Prime Minister to aid and advise the President who in the exercise of his functions acts in accordance with such advice<sup>134</sup>. The Prime Minister is appointed by the President and other Ministers are appointed by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister<sup>135</sup>. The President invites leader of the majority party or a person capable of commanding majority in Lok Sabha to assume the Office of Prime Minister and the Prime Minister advises the President regarding the appointment of other Ministers<sup>136</sup>.

On the death or resignation of Prime Minister, the entire Council of Ministers stands dissolved. However, in the case of resignation, the President may ask the Prime Minister and other Ministers to continue until alternative arrangements are made. In case of death, till the party in majority in Lok Sabha elects a new leader, the President may appoint a person who is most likely to command majority support in 134. Art. 74(1), as amended. Also see Chapter III—'President in Relation to Parliament'.

136. During the first five General Elections and again in the Seventh, Eighth and Tenth General Elections, the Leader of the Congress Party, which secured majority in Lok Sabha, was appointed Prime Minister and other Ministers were appointed on his advice. In the Sixth General Election held in March 1977, the Janata Party secured majority in Lok Sabha and its leader was appointed Prime Minister and other Ministers were appointed on his advice. In the Sixteenth General Elections held in 2014, the Bharatiya Janta Party secured majority in Lok Sabha and its leader was appointed Prime Minister and other Ministers were appointed on his advice.

In the Ninth General Elections, no party secured an absolute majority and the President invited the Leader of the single largest party (Indian National Congress) to form the Government and they declined the offer. Subsequently, the leader of the next largest party (the Janata Dal) was invited by the President to form the Government and a minority Government at the Centre was formed with the outside support of other parties. The Eleventh General Election as well did not give a clear mandate to any party or alliance. The President invited the Leader of the single largest party (the Bharatiya Janata Party) to form the Government with the stipulation that it should prove its majority on the floor of the House within a prescribed time. Subsequently, this Government resigned and a new Government (the United Front) with outside support was sworn in. Later, consequent upon withdrawal of support from outside, the Government could not survive and another Government (the United Front), again with outside support, was formed. The Twelfth General Elections as well did not give a clear mandate to any political party to secure an absolute majority of its own in the House. The President, after extensive consultations with Leaders of various parties, invited the leader of the single largest party (the Bharatiya Janata Party) to form the Government with the stipulation that it should prove its majority on the floor of the House within a prescribed time i.e. ten days of its constitution. The thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth General Elections were held in 1999, 2004 and 2009, respectively. No party could muster absolute majority. The President invited the Leaders of the largest combination viz., National Democratic Alliance (NDA), Atal Bihari Vajpayee for thirteenth and United Progressive Alliance (UPA), Dr. Manmohan Singh for fourteenth and fifteenth Lok Sabha who formed the Government, respectively.

Lok Sabha. He may also appoint, as an interim measure, the seniormost member of the outgoing Council of Ministers as Prime Minister<sup>137</sup>.

The Council of Ministers consists of all the categories of Ministers of the Government of India, whether they are 'Members of Cabinet' or 'Ministers of State' or 'Deputy Ministers'<sup>138</sup>. The Constitution does not lay down the number of Ministers—either the minimum or the maximum—that should comprise the Council of Ministers. The size of the Council of Ministers is left to the Prime Minister who determines it according to the requirements from time to time<sup>139</sup>.

137. On the passing away of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru (27 May 1964) and Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri (11 January 1966), the President appointed the seniormost member of the outgoing Council of Ministers to act as the Prime Minister, other Ministers were appointed by the President on his advice. In both these cases, however, the arrangement was a sort of stop-gap or interim one inasmuch as when the time came the majority party each time elected a different person as Leader and it was he or she who was later called upon by the President to be the Prime Minister. On the passing away of Prime Minister, Indira Gandhi (31 October 1984), the President appointed Rajiv Gandhi (who was not a member of the Council of Ministers at that time) to act as the Prime Minister. Other Ministers were appointed by the President on his advice. Rajiv Gandhi was later elected as the Leader of Congress (I) Party which was in majority.

138. According to s. 6.2 of the Salaries and Allowances of Ministers Act, 1952, a 'Minister' has been defined as a 'Member of the Council of Ministers' by whatever name called and includes 'Deputy Minister'. Parliamentary Secretaries are not included in the Council of Ministers, but a Parliamentary Secretary can perform all the functions of a Minister in the Lok Sabha if he is a member of the Lok Sabha (Rule 2). Thus Parliamentary Secretary who is not a member of the Lok Sabha, cannot participate in the proceedings of the House.

Prior to the inauguration of the Constitution in 1950, all the members of the Cabinet had the same status. But, after the General Election in 1952, a three-fold distinction was made in the ministerial hierarchy with the 'Member of the Cabinet' at the top 'Minister of Cabinet Rank' in the middle, and 'Deputy Ministers' in the lowest rung of the ladder.

139. After the General Election in 1952 there were 15 'Members of the Cabinet', 4 'Ministers of Cabinet rank' and 2 'Deputy Ministers' in the 'Council of Ministers'. The Council of Ministers which was formed in 1957, after the second General Elections, consisted of 13 'Ministers', 14 'Ministers of State' and 12 'Deputy Ministers'. After the third General Elections in 1962, the Council of Ministers included 17 'Ministers', 10 'Ministers of State' and 11 'Deputy Ministers'. The Council of Ministers which was constituted in 1967, after the fourth General Elections, consisted of 19 'Members of the Cabinet', 17 'Ministers of State' and 15 'Deputy Ministers'. The Council of Ministers, constituted after the 1971 elections, consisted of 14 'Members of the Cabinet', 22 'Ministers of State' and 17 'Deputy Ministers'. The Council of Ministers which was constituted after the 1977 elections consisted of 20 'Members of the Cabinet'. The Council of Ministers constituted after the 1980 General Elections consisted of 15 'Members of the Cabinet' and 11 'Ministers of State'. The Council of Ministers, which was constituted after the 1984 General Election, consisted of 15 'Members of the Cabinet' and 26 'Ministers of State'. The Council of Ministers which was constituted after the 1989 General Elections, consisted of 19 'Members of the Cabinet', 29 'Ministers of State' and 5 'Deputy Ministers'. The Council of Ministers which was constituted after the 1991 General Elections included 16 'Members of the Cabinet', 35 'Ministers of State' and 7 'Deputy Ministers'. The Council of Ministers constituted after the 1996 General Elections under the Prime Ministership of Atal Bihari Vajpayee consisted of 12 'Cabinet Ministers' only. After the resignation of Vajpayee, the new Council of Ministers which was constituted on 1 June 1996 had 12 'Cabinet Ministers' and 12 'Ministers of State'. The Council of Ministers constituted after the 1998 General Elections under the Prime Ministership of Atal Bihari Vajpayee consisted of 20 'Cabinet Ministers' and 21 'Ministers'.

The expression 'Council of Ministers' is somewhat different from the term 'Cabinet' which does not find a place in the Constitution. While the Cabinet is an inner body within the Council which formulates policy of the Government and meets as often as required, it is seldom that the Council of Ministers meets as a body to transact any state business. The Prime Minister, in his capacity as the head of the Council of Ministers, determines which of the Ministers should be members of the Cabinet. Only the Cabinet Ministers have a right to attend the meetings of the Cabinet. The Ministers of State have no such right but they attend by special invitation.

The salaries and allowances of Ministers are governed by the Salaries and Allowances of Ministers Act, 1952, which came into force with effect from 12 August 1952.

In the States, the Chief Minister is appointed by the Governor who also appoints the other Ministers on the advice of the Chief Minister<sup>141</sup>. In regard to the appointment of a person who is not a member of the Legislative Assembly as a Chief Minister, the Allahabad High Court observed:

Appointment as Chief Minister of a person who is not a member of a Legislative Assembly but commands its support, pending his election to that House within six months, is not prohibited by the Constitution nor does it violate the basic principle of parliamentary government that the Chief Minister or the Prime Minister must have the confidence of the Legislature. Whether such a 'stop-gap' appointment is politically desirable or proper is not a matter for the Court to consider<sup>142</sup>.

In regard to the appointment of a Chief Minister and Ministers, none of whom are members of the State Legislature, the Supreme Court observed:

If the Legislative Assembly of the State endorses the appointment of a Chief Minister and Ministers none of whom are members of the State Legislature, there is nothing in the Constitution which would make this appointment illegal<sup>143</sup>, the only condition being that they should be elected to the Legislature within six months.

of State' (including 4 Ministers of State with independent charge). The 'Council of Ministers' constituted after the 1999 General Elections under the Prime Ministership of Atal Bihari Vajpayee consisted of 25 'Cabinet Ministers' and 44 'Ministers of State' (including 7 Ministers of State with independent charge). The 'Council of Ministers' constituted after the 2004 General Elections under the Prime Ministership of Dr. Manmohan Singh included 28 'Cabinet Ministers' and 39 'Ministers of State' (including 10 Ministers of State with independent charge).

The 'Council of Ministers' constituted after the 2009 General Elections under the Prime Ministership of Dr. Manmohan Singh included 33 'Cabinet Ministers', 38 'Ministers of State' and 7 'Ministers of State' (Independent Charge).

143. Har Sharan Varma v. Tribhuvan Narain Singh, A.I.R. 1971 Supreme Court 1331.

In this case, the appointment on 18 October 1970 of Tribhuvan Narain Singh as Chief Minister of Uttar Pradesh was challenged. Singh was not a member of either House of Legislature of the State of U.P. at the time of his appointment. It was contended that clause (4) of article 164 only applied when a Minister, who was a member of the Legislature of the State, lost his seat and the idea behind clause (4) of article 164 was to give him a period of six months to get himself re-elected. The Supreme Court rejected this contention and dismissed the appeal.

The Ministers hold office during the pleasure of the Governor<sup>144</sup>, and the Council of Ministers is collectively responsible to the Legislative Assembly of the State<sup>145</sup>.

In West Bengal, the action of the Governor in dismissing the United Front Ministry and appointing Dr. P.C. Ghosh as Chief Minister on 21 November 1967, was challenged in the Calcutta High Court. Holding that in appointing a Chief Minister, the Governor must act in his own discretion, and rejecting the argument that only the State Assembly, and not the Governor, could remove a Council of Ministers from office, the Court observed:

Article 164(1) provides that the Ministers shall hold office during the pleasure of the Governor... The right of the Governor to withdraw the pleasure during which the Ministers hold office, is absolute and unrestricted...

The provision in clause (2) of article 164, that the Ministers shall be collectively responsible to the Legislative Assembly of the State, does not in any manner fetter or restrict the Governor's power to withdraw the pleasure during which the Ministers hold office. Collective responsibility contemplated by clause (2) of article 164 means that the Council of Ministers is answerable to the Legislative Assembly of the State. It follows that a majority of the members of the Legislative Assembly can at any time express its want of confidence in the Council of Ministers. But that is as far as the Legislative Assembly can go. The Constitution has not conferred any power on the Legislative Assembly of the State to dismiss or remove from office the Council of Ministers. If a Council of Ministers refuses to vacate the office of Ministers, even after a motion of no-confidence has been passed against it in the Legislative Assembly of the State, it will then be for the Governor to withdraw the pleasure during which the Council of Ministers hold office<sup>146</sup>.

In a Resolution adopted at the Conference of the Presiding Officers, it was recommended that—

The question whether a Chief Minister has lost the confidence of the Assembly shall, at all times, be decided in the Assembly<sup>147</sup>.

146. Mahabir Prasad Sharma v. Prafulla Chandra Ghosh, A.I.R. 1969 Calcutta 198.

147. Resolution adopted at the Emergent Conference of the Presiding Officers on 7 April 1968.

When the question of the prorogation of the Madhya Pradesh Legislative Assembly by the Governor on the advice of the outgoing Chief Minister was being discussed in the Lok Sabha in March 1969, the Union Home Minister observed:

If the House is in session and if there is a doubt about the certainty of the support the Government enjoys, it is the Legislature which can and should decide the issue, and not the Governor. When the House is not in session and that too particularly before the House is called after the elections, etc., in such a situation alone the Governor has perforce to use his discretion and find out who has the necessary support<sup>148</sup>.

A coalition Ministry with Congress (R) as the major partner was functioning in Uttar Pradesh under the Chief Minister belonging to Bahujan Kisan Dal (BKD). When the gulf between the two parties widened, the Chief Minister asked thirteen Congress (R) Ministers and one BKD Deputy Minister, on 24 September 1970, to submit their resignations forthwith. Not having received these, he advised the Governor to drop them from the Council of Ministers.

Having been asked by the Governor for his advice, the Attorney-General inter alia said that since the Governor was conscious that the Chief Minister did not command the confidence of the Legislative Assembly, he could call for the resignation of the Chief Minister, and on the latter's failure to heed the advice, dismiss him without waiting for the verdict of the Assembly scheduled to meet on 6 October.

On 29 September 1970 in his report to the President recommending the introduction of President's rule in the State, the Governor said:

The Chief Minister of a coalition Government cannot be treated at par with the Chief Minister of a single party majority Government in the matter of removal of Ministers or re-constitution of Council of Ministers which involves a fundamental change in the complexion of the Government. When an occasion for such reconstitution of the Government arises, the spirit of the Constitution demands that the Chief Minister should first tender his resignation and then re-constitute the Government. In defence of the Constitution, the Governor cannot permit any other course to be taken.

Functions of the Council of Ministers

The Council of Ministers is charged with the duty to aid and advise the President who, in the exercise of his functions, acts in accordance with such advice<sup>149</sup>. In this connection, the Andhra Pradesh High Court observed:

If final authority of deciding matters is not intended to be conferred on the Council of Ministers, they could not, on principle, be held responsible to Lok Sabha. Thus the Minister or Council of Ministers take binding decisions and the President acts according to the advice thus given<sup>150</sup>.

It is, however, the Cabinet which acts in the name of, and exercises all the powers on behalf of, the Council of Ministers — it is the pivot around which the entire administration of the country revolves. Its main function is to formulate and present to Parliament for its approval the policy according to which it is going to carry out the administration. It is responsible for the implementation of the policy as approved by the Parliament.

Problems are bound to crop up when several Ministers are involved in implementing the policy on a matter. It is for the Cabinet to coordinate and guide the various steps taken by the different Ministries so that the divergent, and sometimes conflicting, claims of various Ministries are harmonised and directed into a fruitful channel.

As the Council of Ministers is collectively responsible to the Lok Sabha, it is the responsibility of the Cabinet to see that the will of the nation as expressed in Parliament is carried out. To that end, it, inter alia, prepares the necessary legislative programme and the concerned Ministers introduce their Bills in Parliament and pilot them through it.

Council of Ministers and the Lok Sabha

After a General Election to the Lok Sabha, the Prime Minister and the Ministers are appointed and administered oaths of office and of secrecy<sup>151</sup>, before the new Lok Sabha holds its first sitting. The Prime Minister and the other Ministers have also to make and subscribe oath or affirmation as members of Parliament in the House to which they belong<sup>152</sup>, before taking their allotted seats in the House<sup>153</sup>. In case the Council of Ministers is reconstituted during the term of the Lok Sabha, all the Ministers, including those who were members of the outgoing Council of Ministers, are administered oaths of office and of secrecy de novo.

When a new Minister is appointed and sworn in, the Prime Minister, or in his absence, the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs presents him to the Speaker and the House at the earliest possible opportunity<sup>154</sup>. Generally, a Minister is introduced to the House before the Question Hour. However, there have been occasions where Ministers were introduced to the House later in the day.

When the Council of Ministers is reconstituted with a new Prime Minister, Ministers, who were not members of the outgoing Council of Ministers, are introduced to the House by the Prime Minister<sup>155</sup>.

A person who is not a member of either House of Parliament can be appointed a Minister. But if he does not get a seat in either House within six consecutive months from the date of his appointment as Minister, he ceases to be a Minister<sup>156</sup>. He can, however, be appointed as Minister again when he is elected as a member of Parliament. A Minister has the right to attend both the Houses and participate in their proceedings but he cannot vote in the House of which he is not a member. A Minister who is a member of one House has the right to speak in, and otherwise to take part in the proceedings of the other House, but has no right to vote there<sup>157</sup>.

Summons for sessions of the Lok Sabha is not issued to a Minister who is not a member of the House (including the one who may not be a member of either House). A Minister who is not a member of the Lok Sabha can speak in the House only in his capacity as a Minister and not in his personal capacity<sup>158</sup>.

During the Question Hour, the Parliamentary Secretaries or the Deputy Ministers concerned generally answer the question put down in the name of their Ministers in the list of questions. The Ministers or the Ministers of State intervene when they find it necessary to clarify certain points raised by way of supplementaries.

Individual Ministers are responsible for attending to the business as put down in the list of business for the day. Apart from dealing with motions, resolutions, etc., the primary duty of a Minister is to ensure that his Bill has a smooth passage through the House.

In the case of important debates such as motion of thanks to the President for his Address or motion of no-confidence in the Council of Ministers, it is the Prime Minister<sup>159</sup> who generally explains the position of the Government in respect of the points raised during the debates irrespective of the fact that other Ministers might have participated therein, and provides leadership to the Council of Ministers.

The Council of Ministers is collectively responsible to the Lok Sabha<sup>160</sup>. The collective responsibility of the Council of Ministers to the Lok Sabha implies that a motion of no-confidence can be moved against the Council of Ministers as a whole and not against an individual Minister.

In a writ petition filed in the Madras High Court, it was contended that as under article 75(3) the Council of Ministers “shall be collectively responsible to the House of People”, the Council of Ministers cease to hold office as soon as the Lok Sabha is dissolved. According to the petitioner, no void in the carrying out of Government will be created because the President can exercise the executive power of the Union either directly or through officers subordinate to him in accordance with the Constitution as provided in article 53(1). In the appeal by certificate directed against the judgment of the High Court which had dismissed the writ petition, the Supreme Court held that the constitutional provision about a Council of Ministers “to aid and advise the President in the exercise of his functions” is mandatory and, therefore, the President cannot exercise the executive powers without the aid and advice of the Council of Ministers. The Supreme Court further held that article 75(3) only applies when the Lok Sabha does not stand dissolved or prorogued<sup>161</sup>.

VI. Parliamentary Secretaries

The institution of the office of Parliamentary Secretary has no statutory origin nor does it derive authority from the Constitution of India. According to Rule 2 of the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha, ‘Minister’, means a member of the Council of Ministers, a Minister of State, a Deputy Minister or a Parliamentary Secretary.

The Office of the Parliamentary Secretary in India was first created in 1951<sup>162</sup>. Unlike the Ministers, the oath is administered to the Parliamentary Secretaries by the Prime Minister and not by the President. According to the original concept, Parliamentary Secretaries are appointed purely for the purpose of assisting a Minister in parliamentary work. They may prepare the papers for the Ministers or study special questions but they have no executive powers and as such cannot pass any orders. The whole purpose is to give an opportunity to young members of Parliament to get a little training. If the Parliamentary Secretaries have any kind of official work when Parliament is not sitting, a daily allowance is paid to them for the actual days of work.

Although Parliamentary Secretaries were appointed by the Prime Minister from time to time since 1951<sup>163</sup>, the question of powers, functions, status, Salaries and Allowances in respect of Parliamentary Secretaries was not examined until 1984. At this stage, a need was felt to identify the functions of the Parliamentary Secretaries

Also see Chapter III- President in Relation to Parliament. Proviso to article 74(1) was inserted vide s. II of the Constitution (Forty-fourth Amendment) Act, 1978, whereby the President may require the Council of Ministers to reconsider such advice, either generally or otherwise, and the President shall act in accordance with the advice tendered after such reconsideration. 163. Since 1951, a total of 33 Parliamentary Secretaries have been appointed, the last being Nakul Naik who was appointed on 24 November 1990. From 1967 to 11 November 1984, No Parliamentary Secretary was appointed.

and also for revision of their salary, Allowances, etc. Accordingly, the functions of the Parliamentary Secretaries were considered in the meeting of the Committee of Secretaries, once in May 1985 and again in June 1989. The Committee identified the following as status, powers and functions of Parliamentary Secretary:—

- (i) The appointment of a Parliamentary Secretary is entirely on the discretion of the Prime Minister who will decide when and who should be appointed as Parliamentary Secretary;
- (ii) The salary, allowances and other pre-requisites will be decided by the Government from time to time keeping in view various factors including the exigencies of duties that may require to be performed by the Parliamentary Secretary;
- (iii) He will assist the Minister in his official work.
- (iv) He will represent the Department/Ministry in the House to which he belongs; and
- (v) He will perform such functions as may be assigned to him by the Minister.

VII. Leader of the House

The Prime Minister, who is the Leader of the majority party in the Lok Sabha, functions as the Leader of the House in the Lok Sabha except when he is not a member of the Lok Sabha. The seniormost Minister, who is a member of the Rajya Sabha, is appointed by the Prime Minister as the Leader of the House in the Rajya Sabha.

In January 1966, the appointment of a Prime Minister who was a member of the Rajya Sabha necessitated the appointment of a separate Leader of the House in the Lok Sabha. The Prime Minister made an order appointing a Minister who was a member of the Lok Sabha to be the Leader of the House and communicated it to the Speaker. On being informed by the Prime Minister, the Speaker introduced to the House the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs as the Leader of the House in Lok Sabha<sup>164</sup>.

In July 1991, at the time of the Constitution of the Tenth Lok Sabha, the Prime Minister who was not a member of either House of Parliament, nominated the Minister of Human Resource Development, as the Leader of the House in the Lok Sabha. On being so informed, the Speaker introduced to the House, the Minister of Human Resource Development as the Leader of the House<sup>165</sup>. The Prime Minister was elected to the Lok Sabha in a by-election in November, 1991 and took oath as member of the Lok Sabha. In December 1991, when the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs informed the Speaker that the Prime Minister would be the Leader of the House, the Speaker informed the House accordingly<sup>166</sup>.

164. L.S. Deb., 14-2-1966, cc. 20-21. Rule 2 lays down:

“Leader of the House means the Prime Minister, if he is a member of the House, or a Minister who is a member of the House and is nominated by the Prime Minister to function as the Leader of the House.”

165. L.S. Deb., 10-7-1991, c. 34.

166. L.S. Deb., 6-12-1991, cc. 570-71.

In 1996, the Prime Minister who was not a member of either House of the Parliament nominated the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs and Railways as the Leader of the House and the Speaker introduced the Minister as the Leader of the House<sup>167</sup>.

In 1997, the Prime Minister who was a member of Rajya Sabha, nominated the Minister of Railways as the Leader of the House but no formal announcement in this regard was made in the House.

Similarly in 2004, the Prime Minister who was a member of Rajya Sabha, nominated the Minister of Defence as the Leader of the House but no formal announcement in this regard was made in the House. He was introduced to the House on 4 June 2004 by the Speaker.

It has been the practice that during the protracted absence of the Leader of the House when Lok Sabha is in session, the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, in consultation with the former, intimates to the Speaker as to who would act as the Leader of the House, but no formal announcement in this regard is made in the House<sup>168</sup>.

The Leader of the House is an important parliamentary functionary and exercises direct influence on the course of business. The whole policy of the Government, especially so far as it is expressed in the inner life of the House and in measures dealing with the course of its business, is concentrated in his person.

The arrangement of Government business is the ultimate responsibility of the Leader of the House, though the details are settled, subject to his control, by the Chief Whip who is also vested with the portfolio of the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs. The Leader of the House makes proposals for the dates of summoning and prorogation of the House for the approval of the Speaker. He has to draw up the programme of official business to be transacted in a session of Parliament, namely Bills, motions, discussions on general specific subjects like five-year Plans, foreign policy, economic or industrial policy and other important State activities. He fixes inter se priorities for various items of business to ensure their smooth passage.

After setting tentative programme for the whole session, he maps out weekly and daily programme depending upon the state of progress of work and announces the programme to the members in advance every week<sup>169</sup>. He may be a member of the Business Advisory Committee or the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs may liaise for him on the Committee which determines the allocation of time for Government Bills and other business on the basis of suggestions made by or received from the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs from time to time.

168. On 6 March 1961, when the Prime Minister left India to attend the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference in London, the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs wrote to the Speaker saying that the Minister of Finance would act as the Leader of the House during the Prime Minister's absence. He, however, mentioned to the Speaker that no formal announcement need be made in the House. A similar communication was received from the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs on 30 August 1961, when the Prime Minister went abroad to attend the Non-aligned Summit at Belgrade.

169. The announcement regarding the Government business for the next week is in practice made by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, on behalf of the Leader of the House.

The Leader of the House shapes the course and content of legislation inasmuch as his is often the final voice in deciding as to what amendments will be acceptable, what Private Members' Bill will receive the support of the Government, and whether a question should be left to a free vote. The Leader of the House may, therefore, be said to be perhaps the most influential figure in the entire legislative process.

The Leader of the House deals with procedural matters relating to the business of the House and advises the House in every difficulty as it arises. For that purpose he is usually present either in the House or in his room<sup>170</sup>, and has the right to address the House whenever he likes<sup>171</sup>.

He is supplied in advance with a copy of the personal statement which a member may make in explanation of his resignation from the Office of Minister<sup>172</sup>. He can move, or delegate his functions to any other member to move a motion that the seat of a member should be declared vacant under clause (4) of article 101<sup>173</sup>. The Leader of the House can request the Speaker to fix a day or part thereof for sitting of the House in secret<sup>174</sup>. He can move or authorise any other member to move a motion that the proceedings in the House during the secret sitting be no longer treated as secret<sup>175</sup>. He is available to the Speaker for consultation on behalf of the Government. He is consulted by the Speaker in regard to the arrangement of Government business<sup>176</sup>, and allotment of days or allocation of time for:

discussion of the matters referred to in the President's Address to the House under art. 87(1)<sup>177</sup>;

In 1966, the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs functioned as the Leader of the House. On an objection being raised by certain members in the House on 17 February 1966, as to the announcement of the Government business for the next week by the Leader of the House, he said: "Some of the functions which I was performing here as Minister of Parliamentary Affairs were functions allotted to the Leader of the House and those powers were then delegated to me by the then Leader of the House. Now I am doing those things in my own right." See L.S. Deb., 17-2-1966, cc. 940-41.

170. Between January 1966 and March 1967, July-November 1991 and May 1996-December 1997, when the Prime Minister was not a member of the Lok Sabha, the function of the Leader of the House was not limited only to the fixing of the subject and order of Government business but he also advised the Prime Minister on all matters connected with Parliamentary Affairs. He used to sit next to the Prime Minister on the Government front bench. In case of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Lok Sabha also, the Prime Minister was not the member of the House and the Leader of the House sat next to him on the Government front bench.

172. Rule 199.

173. Rule 241—The present practice is that it is the Committee on Absence of Members who first report, under Rules 326(1) (ii), that the House should declare the seat of a member vacant. The report, before presentation to the House, is forwarded to the Leader of the House for comments. After it has been agreed to by him and adopted by the House, the Chairperson of the Committee moves a motion as required in Rule 241(1), on giving notice thereof.

transaction of private members' business on any day other than a Friday<sup>178</sup>; discussion and voting of demands for grants<sup>180</sup>; and consideration and passing of an amendment to regulation, rule, sub-rule, bye-law, etc. laid before the House<sup>181</sup>.

As a matter of convention, the Leader of the House is generally consulted when a motion for suspension of a member from the service of the House is moved<sup>182</sup> or a question involving a breach of privilege either of a member or of the House or of a committee is raised in the House.

In his day-to-day activities, the Leader of the House acts as leader of his party but at times he acts as the spokesman and representative of the whole House. The main occasions of his so doing are when the House as a whole desires to define its position towards some external body, as for instance in the case of a difference with the Rajya Sabha or some breach of the privileges of the Lok Sabha or when it is desired to give expression to the feelings of the Lok Sabha on some event of importance in home or foreign affairs. When the House speaks as a corporate body he speaks on its behalf.

The responsibility of the Leader of the House is not only to the Government and its supporters in the House but to the Opposition and the House as a whole. He maintains liaison between the Government and the Opposition groups in the House. He is the guardian of the legitimate rights of the Opposition as well as those of the Government. As such, he should be among the foremost champions of the rights of the House as a whole and see that the House is not denied, despite pressure from any quarter, its rightful opportunities.

The Leader of the House, it has been aptly said, should possess an intuitive instinct about what is going on in the minds of members on both sides, and in case of any trouble brewing, he should be able to assess the nature and extent of the commotion. When there is a strong parliamentary pressure on any matter, especially when it comes from both sides, he must be ready to bend to it<sup>183</sup>.

182. Normally, when the Speaker names a member, it is the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs who moves a motion for suspension of the member from the service of the House for a specified period. The Motion for expulsion of ten members of Lok Sabha who had been held guilty of improper conduct in the 'Cash for query' scam was moved by Pranab Mukherjee, Leader of the House and the then Minister of Defence, before it was adopted by the House on 23 December 2005.

183. Herbert Morrison: Government and Parliament: A Survey from the Inside, London 1964, p. 132.

As regards the duties and functions of the Leader of the House, the Page Committee observed:

He should be present in the House for most of the time and during the Question Hour and thereafter, at the beginning of the normal business of the House. His foremost duty is to assist the Speaker in the conduct of the business. He should be at all times prepared to intervene in the discussions, respond to the demands of the Opposition in the matter of giving opportunity for debate, fixing time and dates for discussion, control unruly behaviour of members and help the Speaker in arriving at decisions in regard to matters before the House. If the Leader of the House is unavoidably absent or otherwise busy he should nominate a Deputy Leader who should in the absence of the Leader of the House perform the above functions at any time. Thus, either the Leader or the Deputy Leader should be present in the House<sup>184</sup>.

VIII. Leader of the Opposition

In any system of Government there will always be a struggle for power. Those who are not in office will constantly try to oust those who form the Government for the time being. Such struggle can take place in various ways—by forcible seizure of power, revolution, or elective process. The parliamentary system of government makes it obligatory for the opposing forces to struggle for power on the floor of the House by recognised parliamentary methods. One of the biggest parliamentary achievements of the present century is that the role of the Opposition has been formally recognized and is given a due place in the parliamentary system. The Leader of the Opposition is thus an important person. He is a shadow Prime Minister and he has to be prepared to take up the responsibility of forming a government if his party secures a majority at an election or if the government resigns or is defeated. He has, therefore, to measure carefully his words and actions, and on a matter of national interest to act with as much responsibility as is expected of the Prime Minister. Though he may criticize the Government vehemently on the floor of the House and outside in his country, but when abroad he should eschew party politics.

The process of parliamentary government is based on mutual forbearance between the Opposition and the Government. If the Leader of the Opposition lets the Prime Minister govern, he, in turn, is permitted to oppose. On certain matters, such as foreign relations, defence policy, etc., the Prime Minister may at times consult the Leader of the Opposition before making a commitment. And in times of grave national crisis, the Leader of the Opposition usually underlines the unity of the nation on a particular issue by openly identifying himself with the Government policy.

The Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition try to meet each other's convenience as far as possible, consistent with their basic policies. While eschewing obstructionism as such, the Leader of the Opposition, if he feels that the Government is trying to slide over an important issue and shun parliamentary criticism, can rightfully demand debate on that issue.

184. Report of the Page Committee, op. cit., para 47(1).

The Leader of the Opposition is the official spokesman of the minority or minorities and to that end he zealously watches any encroachment on their rights. His task, though not so difficult as that of the Prime Minister, is of sufficiently great public importance because he has to maintain a team—a ‘shadow Cabinet’—ready to take over administration. In performing his duties and obligations, the Leader of the Opposition has to take into account not only what he is today but what he hopes to be tomorrow.

The Leader of the Opposition must himself be a skilled parliamentarian and familiar with tricky situations. He should be fully conversant with the rules of the House so that he might utilise the opportunities provided thereunder. Vigilance is his hallmark and he must, therefore, be in his place constantly.

The position and responsibility of the Leader of the Opposition has been summed up by the British Prime Minister, Harold Macmillan as under:

There is, I suppose, no position more difficult and in some ways more unrewarding than that of a Leader of an Opposition—to criticise, to find fault, and at the same time, of course, to develop his own proposals and policies without the power to implement them. It is in a sense unrewarding, because any man who is conscious of administrative capacity and the desire to operate his own plans must feel all the time a sense of frustration.

He further added:

Equally, under our almost unique system of government the Leader of an Opposition has a very special responsibility to Parliament and to the nation. At moments of danger, moments specially of foreign danger, and particularly also in matters affecting the security and safety of the realm, while he remains a critic he must in a sense be a partner and even a buttress of the Government to which he is opposed. This dual responsibility he must discharge with fidelity.

Prior to the 1977 General Elections to the Lok Sabha, except for a brief spell of one year (December 1969-December 1970), there had been no official ‘Opposition’ in the sense the term is used in the parliamentary system of government<sup>185</sup>. Consequent on the split in the Congress Party in November 1969, the association of members dissociating themselves with the ruling party was given recognition as Opposition party as it satisfied the tests for recognition.<sup>186</sup> The parliamentary party was called Congress Party (Opposition) and its leader was accepted as the Leader of the Opposition<sup>187</sup>. That was the first time since Independence that the Lok Sabha had a recognised Opposition Party and a Leader of the Opposition. After the sixth

185. Under the two-party system, as in Britain, any uncertainty as to which party has the right to be called the ‘Official Opposition’ is obviated: it is the largest minority party which is prepared in the event of the resignation of the Government to assume Office—See May, 23rd edition, p. 247-48.

He was given a room in the Parliament House and no other privileges. He did not function as a Leader of Collective Opposition; other Opposition parties/groups did not give up their right to speak for themselves. The Leader of the Opposition could not even make obituary references on behalf of all Opposition parties/groups.

Lok Sabha elections, the Janata Party came into power and the membership of the hitherto ruling Congress Party was reduced to the second largest in the Lok Sabha. The Congress Parliamentary Party was recognised as the Opposition Party and its leader as the Leader of the Opposition.

The Page Committee recommended that the leader of the largest recognised Opposition Party (whether a regular party or a party composed of different parties or groups) should be recognised as the Leader of the Opposition. According to the Committee, it would be a healthy parliamentary convention if the Leader of the Opposition is invited by the Chief Minister before the latter makes any policy statements in the House and is given a copy of the statement in advance, and his suggestions for fixing any particular business on a particular day are, as far as possible, accepted by the Speaker and the Leader of the House. The Committee further suggested that the Leader of the Opposition should be paid a salary, and provided with office as well as residential accommodation and some secretarial staff<sup>188</sup>.

The Leaders of the Opposition in the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha are now accorded statutory recognition and given salary and certain other facilities and amenities under the Salary and Allowances of Leaders of Opposition in Parliament Act, 1977<sup>189</sup>.

Besides, the Speaker provides certain facilities to the Leader of the Opposition, like (i) seat in the Lok Sabha in the front row left to the Chair next to the seat of Deputy Speaker; and (ii) a room in Parliament House with Secretarial and other facilities. The Leader of the Opposition also enjoys certain privileges on ceremonial occasions, like (i) escorting the Speaker-elect to the rostrum; and (ii) seat in the front row at the time of Address by the President to both the Houses of Parliament.

IX. Whips

In a legislative body, not only the fate of a particular measure under consideration, but the very life of the Council of Ministers itself may depend upon the result of a single division. When the division bell rings, about three and a half minutes are given to the members to rush into the Chamber from the Lobbies, Library, Parliament Library Building and Annexe, yet the government or any party cannot take it for granted that its followers would always be present in sufficient number in the precincts of the House at the time of a division. The duty of keeping the members of a party on hand accordingly devolves upon the Whips<sup>190</sup>.

188. Report of the Page Committee, op. cit., paras 48-50.

189. The Leader of the Opposition means a member of the House who is for the time being the Leader in that House of the party in opposition to the Government having the greatest numerical strength and recognised as such by the Speaker.

Explanation—When there are two or more parties in opposition to the Government, having the same numerical strength, the Speaker shall, having regard to the status of parties, recognise any one of the leaders of such parties as the Leader of the Opposition and such recognition shall be final and conclusive (The Salary and Allowances of Leaders in Parliament Act, 1977).

190. The metaphor is borrowed from the hunting field, and its parliamentary application can be traced to Burke who, in a debate in the House of the Commons, described how the King's Ministers had made great efforts to bring their followers together, how they had sent for their friends to the north and to Paris, whipping them in. The phrase adopted by Burke caught the public fancy and soon became popular—Ilbert: Parliament, Its History, Constitution and Practice, London, 1948, p. 135.

In the parliamentary form of Government, a party has its own internal organisation inside Parliament and is served by a number of officials known as the Whips, chosen from members of the party itself. In fact, the efficient and smooth working of parliamentary democracy depends to a very large extent on the Whips of the party in power or parties in Opposition.

The main function of the Whips is, as stated above, to keep members of their party within sound of the division bell whenever any important business is under consideration in the House. Whips are responsible for the attendance of the members at the time of important divisions. During sessions, the Whips of different parties send to their supporters periodic notices, also sometimes called 'Whips', warning them when important divisions are expected, telling them the hour when a vote will probably take place, and requesting them to be in attendance at that time. The importance of the division is indicated by underscoring the notice by a number of lines, or upto three very thick lines.<sup>191</sup>

The Whips have to know their men. This involves a close contact with all members and knowledge of their interests, special aptitudes, qualities and potentialities. The Whips take these aspects into account while sending the list of speakers to the Chair in the interest of quality of debate and deliberation or suggesting names of members of their parties for nomination on parliamentary committees. They keep members supplied with information about the business of the House and enforce party discipline. Being constantly in touch with the members in the lobbies, etc., of the House, the Whips, acting as intermediaries between the leaders and the rank and file of their parties, keep the former in touch with the currents of opinion not only within their own party and thereby nip the incipient revolt in the bud but also to some extent with other movements of opinion inside the House. And it is through the Whips that members of a party come to know about their leader's views and the plans into which the leader thinks it necessary or expedient to initiate them. The Whips are the active agents within the parties—a channel of communication whereby one party negotiates with another concerning topics for debates or conduct of business in the House<sup>192</sup>.

It has been aptly said that the Whips are not only shock-absorbers, but also indicators of the party; they are not only advisers to the leader, but also the binding force in the party; they are not only barometers of the different regions and opinions but also the counsellors of members<sup>193</sup>.

191. Realising the vital role played by the Chief Whips and leaders of parties and groups in Parliament as important party functionaries, an Act namely, The Leaders and Chief Whips of Recognised Parties and Groups in Parliament (Facilities) Act (Act 5 of 1999) was passed during the period of the Twelfth Lok Sabha. The said Act inter alia provides additional Secretarial and telephone facilities to the Leaders and Chief Whips. They would be provided with a Grade III Stenographer of the level of Private Secretary.

192. In the U.K., the Government Chief Whip and the Opposition Chief Whip constitute what are known as the 'usual channels' whereby negotiations are carried on regarding conduct of public business. Morrison: Government and Parliament, op. cit., p. 102.

193. From a speech given by the Government Chief Whip at a Conference of Congress Party Whips in September, 1952.

Government Chief Whip

The Chief Whip of the Government Party in the Lok Sabha is the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs<sup>194</sup>. In the Rajya Sabha, the Minister of State for Parliamentary Affairs holds this position. The Chief Whip is directly responsible to the Leader of the House. It is part of his duties to advise the Government on parliamentary business and to maintain a close liaison with the Ministers in regard to parliamentary business affecting their Departments.

The Chief Whip is the eyes and ears of the leader of the party so far as the members are concerned. He conveys the wishes of the leader to the members of the party and keeps the leader informed of the current opinion in the party as also the moods and inclinations of individual members when these deserve special notice. During sessions, in his capacity as adviser to the leader, he normally meets the Prime Minister not only for one interview daily but also several times in the course of the day for brief consultations.

The Chief Whip is assisted by one or two Ministers of State and at times by Deputy Ministers also<sup>195</sup>. With their assistance, he controls the members of the party in power and ensures that during sittings there is quorum in the House<sup>196</sup> and that adequate number of members of the party are present at the time of voting. For this purpose, he sends them advance intimation through the familiar system of ordinary one, two and three line whips to indicate the extent of urgency attached to the vote on a particular measure before the House. Apart from making the House and keeping the House, the Chief Whip has the hand in shaping the course, tone and tenor of debate on special occasions for he selects the speakers from his party and hands over a list to the Speaker for facilitating the process of 'catching his eye'. The responsibility of keeping everybody at his post and keeping his party united, strong and well-knit falls on him. He selects members for select committees and other parliamentary and Government assignments keeping in view the background, experience, aptitude, qualifications, etc., of members of his party. This gives him quite a wide power of patronage which comes handy in keeping the party members amenable to his influence.

During the course of actual working, Whips of the Government Party and of parties in the Opposition come into contact with each other to sort out matters of common interest and to understand and accommodate each other on many a crucial 194. The Chief Whip was given a ministerial status in 1949. Till 1962, his rank was that of a Minister of State when he was made a Minister of Cabinet rank. Consequent on the appointment of the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs as the Leader of the House in the Lok Sabha in February 1966, the new Government Chief Whip was given the status of the Minister of State. But it was again raised to the status of Cabinet rank in March 1967, when the Prime Minister became the Leader of the House.

195. Prior to 30 June 1970, the Government Chief Whip had two Deputy Chief Whips to assist him, besides a number of Regional Whips. A Government Deputy Chief Whip was being paid a salary of Rs. 1,650 per month, in lieu of the salary and allowances to which he was entitled as a member of Parliament— U.S.Q. No. 951, L.S. Deb., 31-7-1970.

196. The Speaker has remarked that it is the duty of Government to maintain quorum—L.S. Deb., 28-4-1955, c. 6678; see also H.P. Deb., 30-3-1953, c. 3325; L.S. Deb., 2-8-1955, c. 9175.

occasion when it is convenient for both sides to arrive at mutual understanding. Even in the matter of selection of members of the Opposition for select committees, contact between Whips of the Government and the Opposition becomes important.

Whips, both of the ruling party and those of the Opposition, play a very significant role in the smooth and efficient functioning of parliamentary democracy. Apart from their normal duties of making and keeping the House, they are required to establish and maintain, through a tactful handling of situations, good and amicable relations between the Government and the Opposition benches—a pre-requisite for the smooth running of parliamentary business<sup>197</sup>.

The question whether the Chief Whip of a party is competent to issue a written whip to some members of his party on the floor of the House came up for discussion in the Lok Sabha as a question of privilege on 14 December 1987.

Although leave to raise the matter as question of privilege was granted, no specific decision was taken by the Lok Sabha as no further motion to consider the matter in the House or to refer it to the Committee of Privileges was moved<sup>198</sup>.

X. Comptroller and Auditor-General

The Comptroller and Auditor-General of India is not an Officer of Parliament. He is an independent constitutional authority, not directly answerable to the House, but represented there only through a Minister.

On 17 March 1960, a member suggested that a letter received by the Speaker from the Comptroller and Auditor-General in connection with certain remarks made by the Defence Minister in the House on 10 March 1960, about the Auditor-General might be laid on the Table. The Speaker in this connection remarked:

The Auditor-General is not an Officer of this House. He is an Officer under the President. Under the Constitution, he is bound to send a report to the President and he (the President) causes it to be laid on the Table of the House through a Minister<sup>199</sup>.

The Comptroller and Auditor-General is appointed by the President by Warrant under his hand and seal and cannot be removed from his Office except by an order of the President passed after an address by each House of Parliament in the prescribed manner<sup>200</sup>.

200. Art. 148(1) read with art. 124(4).

The President generally makes appointment to the Office of the Comptroller and Auditor-General on the advice of the Prime Minister<sup>201</sup>. Before entering upon his Office, the Comptroller and Auditor-General makes and subscribes, before the President, or some person appointed in that behalf by the President, an oath or affirmation according to the form set for the purpose<sup>202</sup>. The Comptroller and Auditor-General is not eligible for further Office either under the Government of India or under the Government of any State after he has ceased to hold his Office<sup>203</sup>.

There is a parity of status between the Comptroller and Auditor-General and a Judge of the Supreme Court in several ways. The Constitution provides that the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall only be removed from Office in like manner and on like grounds as a Judge of the Supreme Court<sup>204</sup>. As regards the salary and other conditions of service of the Comptroller and Auditor-General, the Constitution lays down that these shall be such as may be determined by Parliament by law<sup>205</sup>. The Comptroller and Auditor-General's (Duties, Powers and Conditions of Service) Act, 1971 provided that the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall be paid a salary which is equal to the salary of a Judge of the Supreme Court. As regards his term of Office, the Act provided that he shall hold Office for a term of six years from the date on which he assumes such Office or till he attains the age of sixty-five years, whichever is earlier. The Act also made detailed provisions for pension as well as for other conditions of service of the Comptroller and Auditor-General. The provisions of the Act have since been amended in 1976, 1984, 1987 and again in 1994. The amendment made in 1987<sup>206</sup> provides that a person who demits Office as Comptroller and Auditor-General, shall be entitled to a pension which is equal to the pension payable to a Judge of the Supreme Court and such pension (including commutation of pension), family pension and gratuity as are admissible to a Judge of the Supreme Court under the Supreme Court Judges Act and the rules made thereunder. It also provides that the conditions of service relating to travelling allowance, provision of rent-free residence and exemption from payment of income tax on the value of such rent-free residence, conveyance facilities, sumptuary allowance, medical facilities and such other conditions of service as are for the time being applicable to a Judge of the Supreme Court under 202. Art. 148(2). For specimen of the form, see Form IV, Third Schedule to the Constitution.

203. Art. 148(4).

The following appointments of the Comptroller and Auditor-General after retirement have been held as not in violation of the letter and spirit of this article:

V. Narahari Rao's appointment in 1956 as an Executive Director of the international Bank. A.K. Chanda's appointment in 1960 as Chairman of the Third Finance Commission, constituted under article 280—see L.S. Deb., 12-12-1960, cc. 5040-42.

the Supreme Court Judges Act, and the rules made thereunder, shall so far as may be, apply to a serving or retired Comptroller and Auditor-General as the case may be<sup>207</sup>.

The duties and powers of the Comptroller and Auditor-General have been prescribed by law made by Parliament<sup>208</sup>. He is responsible for compiling the accounts of the Union and of each State, except the accounts relating to Defence and Railways<sup>209</sup>, and for keeping them, where necessary. He is responsible for preparing the annual accounts separately for the Union and each of the States and Union territories having Legislative Assemblies showing the receipts and disbursements and to submit them to the President, the Governor or the Administrator, as the case may be. The President can, however, after consultation with the Comptroller and Auditor-General, by order relieve him from the responsibility for compiling the accounts of the Union or the accounts of any particular services or Departments of the Union and after the Comptroller and Auditor-General has been so relieved, the President can further relieve him of the responsibility for the preparation and submission of accounts of the Union showing the annual receipts and disbursements under the respective heads of account. The Governor of a State is also empowered to do the same in respect of the accounts of the State, with the previous approval of the President and after consultation with the Comptroller and Auditor-General<sup>210</sup>. Where accounts are compiled by the Comptroller and Auditor-General, he has also to prepare and submit an Appropriation Account. He audits all expenditure from the Consolidated Fund of India, of each State and of each Union territory having a legislative Assembly and also of all transactions relating to the Contingency Funds and the Public Accounts.

The Comptroller and Auditor-General is authorised to audit the accounts of bodies or authorities substantially financed by grants or loans from the Consolidated Fund of India or a State or a Union territory having a Legislative Assembly<sup>211</sup>. He can also scrutinise the procedures of sanctioning a grant or a loan by an authority<sup>212</sup>.

208. The Comptroller and Auditor-General's (Duties, Powers and Conditions of Service) Act, 1971.

209. Accounts relating to Defence are compiled by the Financial Adviser, Defence and those relating to the Railways by the Financial Commissioner, Railways.

The Comptroller and Auditor-General has, however, not been responsible for maintaining the accounts of certain selected Departments (e.g., Food Department, Rehabilitation Department, Supply Department, Lok Sabha, Rajya Sabha, etc.) where separate accounts offices existed for the purpose—The Comptroller and Auditor-General's (Duties, Powers and Conditions of Service) Bill, 1971, Notes on Clause 10.

210. The Comptroller and Auditor-General's (Duties, Powers and Conditions of Service) Act, 1971, ss. 10 and 11, as amended by the Comptroller and Auditor-General's (Duties, Powers and Conditions of Service) Act, 1976, 1984, 1987 and 1994.

Separation of accounts from audit in the Department of the Union, initiated on 1 April 1976, has been completed with almost all Union Departments now keeping their own accounts and the Comptroller and Auditor-General left with audit functions.

211. The Comptroller and Auditor-General's (Duties, Powers and Conditions of Service) Act, 1971, s.14. A grant of loan is treated 'substantial' if it is not less than Rs. 25,00,000 and constitutes not less than 75 per cent of the total expenditure of the body or authority in a financial year.

212. The Comptroller and Auditor-General's (Duties, Powers and Conditions of Service) Act, 1971, s. 15.

The reports of the Comptroller and Auditor-General relating to the accounts of the Union are submitted to the President who causes them to be laid before Parliament<sup>213</sup>. Similarly in the case of States he submits his reports to the Governor of the State, who causes them to be laid before the Legislature of the State<sup>214</sup>.

The audit reports of the Comptroller and Auditor-General stand automatically referred to the Committee on Public Accounts<sup>215</sup>. These form the basis of investigation by the Committee which submits its reports thereon to Parliament.

In case the House wants to have any information from the Comptroller and Auditor-General, it can do so through the Public Accounts Committee. But in case a Committee has not been constituted, it is for the Speaker to decide as to what should be done in the matter, provided members give a notice for raising a discussion in one form or the other<sup>216</sup>.

Though the reports of the Comptroller and Auditor-General are brief, they make a whole year's work of the entire Department available to the Committee. So far as the technical examination of the expenditure incurred by a Government Department is concerned, the Audit Department delves deeply and brings to bear upon such examination its expert knowledge and experience. The Public Accounts Committee then applies its mind from the layman's point of view<sup>217</sup>.

The Comptroller and Auditor-General in India assists the Public Accounts Committee. He detects the points of question in the accounts and presents them with such other information concerning them as he has obtained, and leaves the Committee to pursue them further, to consider them, and report on them<sup>218</sup>.

213. The reports are received by the Ministry of Finance on behalf of the President and the Minister of Finance lays them on the Table of each House of Parliament.

214. Art. 151(2).

The Comptroller and Auditor-General has under him in each State, an Accountant-General whose function is to account and audit both State and Union Government transactions taking place within that State. For the Union territories, there is an 'Accountant-General, Central Revenue'. While under the Government of India Act, 1935, the Auditors-General appointed by the Provinces were independent of the Auditor-General of India, the Accountants-General of States under the Constitution are subordinate to the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India, who is responsible for the financial administration of the whole of India, including the States.

218. At the time of examination of official witnesses, the Comptroller and Auditor-General sits on the right hand side of the Chairperson of the Public Accounts Committee. He assists the Chairperson as the evidence is proceeding and may, with the permission of the Chairperson, ask the witness to clarify a point and make a statement on the facts of a case.

The Comptroller and Auditor-General or any of his senior officer is also present at the other sittings of the Public Accounts Committee and clarifies to the members important points arising out of the Accounts to be examined by them.

At the instance of the Public Accounts Committee, the Comptroller and Auditor-General has on occasions made detailed and further investigations into matters arising out of the examination of Appropriation Accounts by the Committee<sup>219</sup>.

Any note or memorandum asked for by the Committee is invariably sent by the concerned Ministry first to the Comptroller and Auditor-General for verifying the facts contained therein, and then submitted to the Committee<sup>220</sup>.

All papers, including statements showing action taken or proposed to be taken by the Government on the previous recommendations of the Committee which are circulated to the members of the Committee, are usually sent to the Comptroller and Auditor-General. A copy of the draft report prepared by the Secretariat of the Committee under the direction of the Chairperson is sent to the Comptroller and Auditor-General in advance for factual verification.

The Comptroller and Auditor-General also attends the sittings of the Committee on Public Accounts. At the instance of the Public Accounts Committee, the Comptroller and Auditor-General has at times made formal presentations on the Audit Reports<sup>221</sup>. His presence at these sittings is recorded in the proceedings of the Committee<sup>222</sup>.

The Comptroller and Auditor-General also assists the Committee on Public Undertakings in pursuing such matters as have been raised in the Audit Reports (Commercial) or in the Audit Reports pertaining to the Government companies or statutory corporations which have been taken up for examination. The Committee obtains a 'Memorandum of Important Points from the Comptroller and Auditor-General' on the issues raised in the Audit Report. Then suitable questions are framed on the basis of the Audit Reports and the 'Memorandum, furnished by the Comptroller and Auditor-General'.

While taking evidence of the representatives of the Public Undertakings Ministries, on matters dealt with in the Audit Report (Commercial) pertaining to the Undertaking under examination, the Comptroller and Auditor-General or his representative assist the Committee and may, with the permission of the Chairperson, ask the witnesses to clarify a point and may make a statement on the facts of a case<sup>223</sup>.

While taking evidence of the representatives of the Public Undertakings or the Ministry concerned, when examination is based on some audit-paragraph, the officers of Secretariat sit on the left side of the Chairperson and the Comptroller and Auditor-General and his representatives are seated to the right side of the Chairperson. The Comptroller and Auditor-General takes part in the discussion only so far as points relating to audit paras are concerned. Thereafter, he withdraws from the Committee Room.

Prior to taking evidence of officials of an Undertaking, the Committee on Public Undertakings sometimes hold an informal meeting with the Comptroller and Auditor-General for clarification of any point arising out of audit paragraphs<sup>224</sup>.

The Minister of Finance is very often called upon to answer questions in Parliament on matters which are handled by the Comptroller and Auditor-General on his behalf.

Speaker Mavalankar ruled that so long as the Comptroller and Auditor-General was responsible for maintaining accounts in addition to conducting audit, admissibility of questions relating to the former must be regulated as in the case of any other Ministry.

In regard to audit functions of the Comptroller and Auditor-General, questions relating to day-to-day administration are not normally admitted, but questions involving supply of factual data or statistics on matters which have a bearing on policy may be admitted for written answer only, so that the need for raising supplementaries may be avoided. gets the material for answer from the Comptroller and Auditor-General and places it before the House and may answer supplementaries from such additional material as the Comptroller and Auditor-General may have furnished to him. In case the Minister has no information he informs the House that he will request the Comptroller and Auditor-General to look into the matter<sup>225</sup>.

XI. Attorney-General

The Attorney-General is not a member of Parliament or of the Council of Ministers. He has, however, the right to speak in, and otherwise to take part in the proceedings of either House, any joint sittings of the Houses, and any committee of Parliament of which he may be named a member, but he cannot vote<sup>226</sup>. He is entitled to all the privileges and immunities of members of Parliament<sup>227</sup> and when present in the House occupies a seat on the Government benches<sup>228</sup>.

The Attorney-General<sup>229</sup> is appointed by the President on the advice of the Cabinet and holds Office during the pleasure of the President<sup>230</sup>. There is no statutory age limit for his appointment or retirement.

A person eligible for appointment as the Attorney-General must be a citizen of India who should have been for at least five years a Judge of a High Court, or an Advocate of a High Court with at least ten years' standing, or who is in the opinion of the President a distinguished jurist<sup>231</sup>. He receives such remuneration as the President may determine<sup>232</sup>.

228. On 29 April 1963, the Attorney-General occupied seat No. 4 in the front row on the treasury benches—see Minutes of Proceedings, 29-4-1963; on 1 May 1969, the Attorney-General occupied seat No. 6 in the front row on the treasury benches by the side of the Minister of Law.

229. As the name 'Attorney-General' suggests, the Office has been introduced into the political system of the country on the model of the corresponding Office in England. In England, the Office developed by necessity primarily because the Sovereign could not appear in his own courts to support his interest in person and, therefore, a representative or an Attorney of the Crown was necessary. The origin of the Office is thus primarily connected with proceedings in Court of Law. In England, the Attorney-General is the Chief Law Officer of the Crown. The appointment is political and is generally conferred on a successful barrister being a supporter of the party in power. Consequently, the Office changes with every change in the Government.

230. Art. 76(1) and (4). Since there is no function which the President may under the Constitution exercise in his individual judgement, it is evident that in appointing the Attorney-General under clause (1) of article 76, the President will act on ministerial advice and so also in the matter of removal under clause (4) of the article.

In England and other important countries of the Commonwealth such as Australia, Canada and New Zealand, the Attorney-General is invariably a Minister and a member of the Legislature. He has the charge of legal measures and deals with the legal questions on behalf of the Government. The courts have no power to compel the Attorney-General to be examined as a witness.

231. Art. 76(1), read with art. 124(3).

232. Art. 76. See the Law Officers (Condition of Service) Rules, 1987, rule 7.

The Attorney-General is required to advise the Government of India on such legal matters as are referred to him by the Government and to perform such other duties of legal character as are assigned to him by the President from time to time. He has to appear on behalf of the Government in all cases, including suits, appeals and other proceedings, in the Supreme Court or in any High Court, in which the Government of India is concerned<sup>233</sup>. He is also required to appear in courts of law on behalf of the House and the Speaker<sup>234</sup>.

It is also the duty of the Attorney-General to represent the Government in any reference made by the President to the Supreme Court under article 143 of the Constitution and discharge the functions conferred on him by or under the Constitution or under any other law for the time being in force<sup>235</sup>.

The Attorney-General has the right of audience in all courts in India in the performance of his duties<sup>236</sup>. However, the Attorney-General cannot advise or hold briefs for any part except the Government of India or the Government of a State or any University, Government School or College, local authority, Public Service Commission, Port Trust, Port Commissioners, Government aided or managed Hospitals, a Government company as defined in section 617 of the Companies Act, 1956, any Corporation owned or controlled by the State, or any body or institution in which the Government has a preponderating interest<sup>237</sup>.

The Attorney-General and after him the Advocate-General of a State have precedence over the other Advocates and the Supreme Court has the right to issue notices of any proceedings to the Attorney-General and the latter may also apply to be heard in any proceedings<sup>238</sup>.

In order to help Lok Sabha and the Speaker to decide issues with reference to legislative proposals before the House, the Attorney-General has on occasions addressed the House at the suggestion of the Speaker or of the House and given his opinion on the legal and constitutional aspects of the matters before the House. However, the Speaker does not seek advice of the Attorney-General with regard to vires of a Bill—

233. Art. 76(2). See also the Law Officers (Conditions of Service) Rules, 1987, rule 5.

234. The Attorney-General appeared in the Supreme Court on 28 August 1961, on behalf of the Speaker when a motion was adopted by the House on 25 August 1961 instructing the Attorney-General to arrange for appearance and representation in the matter of the writ petition filed by the Editor and the correspondent of the Blitz, in the Supreme Court—see L.S. Deb., 25-8-1961, c. 5058.

235. In order that the Government work may not suffer, the Attorney-General is not permitted to take up private briefs—L.S. Deb., 25-7-1968, U.S.Q. No. 948. See also the Law Officers (Conditions of Service) Rules, 1987, Rule 8(1).

Order XXVIA of the Civil Procedure Code provides that in any suit if it appears to the Court that any substantial question as to the interpretation of the Constitution is involved [i.e., such a question as is referred to in art. 132(1) read with art. 147] the Court shall not proceed to determine that question until after notice has been given to the Attorney-General if the question concerns the Government of India.

236. Art. 76(3).

237. See the Law Officers (Conditions of Service) Rules, 1987, rule 8(a).

238. See order XLIII rules 1 and 2, Supreme Court Rules, 1966.

it is for the Government, when they want to consult him, to bring in the Attorney-General<sup>239</sup>.

When the attendance of the Attorney-General is considered necessary in the House, his presence is generally arranged by the Government<sup>240</sup>.

However, on some occasions it was arranged by the Secretariat, the reason being that the Government was not directly involved in these cases<sup>241</sup>.

239. See L.S. Deb., 22-4-1963, c. 11214; 26-4-1963, c. 12310.

240. On the following occasions, the Attorney-General was present to give his opinion in the House and his presence was arranged by the Government.

On 25 February 1950, to give his opinion in connection with the Preventive Detention Bill, 1950—P. Deb. (II), 25-2-1950, pp. 890-95.

On 9 May 1953, to give his opinion on the constitutionality of Vindhya Pradesh Legislative Assembly (Prevention of Disqualification) Bill, 1953—H.P. Deb. (II), 9-5-1953, cc. 6304-16.

On 28 February 1956, to give his opinion on the interpretation of art. 286(2) in connection with the Sales Tax Laws Validation Bill, 1956—L.S. Deb., 28-2-1956, cc. 1948-49.

On 29 April 1963 to take part in the debate on the Compulsory Deposit Scheme Bill, 1963. L.S. Deb., 29-4-1963, cc. 12752-72.

On 4 August 1993, to give his opinion on:

- (i) Scope and extent of disciplinary authority of the Election Commission in respect of officers and staff deployed for election work; and
- (ii) Scope and extent of authority in the matter of deployment of forces to maintain law and order to ensure free and fair elections, keeping in view the constitutional and legal position that maintenance of law and order is primarily a State subject. (L.S. Deb., 4-8-1993, cc. 689-90)

241. For instance, on 12 March 1954, during discussion on the Indian Cattle Preservation Bill, 1952 (Private Members' Bill), by Seth Govind Das, a member Dr. P.S. Deshmukh, suggested that further consideration of the Bill might be postponed so that House might hear the Attorney-General. The Debate was accordingly postponed. When the Bill was next considered by the House on 1 May 1954, the Attorney-General was present who made a statement. On that day, a request was made on the floor of the House that the Attorney-General might be present also when the Bill was further considered by the House. The Speaker observed that the Attorney-General might be requested accordingly. The Attorney-General was present when the Bill next came up before the House on 2 April 1955. L.S. Deb., 12-3-1954, c. 2018; 1-5-1954, c. 6239.

In four other cases, his presence was deemed necessary in connection with the business of parliamentary committees—the Attorney-General was directed by the Speaker to open the proceedings in the Mudgal Case (Committee on the Conduct of a Member, 1951) and be present in the course of inquiry; the Attorney-General was present at the sitting of the Rules Committee held on 17 April 1956, to give his opinion on the procedure to be followed for passing of a Bill seeking to amend the Constitution in the light of requirements of article 368; the Attorney-General gave evidence before the Joint Committee on the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Bill, 1967, and expressed his opinion on the vires of the Bill and also on the question whether restrictions proposed to be imposed by the Bill on the fundamental rights of speech and expression, assembly and to form associations or unions, were reasonable—Report of J.C., para 8.

On 1 May 1969, the Attorney-General came to the House to give his opinion on the power of Parliament to levy, wealth-tax on agricultural property (clause 24 of the Finance Bill). Questions were sent to him in advance and he based his statement on them. Supplementary questions were asked on the matter—L.S. Deb., 1-5-1969, cc. 224-48. The Attorney-General was invited by a letter by the Secretary after the Deputy Prime Minister had agreed in response to the request of members that he be called to give his opinion.

The position is that the Attorney-General may attend the House on his own, at the request of the Government, on a motion passed by the House or in response to a request by the Speaker if he wishes to hear him on any matter before the House.

Members may give notice of motion asking the Attorney-General to be present in the House in connection with a certain Bill or business before the House. Such notices are admitted and it is for the House to take a decision thereon<sup>242</sup>.

Where the opinion of the Attorney-General has been circulated to members in advance of his taking part in the proceedings, members may give advance notice of questions which they wish to ask of him and the same may be forwarded to the Attorney-General and the concerned Minister<sup>243</sup>.

When taking part in the proceedings of the House, the Attorney-General cannot be cross-examined on the views expressed by him. However, members may be permitted to ask a few questions to seek clarification on some points<sup>244</sup>. No discussion is permissible on the statement made by the Attorney-General in the House.

On 1 May 1954, after the Attorney-General had made a statement regarding ultra vires character of the Indian Cattle Preservation Bill, a member sought the Speaker's permission to make certain observations with respect to the Attorney-General's views. The Speaker observed that it was not the practice to allow a discussion on statements made in the House by the Attorney-General<sup>245</sup>.

The Attorney-General addressed the Joint Committee to enquire into Bofors Contract on 15 February and 8 April 1988 and clarified important legal issues, involved in the enquiry—Report of J.C., para 8.1.

242. On 27 April 1963, a motion was adopted and the Attorney-General was present in the House on 29 April 1963, to take part in the debate on the Compulsory Deposit Scheme Bill, 1963. — L.S. Deb., 27-4-1963, c. 12525.

On 3 December 1966, a motion that the Attorney-General be summoned to the Lok Sabha to give his opinion on the Constitution (Twenty-third Amendment) Bill, 1966, was negatived by the House—L.S. Deb., 3-12-1966, c. 7314.

On 25 November 1968, a motion that the Attorney-General be invited to address the House on the constitutional aspects of the Indian Railways (Amendment) Bill, 1968, was negatived by the House—L.S. Deb., 25-11-1968, c. 294.

On 19 August 1974, a motion that the Attorney-General be summoned to advise the Lok Sabha on the question whether the House was competent to consider the Additional Emoluments (Compulsory Deposit) Bill, 1974, in view of the constitutional objections raised by members was negatived by the House—L.S. Deb., 19-8-1974, cc. 328-33.

On 5 May 1988 when the Minister of Defence, during his reply to discussion on the JPC on Bofors contract, referred to the opinion of the Attorney-General, some members rising on points of order, submitted that the Attorney-General should be asked to come to the House to clarify the position. The Speaker observed that members could give notice of a motion asking the Attorney-General to be present in the House in connection with a Bill or other business before the House and if such motion was admitted, the House could take a decision thereon. Notices received subsequently were disallowed as discussion on the JPC Report had already concluded—L.S. Deb., 5-5-1988, cc. 403-11.

244. Ibid., c. 12753.

On behalf of the Speaker, references have also been made to the Attorney-General with a view to seeking his advice on procedural matters or constitutional provisions. Such references are made direct and the Attorney-General gives his opinion direct. The Speaker is not bound to follow that opinion but he takes it into consideration before arriving at his decision<sup>246</sup>.

Points raised by a member regarding the interpretation of the Constitution (Fifty-second Amendment) Act, 1985 and the Rules framed thereunder in connection with the Speaker's decision to treat him as unattached in the House consequent upon his expulsion from his political party—27-5-1987.

Whether, in respect of motion for removal of Justice Soumitra Sen, Judge, Calcutta High Court, the procedure proposed to be followed by the Secretariat would stand scrutiny of the relevant statutory provisions (17 August 2011); it is legally necessary to provide Justice Sen a second opportunity in Lok Sabha to present his defence at the end of the debate by replying to the points/allegations made by the members of Lok Sabha (25 August 2011); and the Lok Sabha should proceed with the motion for removal of Justice Sen in case the resignation tendered by him is accepted by the President (2 September 2011).

XII. Chief Election Commissioner

The Lok Sabha is deemed to be duly constituted only upon the issue of a notification by the Election Commission containing the names of all members elected or nominated till the date of the issue of notification<sup>247</sup>.

The Election Commission consists of the Chief Election Commissioner and such numbers of other Election Commissioners, if any, as the President may from time to time fix<sup>248</sup>.

The Election Commission was made a multi-member body for the first time on 16 October 1989 with two Commissioners and a Chief Election Commissioner. However, on 2 January 1990, it was again made a single-member body by the Government. Though this decision of the Government was challenged in the Supreme Court by one of the affected Commissioners, the Supreme Court upheld the decision of the Government in this regard<sup>249</sup>. Subsequently, on 1 October 1993, the Commission was made a multi-member body by appointing two Election Commissioners in addition to the Chief Election Commissioner.

The appointment of the Chief Election Commissioner and other Election Commissioners is made, subject to the provisions of any law made in that behalf by Parliament, by the President. When any other Election Commissioner is appointed by the President, the Chief Election Commissioner functions as the Chairman of the Election Commission<sup>250</sup>.

Before each General Election to the Lok Sabha and to the Legislative Assembly of each State and before each biennial election to the Legislative Council of each State having such Council, the President after consultation with the Election Commission, may also appoint such Regional Commissioners as he may consider necessary to assist the Election Commission in the performance of its functions<sup>251</sup>.

247. See the Representation of the People Act, 1951, s. 73.

In the case of First and Second Lok Sabha, such a notification was issued by the Ministry of Law. In 1961, section 73 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 was amended and the power was conferred upon the Election Commission—see Ministry of Law Notification No. F. 10(7)/52C, dated 2-4-1952 and S.R.O. 1120, dated 5-4-1957, and Election Commission Notification No. S.O. 975, dated 2-4-1962.

248. Art. 324(2).

The constitutional provisions (article 324) relating to the setting up of the Election Commission were brought into force on 26 November 1949, while the rest of the Constitution came into force on 26 January 1950. The nucleus of the Office of the Election Commission was set up on 25 January 1950, but the first incumbent of the Office of the Chief Election Commissioner, Sukumar Sen assumed charge of his duties with effect from 21 March 1950.

249. S.S. Dhanoa vs. Union of India, S.C.C., 1991 vol. 3, p. 567; A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1745.

250. Art. 324(2) and (3).

251. Art. 324(4).

On 8 August 1951, the President's sanction was conveyed to the Election Commission to the creation, on temporary basis, of four posts of Regional Commissioners.

When requested by the Election Commission, the President or the Governor of a State also makes available to the Election Commission or to a Regional Commissioner such staff as may be necessary for the discharge of the functions of the Commission<sup>252</sup>.

In order that the Election Commission may be independent of the Executive Government, it has been provided under the Constitution that the Chief Election Commissioner shall not be removed from Office except by an order of the President after an address by each House of Parliament in the prescribed manner.

The address for removal of the Chief Election Commissioner can be presented to the President only on the ground of 'proved misbehaviour' or 'incapacity' and is to be so presented in the same session in which it is passed by each House of Parliament supported by a majority of the total membership of each House and also by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the members of each House present and voting<sup>253</sup>. Further, the conditions of service of the Chief Election Commissioner cannot be varied to his disadvantage after his appointment<sup>254</sup>.

Protection has similarly been given under the Constitution to the other Election Commissioners and Regional Commissioners who cannot be removed from Office except on the recommendation of the Chief Election Commissioner. Their conditions of service and tenure of Office, subject to the provisions of any law made by Parliament, are regulated by the President<sup>255</sup>.

The Election Commission under the supervision of the Chief Election Commissioner is responsible for the superintendence, direction and control of the preparation of the electoral rolls for, and the conduct of all elections to Parliament

These officers were to assist the Election Commission in the performance of its functions in connection with the First General Election in 1952. Of the four posts sanctioned, only two were eventually filled. These appointments continued until April, 1952.

No Regional Commissioner was appointed for the Second General Election. Instead three Deputy Election Commissioners were temporarily appointed for the purpose.

During the Third General Election, the Election Commission was assisted by three Deputy Election Commissioners—one of these three posts was continued on a regular basis.

Three temporary posts of Deputy Election Commissioners were created for a period of one year from 1 March 1966 to 28 February 1967 but only one was filled up and it continued upto 31 May 1967.

Another post of Deputy Election Commissioner was created w.e.f. 14 April 1969 and the same is still continuing.

At present there are four posts of Deputy Election Commissioners to assist the Election Commission. No Regional Commissioner has been appointed after the First General Elections.

252. Art. 324 (6).

A large number of Electoral Registration Officers, Revising Officers, Returning Officers and Assistant Returning Officers are drawn from the superior Government servants in each State.

253. Art. 324(5), Proviso read with art. 124(4) and (5).

254. Art. 324(5).

and to the Legislature of every State, and of election to the Office of the President and the Vice-President<sup>256</sup>.

The Commission is required to ensure that the electoral rolls are kept up-to-date at all times. Apart from the superintendence of all General Elections, the Commission is also empowered to superintend elections to fill casual vacancies in Parliament as well as in the State Legislatures. Further, the President is required under the Constitution to obtain the opinion of the Election Commission before he decides any question raised as to whether a member of Parliament has become subject to any of the disqualifications under the Constitution and for this purpose, the Election Commission may make such enquiry as it thinks fit<sup>257</sup>. Likewise, in a similar case in respect of a member of a State Legislature, the Governor of that State has to obtain the opinion of the Commission<sup>258</sup>.

The provisions relating to elections have been extensively amended from time to time in the light of recommendations made by the Election Commission after the experience it gained during and after the General Elections. Thus, the whole of the election machinery has been placed under the direction and control of the Election Commission, which alone is entitled to issue directives in matters concerning elections.

XIII. Secretary-General

The position of the Secretary-General<sup>259</sup> of the Lok Sabha is a most unusual one; one might almost say that it is unique. He is expected to know everything that Parliament has passed two major measures laying down the detailed law under which various elections to Parliament and State Legislatures are being held. The first, the Representation of the People Act, 1950, provides for qualifications of voters and matters connected with the preparation of electoral rolls. It also lays down the procedure for delimitation of Constituencies and allotting the number of seats in Parliament to the States and fixes the number of seats in the respective State Legislatures. The second, the Representation of the People Act, 1951, provides for actual conduct of elections and deals in detail with subjects like administrative machinery for conducting elections, the polls, election disputes, by-elections, etc. Under these two Acts, rules have been made by the Government of India and these are respectively called the Registration of Electors Rules, 1960 and Conduct of Election Rules, 1961. The two Acts and the statutory Rules have been amended from time-to-time to incorporate the necessary changes. Another Act, viz. the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections Act, 1952, and the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Election Rules, 1974 framed thereunder, provide for all matters relating to the conduct of elections to the Office of the President and Vice-President.

256. Art. 324(1).

257. Arts. 102 and 103, as amended.

258. Arts. 191 and 192, as amended.

259. Till 12 November, 1973, the Secretary-General was designated as Secretary.

With S.L. Shakhder relinquishing the Office of the Secretary-General, the post was redesignated as "Secretary until further orders"—L.S. Deb., 17-6-1977, cc. 298-99.

On 22 December 1983, the Speaker informed the House that Avtar Singh Rikhy, Secretary, Lok Sabha had been redesignated as Secretary-General, Lok Sabha, Bn. (I), 22-12-1988, No. 388.

His successor, Dr. Subhash C. Kashyap was appointed as Secretary-General. Notfn. No. 296(3)/AN-I/GN-712/84, 25-1-1984. He was thus the first person to have been appointed as the Secretary-General straightaway, i.e. without first working as the Secretary.

is to be known about everything that has any reference to the Lok Sabha and its business, whether it relates to some rather abstruse constitutional point or the proper precedence that should be followed in certain given circumstances; whatever the problem, members expect immediate and authoritative advice from him. In fact, the efficient and proper working of the House depends largely on the Secretary-General.

The Secretary-General is the adviser to the Speaker in the matter of exercise of all the powers and functions that belong to the Speaker, and to the House through the Speaker. He acts under the authority and in the name of the Speaker but does not work under delegated authority. The orders passed by the Secretary-General are the orders in the name of the Speaker and the Speaker accepts full responsibility for those orders. No two persons are more closely associated than the Speaker and the Secretary-General so far as functioning of the House is concerned. A relationship of utmost confidence in each other exists between them. The Secretary-General may be very competent; he may also be in the midst of politics, yet by training he is not a politician. He, therefore, lacks something which is filled in by the Speaker.

As far back as 1929, Speaker Patel laid down the sound principles and conventions which still guide the relationship between the Speaker and the Secretary-General. After the establishment of a separate Secretariat for the Central Legislative Assembly, he had noted:

It is the duty of the Secretary and his assistants to study every motion and amendment and consider whether it is in order or not. The Secretary should also anticipate objections likely to be raised in the House in connection with the business of the day; he should then bring such points as he considers necessary to the notice of the Speaker and discuss them with him, before the House sits. He should be ready whenever possible with the previous rulings and precedents and also parliamentary authorities. He must not forget that the Secretary is the only person who can advise the Speaker in all these matters and, therefore, it is his duty to prepare himself to be useful to him. The best and the easiest course is for the Secretary to discuss verbally all questions with the Speaker. It is necessary in the interest of the smooth working of the department that the officers of the department who pass any orders in connection with any business of the Assembly must always bear in mind that the responsibility of such orders is that of the Speaker.

The functions of the Secretary-General may be broadly classified into two categories: parliamentary and administrative.

The Secretary-General has to be present in the Chamber during the sittings of the Lok Sabha. He occupies a seat just below the desk of the Speaker in the pit of the Chamber and is constantly available for consultation. In the course of the discussions, the Speaker on many occasions has to take a decision and give his ruling in cases involving interpretation of the rules or precedent, and the advice offered and the opinions expressed by the Secretary-General in that behalf are of considerable importance. When some doubt has to be resolved or a rule has to be interpreted, the Secretary-General, with his experience and knowledge of parliamentary precedents, etc. is able to suggest to the Speaker the most appropriate solution. In fact, the Secretary-General has to anticipate as to what is going to happen during the day and for that he must be ready with a solution and he has to be prompt with the solution because there is no time to consult anybody.

The Secretary-General must, therefore, possess certain basic qualifications. The first qualification is his capacity to give advice in the light of a constantly changing situation. Even when a matter is under discussion in the House, new facts emerge, new information comes forth. His second qualification is the capacity to apply rules to the ever-changing phenomena.

Parliamentary procedure goes on changing imperceptibly from day-to-day and the Secretary-General's contribution to the building up of this procedure is significant. When the Secretary-General goes to the Speaker to discuss certain matters with him, it very often happens that points of procedure are crystallized in a single word or observation made by the Speaker. In such cases, the Secretary-General ensures that it is converted into a ruling, and a procedure is set thereby.

The duties of the Secretary-General are of a difficult and delicate nature; he has not only to hold a balance between the Government and the Opposition, but he must also enjoy the confidence of both. The Secretary-General's advice is available to all members, irrespective of party affiliations. The advice is full and frank and completely impartial. However, he never volunteers advice unless asked for<sup>260</sup>.

Some of his parliamentary duties are laid down in the Rules but many others are performed by practice and convention. The first business of the Secretary-General is to issue on behalf of the President, a summons to each member to attend a session of the House<sup>261</sup>. The Secretary-General keeps a Roll of Members of the House which must be signed, in his presence, by every newly-elected member before taking his seat<sup>262</sup>. The Secretary-General sends to every member notice of the date for the election of the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker; the date in the former case is fixed by the President and in the latter by the Speaker<sup>263</sup>. He receives notices in writing which any member may give, proposing other names for these Offices.

The Secretary-General is responsible for arrangement of Government business in such order as the Speaker may, after consultation with the Leader of the House, or the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, determine, and for the preparation of a List of Business for the House for each day of the Session<sup>264</sup>. Every notice required by the Rules has to be given by members to the Secretary-General<sup>265</sup>, e.g., notice of questions, motions, resolutions, questions of privilege, adjournment motions, matters of urgent public importance for short duration, etc. The Secretary-General circulates to each

"He (Sir Francis Lascelles) has always seemed to have unlimited time to spare for every one of us. He never volunteered advice, but if he was asked he always gave it; and it was always good. Even if he thought that one was contemplating something particularly silly, he never said so; just the very faintest spasm of pain passed across his face, and that was usually quite enough for most of us"—*H.L. member a copy of every list of business, bulletin, list of amendments, notice or other paper which is required by the Rules to be made available for the use of members<sup>266</sup>.

On the occasion of the Address by the President to both Houses of Parliament, Secretaries-General of both Houses receive the President on his arrival at the Parliament House and lead the Presidential procession to the Central Hall. Other functionaries who receive the President and join the procession are the Vice-President, the Prime Minister, the Speaker and the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs.

After the conclusion of the Address by the President to a joint sitting of the two Houses, when the Lok Sabha meets half-an-hour later in its Chamber, the Secretary-General lays on the Table a copy each of the Hindi and English versions of the Address, duly authenticated by the President. This is done so that the Address forms part of and is incorporated in the proceedings of the House<sup>267</sup>.

The Secretary-General receives petitions, documents and papers addressed to or intended for the House, and reports to the House any such petition received by him<sup>268</sup>. He issues passes for admission of visitors to the Galleries. He causes to be prepared minutes, summaries and verbatim record of the proceedings of the House at each of its sittings and have them printed, as well as every report of a Select Committee<sup>269</sup>. He has the custody of all records, documents and papers of the House or any of its Committees or the Secretariat, and does not permit any such paper to be taken out from the Parliament House without the permission of the Speaker<sup>270</sup>.

All communications from Ministers and all suggestions, memoranda and representations, etc. received from individuals or associations in respect of matter pending before a parliamentary committee are addressed to the Secretary-General<sup>271</sup>.

Ordinarily, the report of a parliamentary committee is presented to the House, but in case a committee complete their report when the House is not in session, the Chairperson of the Committee may present it to the Speaker. In such a case the report is presented to the House by the Chairperson during the next session. But if the Lok Sabha is dissolved in the meantime, the report is laid by the Secretary-General on the Table of the new House at the first convenient opportunity, and while laying it he makes a statement to the effect that the report was presented to the Speaker of the preceding Lok Sabha, and where it was ordered by the Speaker that the Report be printed, published or circulated, the Secretary-General also reports that fact to the House<sup>272</sup>.

Any message from the Lok Sabha to be communicated to the Rajya Sabha is signed by the Secretary-General and on receipt of any message from the Rajya Sabha he reports to the House if it is in session and if otherwise, forwards it to each member<sup>273</sup>. All Bills to be transmitted or returned to the Rajya Sabha are certified by the Secretary-General<sup>274</sup>. In case of urgency, he also authenticates Bills, in the absence of the Speaker, before these are presented to the President for assent<sup>275</sup>.

The Secretary-General is empowered to fix the date and time of a sitting of a parliamentary committee if the Chairperson of that committee is not readily available.

In the case of Chairperson of a Select or Joint Committee on a Bill not being available, the Secretary-General may, while fixing the date and time of a sitting consult, if necessary, the Minister concerned with the Bill<sup>276</sup>. When it is considered necessary to take evidence of a witness, the Secretary-General issues summons under his signature to the witness to appear before the House or any committee thereof<sup>277</sup>.

Where the previous sanction or recommendation of the President is required under the Constitution to the introduction or consideration of a Bill or an amendment thereto, the Minister concerned has to communicate in writing to the Secretary-General the President's sanction or recommendation<sup>278</sup>.

Every Bill passed by the Houses of Parliament and assented to by the President is laid on the Table by the Secretary-General<sup>279</sup>.

In the case of resignation of his seat in the House by a member, the Secretary-General, as soon as may be, after the Speaker has accepted the resignation, causes the information to be published in the Bulletin and the Gazette and forwards a copy of the notification to the Election Commission for taking steps to fill the vacancy thus caused<sup>280</sup>. Similarly, where a seat is declared vacant by the House, the Secretary-General causes the information to be published in the Gazette and forwards a copy of the notification to the Election Commission for taking steps to fill the vacancy thus caused<sup>281</sup>.

In the case of joint sittings of the two Houses, the Presiding Officer is the Speaker and the responsibility for organising the secretarial work in that connection devolves upon the Secretary-General. It is he who issues summons to each member, whether of the Lok Sabha or the Rajya Sabha, specifying the time and place for a joint sitting and causes to be prepared a full report of the proceedings of every joint sitting and have it published in such form and manner as the Speaker may direct<sup>282</sup>.

The Secretary-General heads a completely separate Secretariat which is under the overall control of the Speaker so that the House is assured of independent advice and its directions are executed and implemented without any interference from outside. In this category fall all those administrative and executive functions which the Secretary-General discharges on behalf of the House or the Speaker, including rendering services and providing facilities to the members. By virtue of his being the Secretary-General of the Lok Sabha, he functions as the Secretary of all parliamentary committees. He either attends to such committees himself or causes his officers to attend to them. He generally supervises all the secretarial work of these committees and gives directions, where necessary. In short, he sees that the secretarial work of the House and its committees, manned by competent and qualified officials, is organized properly and conducted smoothly so that the efficiency of parliamentary life is kept and maintained at a high level.

In order that democracy and particularly the Lok Sabha may function effectively, it is of the utmost importance that the members composing that House also are fully instructed in regard to the discharge of their duties in the Lok Sabha. The duty of the Secretary-General does not end with producing the lists of business, circulating it, attending to the comforts of members, advising the Speaker on points of procedure, etc. His duty extends to giving guidance to members in their parliamentary work. In order to keep the members fully informed of the day-to-day developments in India and abroad, an up-to-date, well-equipped and efficient Library and Reference, Research, Documentation and Information Service (LARRDIS) is organised under the overall supervision and guidance of the Secretary-General. The Members' Reference Service provides to the members, reference material on legislative measures and other matters coming up before the House so as to enable them to participate effectively in the debates. The Research and Information Division aims at assessing in advance the needs of the legislators by identifying the topics of current interest on which there is likely to be more general demand for information and keeps them informed by issuing Bibliographies, Documentation Lists, Brochures, Background Notes, Information Bulletins, Fact Sheets, Current Information Digests, etc. Apart from bringing out various periodicals, the Division is entrusted from time to time with the special assignments like preparing Briefs, Research Notes, etc., for various Parliamentary Conferences and for the goodwill delegations of members of Parliament going abroad. It also assists various committees of Parliament by making available to them specialized notes and other material as and when required. At each stage, the Secretary-General is intimately involved in taking policy decisions and giving appropriate directions<sup>283</sup>.

In order to provide necessary opportunities of training, orientation and study in parliamentary institutions and procedures, a Bureau of Parliamentary Studies and Training (BPST) works under the overall control and guidance of the Secretary-General<sup>284</sup>.

The Secretary-General organises Study Groups consisting of members from all parties, and attends to numerous other activities of the House in so far as its secretarial side is concerned. He is also responsible for preparing and organising the secretarial duties of the Conference of Presiding Officers of Legislative Bodies in India, Conferences of the Chairmen of Parliamentary Committees of various Legislatures in India, Conferences of the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU), the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association (CPA) and the Association of SAARC Speakers and Parliamentarians Conferences and Seminars as may be organised by the Indian Parliamentary Group (IPG) and for arranging extra-parliamentary activities such as addresses by distinguished persons to members, receptions, sending of parliamentary goodwill missions abroad or receiving such missions from foreign countries to India. He functions as the ex-officio Secretary-General of the IPG which acts both as the National Group of the IPU and as the India branch of the CPA and its Executive Committee<sup>285</sup>.

The Secretary-General is the Secretary to the eight Parliamentary Forums—one each on Water Conservation and Management; Children; Youth; Population and Public Health; Global Warming and Climate Change; Disaster Management; Artisans & Craftspeople; and Millennium Development Goals. He is also a member of the Advisory Council for Lok Sabha Television Channel. The Council, which is constituted by the Speaker, advises on matters relating to Programme content and policy decisions of the channel.

In his capacity as the administrative head of the Secretariat, the Secretary-General exercises the powers vested in the Speaker<sup>286</sup>, including the determination of strength<sup>287</sup>, method of recruitment<sup>288</sup>, and prescription of qualifications<sup>289</sup>, etc. for the various categories of posts. He is the appointing<sup>290</sup>, punishing<sup>291</sup>, and appellate<sup>292</sup> authority for certain classes of officers. The rules of conduct of discipline and control over the officers and staff of the Secretariat are enforced by the Secretary-General<sup>293</sup>. He also exercises financial powers<sup>294</sup> and initiates Budget proposals relating to the Lok Sabha and the Secretariat. The Secretary-General is the accounting officer<sup>295</sup> for the money sanctioned by the House for expenditure under the Demands for Grants of the Lok Sabha and the Lok Sabha Secretariat.

He authenticates the orders of the President and the Speaker<sup>296</sup>. He corresponds directly with the Ministries and Departments of the Government of India or State Governments or Governments of foreign countries on behalf of the Lok Sabha or its Secretariat. The Secretary-General also corresponds with members, including Ministers, in connection with the business of the House or any matter likely to come up before the House.

The Secretary-General is a permanent official of the Secretariat of the House and is selected and appointed by the Speaker in consultation with the Leader of the House and the Leader of the Opposition from amongst those who have made their mark by long years of service in the Parliament or State Legislatures or the Civil Service<sup>297</sup>. He is the leading public servant, not only because it is his function to ensure the administration and working of the Lok Sabha from day-to-day and the correct observance of parliamentary procedure, but also because he enjoys his position by virtue of his political impartiality. He is unconnected with politics and so is impervious to any kind of external pressure or political influence. In order that he may perform his duties with zeal in the public interest, sufficient safeguards are provided to give him security of service and independence. He is answerable only to the Speaker and his action cannot be discussed either inside or outside the House.

In his capacity as the Secretary-General of the House, he enjoys the privilege of freedom from arrest, save on a criminal charge. He cannot be obstructed in the execution of his duty as it would amount to contempt of the House. The House treats as breach of its privilege not only acts directly tending to obstruct the Secretary-General or other officers in the performance of their duty, but also any conduct which may tend to deter them from doing their duty in future<sup>298</sup>.

Whether taking his place at the Table, assisting in committee or dealing with the day-to-day business of the House, the Secretary-General becomes very well known to members who turn to him for his advice on points of law and procedure. By his outstanding ability, devoted service and unfailing courtesy, the Secretary-General makes his own place in the estimation of the House so much so that it is said that the retirement of a Secretary-General inevitably marks the end of a parliamentary chapter<sup>299</sup>.

Thus, the functions he is charged with demand great qualities of mind, judgment and maturity of thought. His actions must be based on sincerity of purpose and impartiality of outlook. Because of the difficult and delicate nature of the functions exercised by the Secretary-General, his work has been publicly recognised and eulogised

CHAPTER IX

Summoning and Prorogation of the Houses of Parliament and Dissolution of the Lok Sabha

Summoning of Parliament

The term of Lok Sabha is five years<sup>1</sup>. Dissolution of Lok Sabha may be effected before the expiry of its term by an order made by the President. At the end of its term, Lok Sabha stands automatically dissolved even if no formal order of dissolution is issued by the President<sup>2</sup>. However, while a Proclamation of Emergency, issued by the

1. Art. 83(2).

Until 1976, the life of the Lok Sabha was five years. The Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976 (s.17) increased it to six years. It was again reduced to five years by the Constitution (Forty-fourth Amendment) Act, 1978. (s.13 w.e.f. 20-6-1979).

2. The period of five years excludes the period between the constitution of the new Lok Sabha and the date appointed for its first sitting.

The life of the Third Legislative Assembly, which held its first meeting on 19 January 1927, was extended upto 31 July 1930, by an order made by the Governor-General on 16 January 1930. It would ordinarily have been dissolved on 9 January 1930.

The life of the Fourth Legislative Assembly, which held its first meeting on 14 January 1931, was extended up to 31 December 1934, by an order of the Governor-General, read out to the Legislative Assembly on 22 December 1933.

The Fifth Legislative Assembly which held its first meeting on 21 January 1935, continued upto 1 October 1945, on the basis of orders made by the Governor-General on 30 October 1937; 7 May 1938; 19 August 1939; 22 June 1940; 10 July 1941; 13 June 1942; 29 May 1943 and 23 May 1944. After coming into force of certain provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935, the life of the Central Legislative Assembly was governed by Sec. 63D(1) as set out in the Ninth Schedule to that Act.

Provisional Parliament was not dissolved but faded away under the provisions of article 379 [since repealed by the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956] when on 17 April 1952 both Houses of Parliament were constituted and summoned by the President to meet for the First Session.

The First Lok Sabha, which met for the first time on 13 May 1952, was dissolved by the President on 4 April 1957, thirty-eight days earlier than its normal life of five years. The Second Lok Sabha which held its first sitting on 10 May 1957, was dissolved on 31 March 1962, forty days earlier than its normal life of five years. The Third Lok Sabha held its first sitting on 16 April 1962, and was dissolved on 3 March 1967, forty-four days before the expiry of its term of five years. The Fourth Lok Sabha met on 16 March 1967, and was dissolved on 27 December 1970, one year and seventy-nine days before the expiry of its term of five years. The Sixth Lok Sabha held its first sitting on 25 March 1977 and was dissolved on 22 August 1979, two years, seven months and three days before the expiry of its term of five years. The Seventh Lok Sabha which held its first sitting on 21 January 1980, was dissolved on 31 December 1984, twenty days before the expiry of its term of five years. The Eighth Lok Sabha first met on 15 January 1985 and was dissolved on 27 November 1989, forty-eight days before the expiry of its term of five years. The Ninth Lok Sabha, which held its first sitting on 18 December 1989 was dissolved on 13 March 1991, three years, nine months and four days before the expiry of its term of five years.

President under article 352, is in operation, the life of Lok Sabha may be extended by law for a period not exceeding one year at a time and not extending in any case beyond a period of six months after the Proclamation has ceased to operate<sup>3</sup>.

A session of Lok Sabha comprises the period commencing from the date and time mentioned in the order of the President summoning Lok Sabha and ending with the day on which the President prorogues or dissolves Lok Sabha<sup>4</sup>.

It is not necessary that Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha should be summoned and prorogued simultaneously or on the same dates<sup>5</sup>. Until 1961, Sessions of the two Houses generally commenced on different dates<sup>6</sup>, except for the first session of every year when the President addresses members of both the Houses assembled together<sup>7</sup>. However, since 1962, generally both the Houses have been meeting simultaneously.

The Tenth Lok Sabha first met on 9 July 1991, and was dissolved on 10 May 1996, three months and twenty-eight days before the expiry of its term of five years. The Eleventh Lok Sabha, which held its first sitting on 22 May 1996 was dissolved on 4 December 1997, three years, five months and eighteen days before the expiry of its term of five years. The Twelfth Lok Sabha first met on 23 March 1998 and was dissolved on 26 April 1999, three years, seven months and four days before the expiry of its term of five years. The Thirteenth Lok Sabha first met on 20 October 1999 and was dissolved on 6 February 2004, eight months and thirteen days before the expiry of its term of five years. The Fourteenth Lok Sabha, which met for the first time on 2 June 2004 and was dissolved on 18 May 2009, fourteen days before the expiry of its term of five years. The Fifteenth Lok Sabha met for the first time on 1 June 2009.

See also Subhash C. Kashyap: Dissolution of Lok Sabha, The Parliamentarian, LVII, January 1977.

3. The Fifth Lok Sabha held its first sitting on 19 March 1971. Its duration was extended by one year upto 18 March 1977 [vide the House of the People (Extension of Duration) Act, 1976] and again upto 18 March 1978 [vide the House of the People (Extension of Duration) Amendment Act, 1976]. It was dissolved on 18 January 1977 before the completion of the extended term.
4. The Eighth Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha commenced on 23 February 1987 and was adjourned sine die on 12 May 1987. The Lok Sabha, however, was not prorogued. On a proposal from the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, the Speaker, exercising his powers under proviso to Rule 15 of the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha, agreed to reconvene the sittings of Lok Sabha from 27 July to 28 August 1987. The two parts, preceding and following the period of adjournment of Lok Sabha sine die on 12 May 1987, were treated as constituting one session divided into two parts namely, Part I and Part II. On conclusion of the second part of the Eighth Session, Lok Sabha adjourned sine die on 28 August 1987 and was prorogued on 3 September 1987. Similarly, the Fourteenth Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha, the Third Session of the Ninth Lok Sabha, the First Session of the Eleventh Lok Sabha, the Fourteenth Session of the Thirteenth Lok Sabha, the Seventh Session of the Fourteenth Lok Sabha and the fifteenth session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha also consisted of two parts each. On conclusion of Part II of each session, the Lok Sabha was prorogued.
5. Vide art. 85. This is a departure from the British practice, for in the U.K. both the Houses are summoned, prorogued and dissolved together, even though the House of Lords is a hereditary body and dissolution has no effect on its membership.
6. When the two Houses are not summoned simultaneously, sessions of Rajya Sabha usually commence one week after the commencement of the sessions of Lok Sabha. Rajya Sabha was summoned to meet on 28 February 1977, for a short two-day session for seeking the approval of the House for the extension of the Proclamations of President's rule in Tamil Nadu and Nagaland, which were scheduled to expire on 10 and 24 March 1977, respectively. This was the first time that the Rajya Sabha met while the Lok Sabha stood dissolved and the election process had been set in motion.

During the course of a session, Lok Sabha may be adjourned from day to day or for more than a day<sup>8</sup>. It may also be adjourned sine die<sup>9</sup>. Adjournment, as the term implies, is a postponement of the sitting or proceedings of either House from one time to another specified for the reassembling of the House<sup>10</sup>. Adjournment sine die means termination of a sitting of the House without any definite date being fixed for its next sitting.

As a normal parliamentary practice in the British Parliament, it is the House which determines by its own decision on a motion moved when it should adjourn or whether it should adjourn to a fixed date or sine die<sup>11</sup>. Deviating from this, the Rules of Lok Sabha have vested the authority in the Speaker to abridge the process of moving a motion and cutting short the discussion thereon. The power of the Speaker is, however, limited in the sense that he either adjourns the House at a fixed hour or at such other hour as he may determine after taking the sense of the House, and he

8. At 11.10 hours on 6 September 1974, the Speaker adjourned the House till 12.15 hours to enable the members of the Business Advisory Committee and Leaders of Parties and Groups to attend an urgent sitting of the B.A.C.

At 12.20 hours, the Secretary-General announced that as the sitting of the B.A.C. was still going on, the Speaker had directed that the House would re-assemble at 12.45 hours—L.S. Deb., 6.9.1974, c. 4.

On 17 November 1987, owing to pandemonium in the House, the Speaker adjourned the House at 12.40 hours till 14.00 hours. At 14.00 hours, the Secretary-General announced that the Speaker had directed that the House would remain adjourned till 14.30 hours—L.S. Deb., 17.11.1987.

On 20 August 1993, House was adjourned at 13.01 hours to meet again at 14.00 hours. As quorum could not be made, even after ringing of bell thrice from 14.00 hours to 14.10 hours, the Secretary-General informed the members present that there was no quorum and the Speaker had directed that the House would meet at 14.30 hours on that day. The House accordingly re-assembled at 14.35 hours.

On 21 August 1993, the House was adjourned at 13.01 hours to meet again at 14.00 hours. As quorum could not be made even after ringing of bell thrice from 14.00 hours, to 14.10 hours, the Secretary-General informed the members present that there was no quorum and the Speaker had directed that the House would meet at 15.00 hours on that day. The House accordingly re-assembled at 15.03 hours.

(Similar instances have also taken place on 22, 25 and 29 April 1994, 8 and 19 August 1994, 6 September 1996 and 8 August 1997).

On 16 December 2005 during Question Hour, on receipt of an information regarding a threat perception within the precincts of the House, Speaker at 11.52 hours adjourned the House to meet again at 1300 hours.

The Security personnel immediately combed the entire Parliament House Complex but no suspicious article was found. At 13.00 hours, as directed by the Speaker, members were informed that House would meet at 15.00 hours. The House, accordingly, re-assembled at 15.00 hours.

9. The Sixth Session of the Eleventh Lok Sabha was scheduled to adjourn sine die on 19 December 1997. Due to continued interruptions, the Speaker adjourned the Lok Sabha sine die on 24 November 1997; the Speaker re-convened the sitting of the Lok Sabha on 2 December 1997, which was again adjourned sine die on that day itself. The Prime Minister had in the meanwhile resigned on 28 November 1997.
10. Dod. 1993 P. 743.
11. At 18.30 hours on 5 September 1974, a motion by a member that the House be adjourned was negatived by the House.—L.S. Deb., 5.9.1974, cc. 1-31.

adjourns it from day to day according to the Calendar of Sittings issued at the beginning of a session. If any variation is required in this, the matter must be decided by the House on a motion made on behalf of the Leader of the House<sup>12</sup>.

In the Gujarat Legislative Assembly, on 28 March 1970, the Government came forward with a majority recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee to adjourn the House sine die after the day's business—the other pending business to be transacted by the House on its re-assembly. The Assembly was accordingly adjourned sine die on that day on a motion moved by the Government and adopted by the House.

Earlier, the Speaker had declined to admit two notices of Motions of No-confidence in the Council of Ministers tabled the previous day, on the ground that it would mean repetition of the debate which had already taken place on the Budget and that no serious reason had been advanced in support of the motions.

The legality of the adjournment of the House was questioned in a writ petition filed in the Gujarat High Court. Rejecting the writ petition, the High Court, on 2 May 1970, held that the Assembly had the power to adjourn itself even in the absence of a specific provision in the Rules authorising the House in this behalf. The power of the Assembly was not curtailed by the Rule which specifically gave powers to the Speaker to adjourn the House. The ruling of the Speaker allowing the motion for adjournment of the House was within his powers and final<sup>13</sup>.

The Punjab Legislative Assembly was scheduled to discuss, on 30 January 1971, the matter of the recent strike of the low paid Government employees and the situation created by the 'power famine' in the State. However, the House was adjourned sine die on 29 January on a motion moved by the Chief Minister and carried by the House by a voice vote<sup>14</sup>.

12. The Ninth Session of the Seventh Lok Sabha was scheduled to adjourn sine die on 13 August 1982. However, on that day the House agreed with the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee that the Session might be extended by one day in order to provide time for discussion on the Motion of No-Confidence in the Council of Ministers.—Bn.(I), 13.8.1982. The Seventh Session (Budget Session) of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha which was scheduled, as per usual practice, to be held in two parts, was to adjourn sine die on 21 April 2011. However, as per recommendation of BAC (25 R) and agreed to by the House, the first part of the Session was extended upto 25 March 2011, i.e. from 17 March 2011 to 25 March 2011 and the sittings of the second part of the session i.e. from 17 March 2011 to 21 April 2011 was treated as cancelled on account of Assembly elections in the States of Assam, Kerala, Tamil Nadu, West Bengal and Union Territory of Puducherry.

The Tenth Session of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 21 December 2011. However, as per recommendation of BAC (30R), a sitting of Lok Sabha was fixed on 22 December 2011 in lieu of cancellation of sitting of Lok Sabha were fixed on 27, 28 and 29 December 2011 in order to provide sufficient time for completion of essential items of Government Business. Accordingly, the House was adjourned sine die on 29 December 2011.

The Speaker may, if he thinks fit, call a sitting of the House before the date or hour to which it has been adjourned or at any time after the House has been adjourned sine die<sup>15</sup>. Information regarding the adjournment of the House sine die is issued in the Bulletin.

There have been two instances when the sittings of the Assemblies and the agenda thereof, have been fixed by authorities other than the Speaker. In a case concerning the Uttar Pradesh Vidhan Sabha, the Supreme Court of India ordered holding of a Special Session of the Assembly with the only agenda for conducting a 'Composite Floor-Test' to decide upon the question as to who among the two claimants to the post of Chief Minister (Kalyan Singh and Jagdambika Pal) enjoyed the majority support of the House. The Court ordered peaceful conduct of proceedings and that the result of the test be announced by the Speaker faithfully and truthfully. The order of the Supreme Court introduced the concept of, Composite Floor-Test, though the Rules of Procedure do not provide for such a test<sup>16</sup>.

In another case, the Supreme Court in its order dated 9 March 2005<sup>17</sup> on a writ petition filed by Arjun Munda, ordered the Speaker, Jharkhand Legislative Assembly, to hold a floor test on a date specified by the Court to determine as to which group of political parties enjoyed majority in the Assembly. The Court as per its order not only extended the Session of the Jharkhand Legislative Assembly by one day i.e.

15. Rule 15.

The Eighth Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha commenced on 23 February 1987 and was adjourned sine die on 12 May 1987. Lok Sabha was, however, not prorogued.

On a proposal from the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, the Speaker, exercising his powers under Rule 15, agreed to reconvene the sittings of Lok Sabha from 27 July 1987 which continued till 28 August 1987. The two parts preceding and following the period of adjournment of Lok Sabha sine die on 12 May 1987 were treated as constituting one session divided in two parts namely, Part I and Part II.

Following action was taken for reconvening the sittings of Lok Sabha—(i) D.O. letters were issued to each member individually under signatures of the Secretary-General on the pattern of summons informing them that the Lok Sabha will resume its sittings on 27 July 1987 and that the second part of the session was likely to conclude on 28 August 1987.

(ii) Information regarding commencement of Part II of the Eighth Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha, besides other information on the usual lines, was published in Bulletin Part II. The Provisional Calendar of Sittings and Charts showing dates of ballots and last dates of receipt of notices of Questions were also issued.

(iii) O.M. to Ministries and Deptts. and press release were also issued.

On conclusion of Part II of the Eighth Session, Lok Sabha adjourned sine die on 28 August 1987 and was prorogued on 3 September 1987.

Similar action was also taken at the time of reconvening of Second Part of the Fourteenth Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha, Second Part of the Third Session of the Ninth Lok Sabha, Second Part of the First Session of the Eleventh Lok Sabha, reconvening of sittings during the Fourth and Sixth Sessions of the Eleventh Lok Sabha, Second part of the Fourteenth Session of Thirteenth Lok Sabha and the second part of the Seventh Session of Fourteenth Lok Sabha and second part of the fifteenth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha.

11 March 2005, for putting the motion of confidence to the vote of the House on that day but also emphasized that the only agenda for the day would be the floor test between the contending political alliances. It was further emphasized that the proceedings of the House would be conducted in a totally peaceful manner. The Speaker pro-tem was further directed that the proceedings of the House will be video-graphed to safeguard against any foul play. These directions of the Court raised ripples in the uneasy relationship between the Legislature and the Judiciary as it was taken as undue interference in the internal functioning of the Legislature by the Judiciary.

The Speaker, Lok Sabha in his capacity as the Chairman of the Presiding Officers of the Legislative Bodies in India convened an emergent Conference of the Presiding Officers at New Delhi on 20 March 2005. The Conference after deliberating upon the subject unanimously adopted a resolution resolving inter alia that there must exist mutual trust and respect between the Legislature and the Judiciary and also understanding that they are not acting at cross purposes but striving together to achieve the same goal that is to serve the common man of this country and to make the country strong; and the success of democratic governance would be greatly facilitated if these two important institutions respect each others' role in the national endeavour and do not transgress into areas assigned to them by the Constitution and it is imperative to maintain harmonious relations between the Legislatures and the Judiciary.

Also there are instances when, a sitting of Lok Sabha has been called at short notice before the date and time to which the House was adjourned.

- (i) On 28 February 1970, the motion for leave to introduce the Finance Bill, 1970, was opposed. The motion was adopted by the House in the midst of continuous interruptions and before the Bill could be formally introduced, the Speaker adjourned the House till 11.00 hours of 2 March 1970. Later, certain members drew the attention of the Speaker in his Chamber to this fact. Considering that unless the Bill was introduced the taxes which were to be collected from that midnight under the Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1931, could not be collected although they had been made public, the Speaker directed that Lok Sabha would meet again at 22.00 hours that day for the introduction of the Bill. Members were informed of this through a para in the Bulletin, and over the radio and the telephone. Accordingly, the House met at that hour and the Bill was introduced at 22.55 hours. Thereafter, the House was adjourned to meet again at 11.00 hours on 2 March 1970<sup>18</sup>.
- (ii) On 3 December 1971, the House was adjourned till 11.00 hours of 6 December 1971. With the sudden attack by Pakistan on India in the evening of 3 December a sitting of the House was called on 4 December and members were informed about it over the radio and the telephone. The House met on that day at the appointed hour when the Proclamation of Emergency issued by the President in the meantime was approved and the Defence of India Bill passed. Thereafter, the House adjourned to meet at 10.00 hours on 6 December 1971.

- (iii) On 22 March 1979, the Speaker informed the House about the death of Jayaprakash Narayan on the basis of the information given to him by the Prime Minister. Thereafter, obituary references were made to the passing away of Jayaprakash Narayan and at 13.50 hours, the House was adjourned to meet at 11.00 hours on 23 March 1979. Shortly thereafter, when it came to the notice that the news about the death of Jayaprakash Narayan was incorrect, the Speaker directed that the House, which had been adjourned till 11.00 hours of 23 March 1979 would sit at 17.00 hours on the same day, i.e. 22 March 1979 for transacting business not concluded earlier. Members were informed through a special Bulletin-Part II along with List of Business for the sitting and over the radio and telephone. Accordingly, the House met at the appointed hour.

The House then unanimously adopted a motion expressing relief at the progress of Jayaprakash Narayan's health and wishing him full recovery. The House then adjourned to meet again at 11.00 hours on 23 March 1979<sup>19</sup>.

The rules relating to the adjournment of a State Assembly are generally the same as in Lok Sabha. However, in some States, Speakers have exercised powers which were held to be beyond the scope of the Rules, practice and custom in this behalf and these acts became subjects of acute political controversy, judicial decisions and public criticism. Some of the instances of such sudden and irregular adjournment of State Legislative Assemblies are given below—

Summoned on the advice of the new Chief Minister, the West Bengal Legislative Assembly met on 29 November 1967, for a trial of strength. Immediately after the Assembly met at the appointed hour, the Speaker made statement suo motu and adjourned the House sine die on the triple ground that the dissolution of the earlier Ministry, the appointment of the new Chief Minister and the summoning of the House on his advice were "unconstitutional and invalid". After the adjournment by the Speaker, the Governor prorogued the Assembly. On 29 January 1968, the Governor summoned the Legislature to meet on 14 February for its Budget Session. Meanwhile, the constitutionality as well as the bona fides of the Governor's action had been upheld by the Calcutta High Court on a writ petition. When the Assembly met on the scheduled date, the Speaker, immediately after entering the Chamber, again adjourned the House sine die, repeating his Ruling of 29 November 1967, questioning the legality of a session summoned on the advice of the new Chief Minister.

On 7 March 1968 when the Speaker, Punjab Legislative Assembly, gave his Ruling that the two Motions of No-confidence against him, admitted on the previous day, were "violative of article 179(c) of the Constitution and should be deemed to have not been moved at all", it led to a pandemonium and the House had to be adjourned for half an hour. The situation, however, worsened after the break and the Speaker arbitrarily adjourned the House for two months, although the Budget for 1968-69 had yet to be passed by the Assembly.<sup>20</sup>

The Third Session of the Fifth Goa Legislative Assembly was scheduled to be held from 10 January to 18 January 2008. Meanwhile the Goa Government faced a crisis as it was reduced to a minority when three M.L.As. withdrew their support to the Government. However, the Chief Minister survived the crisis as the Governor prorogued the Assembly on the same day, i.e. on the first day of the Session thus avoiding the floor test demanded by the Opposition.

Sessions of Lok Sabha

Normally, three sessions of Lok Sabha are held in a year. The question of having more or less fixed dates for the commencement of the three session's was considered by the General Purposes Committee of Lok Sabha at their sitting held on 22 April 1955, and they recommended the following time-table for the three sessions—

Session	Date of Commencement	Date of Termination
Budget Session	1 February	7 May
Autumn Session	15 July	15 September
Winter Session	5 November or the fourth day after Diwali , whichever is later	22 December

The Cabinet agreed with these recommendations. The time-table has not, however, been observed in practice. Sessions have commenced on different dates though more or less in the specified months, and the duration has varied according to the volume of business conducted by the House. After a general election, usually, the First Session has commenced in March for 2 or 3 weeks and the Second Session in April-May for a longer period, say ten to twelve weeks, to transact financial business. However, there have also been departures depending upon the dates of general election.<sup>21</sup>

20. The Assembly was recalled. For subsequent developments, see Chapter XXII, under 'Certification of a Money Bill'.

21. The First Session of the Seventh Lok Sabha commenced on 21 January 1980 and lasted till 2 February 1980. The Second Session commenced on 11 March 1980 and concluded on 28 March 1980. The Third Session, which commenced on 9 June 1980, lasted till 12 August 1980.

Similarly, the First Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha commenced in January and lasted over two weeks. The Second Session, which commenced in March 1985, lasted for nine weeks.

While the First Session of the Ninth Lok Sabha commenced on 18 December and concluded on 30 December 1989, the Second Session went on for more than twelve weeks from 12 March to 31 May 1990.

The holding of general election in itself depends on several factors such as weather conditions, law and order conditions, movement of security forces, agricultural factors, festivals, examination schedules and logistical requirements. Though it has been nowhere specifically mentioned about the gap between the last session of the previous Lok Sabha and the first session of the new Lok Sabha but it too is governed by the provisions of article 85(1) of the Constitution. The Supreme Court under article 143 of the Constitution nor the Representation of the People's Act prescribe any period of limitation for holding elections for constituting Legislative Assembly after premature dissolution of the existing one. However, in view of the scheme of the Constitution and the Representation of the People's Act, the elections should be held within six months for constituting Legislative Assembly from the date of dissolution of the Legislative Assembly.<sup>22</sup>

Summoning of Lok Sabha

The power to summon Lok Sabha is vested in the President. He exercises this power on the recommendation of the Prime Minister or the Cabinet. He may make informal suggestions to the Prime Minister as to the more convenient date and time of summoning the House, but the ultimate advice in this matter rests with the Prime Minister.

In West Bengal consequent on the resignation of eighteen members, including one Minister, from the ruling United Front on 6 November 1967, prima facie doubts arose about majority support to the Government in the Legislative Assembly. The Governor desired that the Assembly be summoned on 23 November so that a confidence vote might be taken, but the Chief Minister said that he would call the Assembly into session on 18 December as scheduled. Thereupon, the Governor dismissed the Ministry on 21 November 1967.

The crisis in West Bengal, as observed by Speaker Reddy, was not unavoidable, for the Governor need not have precipitated matters by insisting on the Chief Minister

During the Tenth Lok Sabha, its First Session took almost ten weeks, i.e. from 9 July to 18 September 1991 but the Second Session was one month long from 20 November to 20 December 1991.

Then, in the case of the Eleventh Lok Sabha, the First Session commenced on 22 May and concluded on 12 June 1996 and the Second Session went on from 10 July to 13 September 1996.

The First Session of the Twelfth Lok Sabha commenced on 23 March 1998 and concluded on 31 March 1998 while the Second Session began on 27 May and concluded on 6 August 1998.

The First Session of the Thirteenth Lok Sabha commenced on 20 October 1999 and concluded on 29 October 1999 while the Second Session commenced on 29 November 1999 and concluded on 23 December 1999.

The First Session of the Fourteenth Lok Sabha commenced on 2 June 2004 and concluded on 10 June 2004 while the Second Session commenced on 5 July 2004 and concluded on 26 August 2004.

The First Session of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha commenced on 1 June 2009 and concluded on 9 June 2009, while the Second Session commenced on 2 July 2009 and concluded on 7 August 2009.

to convene the Assembly earlier than scheduled, when the interval between the two dates was only of a few days.<sup>23</sup>

In a Resolution adopted at the Conference of Presiding Officers, it was recommended that the Government of India should, in the light of the following observations, take urgent and suitable steps in regard to the powers of Governors to summon or prorogue the Legislatures and to dismiss Ministries:

That a Governor shall summon or prorogue the Legislature on the advice of the Chief Minister. A convention shall be developed that the Chief Minister may fix the dates of summoning or prorogation after consulting the Presiding Officer concerned. The Governor may suggest an alternative date but it shall be left to the Chief Minister or the Cabinet to revise their decision or not. Where, however, there is undue delay in summoning a Legislative Assembly and the majority of members of the Legislative Assembly desire to discuss a Motion of No-confidence in a Ministry and make a request to that effect in writing to the Chief Minister, the Chief Minister shall advise the Governor to summon the Assembly within a week of such request.<sup>24</sup>

The proposal to summon Lok Sabha is initiated by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs (and by the Leader of the House in case the Prime Minister is not the Leader of the House) and submitted to the Prime Minister, after an informal consultation with the Speaker in regard to the date of commencement and the duration of the session.<sup>25</sup> The Prime Minister may agree with the suggestion or refer it to the Cabinet.<sup>26</sup> The proposal as finally agreed to by the Prime Minister or the Cabinet is formally submitted to the Speaker<sup>27</sup>. If the Speaker<sup>28</sup> also agrees (in the case of a rare disagreement, he may refer the matter back to the Prime Minister for reconsideration), he directs the Secretary-General to obtain the order of the President<sup>29</sup> to summon Lok Sabha on the date and time specified. After the President has signed the order, the Secretariat notifies it in the Gazette Extraordinary and issues a press communique for wider

Issue of Summons

The Secretary-General issues summons to members individually.<sup>31</sup> This is usually done within two to four days after the receipt of the President's order.<sup>32</sup> The language used in the summons closely follows the order and specifies the date, time and place of commencement of the session.

The interval between the issue of the order by the President summoning Lok Sabha, issue of summons, etc., to members and the date of commencement of the session is about four to ten weeks.<sup>33</sup> Where the interval is very short, members may

30. Prior to 1929, the orders of the Governor-General regarding summoning, prorogation and dissolution of the Central Legislature were obtained and notified in the Gazette by the Legislative Department of the Government of India. At a conference held on 17 June 1929, under the Chairmanship of the Governor-General (Lord Irwin), at which the Speaker (President) of Legislative Assembly (Vithalbai Patel), the Home Member and Law Member of the Government of India were present, it was decided that in future, orders of the Governor-General regarding summoning, prorogation and dissolution of the Legislative Assembly would be obtained and notified by the Legislative Assembly Department. This practice has continued ever since.

The Minister of Parliamentary Affairs in 1955 and the Minister of Home Affairs in 1958, suggested that orders of the President regarding the summoning and prorogation of Lok Sabha should be obtained and notified under the orders of the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs. On both these occasions, the suggestion was not accepted by the Speaker, the reasons being—that in addition to being Head of the State, the President is part of Parliament also, and therefore, in matters relating to summoning, prorogation and normal dissolution of Lok Sabha, it is necessary that the Speaker should fix the date in consultation with the Government and then communicate it to the President; that leaving the entire discretion of summoning or otherwise of Lok Sabha to the Government might affect adversely the Opposition or the minority groups; that regulation of time for sitting of the House and its adjournment, calling a sitting after adjournment sine die and the fixing of the time and commencement of sitting, being all parts of the same process, the Speaker is the person who is the ultimate authority to take a decision and make recommendations to the President; that just as no sitting of a parliamentary committee can be convened without the Chairman's concurrence, likewise in order to uphold democratic principles, summoning, prorogation or dissolution of Lok Sabha should not be done without the Speaker's consent; and that the Constitution nowhere provides that the Executive will communicate such a decision to the President.

Sessions of the Eighth Lok Sabha, the First, Fourth and Fifth Sessions of the Ninth Lok Sabha and the First, Second, Sixth and Sixteenth Sessions of the Tenth Lok Sabha, the First to Fourth Sessions of the Eleventh and the Twelfth Lok Sabha, the First, Fifth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth Sessions of the Thirteenth Lok Sabha, the First, Fifth, Seventh to Thirteenth Sessions of the Fourteenth Lok Sabha and the First to Thirteenth Sessions of Fifteenth Lok Sabha.

34. The Sixth Lok Sabha was constituted on 23 March 1977. The order regarding summoning of the First Session of the Sixth Lok Sabha was signed by the Vice-President acting as President on 23 March 1977, and Lok Sabha was to meet on 25 March 1977. As most of the members had already arrived in Delhi by 23 March 1977, in connection with election of leaders of Janata Party and Congress Party, summons for the session were issued to members at their Delhi addresses only and the need to send telegrams did not arise.

General Elections to the Seventh Lok Sabha were held on 3 and 6 January 1980 and results were declared by 18 January 1980. The Seventh Lok Sabha was constituted on 10 January 1980. The Prime Minister/Ministers took oath of Office on 14 January 1980. Summons for the First Session, which was to commence on 21 January 1980, were issued on 16 January 1980. Since the time gap between the issue of summons and the date of commencement of the Session was only 5 days, telegrams were also issued to all outstation members, besides issuing summons in ordinary course. Press communique was also issued on 15 January 1980 regarding summoning of Lok Sabha.

Summons for the Fifth Session of the Ninth Lok Sabha which was to commence on 16 November 1990, was issued on 12 November 1990. Since the time gap between the issue of summons and the date of commencement of the session was only four days, besides issuing of summons in the ordinary course, telegrams to all the members at their permanent addresses and wireless messages to all the Chief Secretaries/Administrators of all the States and Union territories requesting them to inform the members regarding summoning of Lok Sabha were also issued on 11 November 1990.

Summons for the First Session of the Tenth Lok Sabha which was to commence on 22 May 1996, was issued on 18 May 1996. As there was not sufficient time gap between issue of summons and commencement of session, telegrams were also issued to members. A copy of Press Release to all District Collectors/District Magistrates through NICNET with the request to inform the members of Lok Sabha about the commencement of the session was also sent.

Similarly, Press Release with a request to inform the members of the Lok Sabha about commencement of the First Session of the Eleventh Lok Sabha was also issued to all District Collectors/District Magistrates through NICNET.

Summons for the First Session of the Twelfth Lok Sabha which was to commence on 23 March 1998 was issued on 21 March 1998. As there was not sufficient time gap between issue of summons and commencement of session, telegrams were also issued to members.

Summons for the First Session of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and the Fifteenth Lok Sabha, which were to commence on 20 October 1999, 2 June 2004 and 1 June 2009 were issued on 16 October 1999, 28 May 2004 and 26 May 2009, respectively. As there was not sufficient time gap between issue of summons and commencement of session, telegrams were also issued to members.

Where a person becomes a member of the House after the issue of the summons, but before the actual commencement of a session, the summons is duly issued to him on receipt of information about his membership<sup>37</sup>. In case he becomes a member after the commencement of the session, he is only informed through a letter of the date on which the session had commenced and its probable duration<sup>38</sup>.

Summons are not issued to a member whose election to Lok Sabha has been declared void by the High Court, even though on his application for stay order, the Supreme Court allows him to attend the House for the days necessary to keep his seat alive pending disposal of the appeal by that Court<sup>39</sup>.

35. At the time of issue of summons for the Fourteenth Session of the Fifth Lok Sabha, 20 members were under detention. The summons were issued to them by Registered A/D, post care of the Jail authority concerned.

36. Duplicate summons for the Eighth Session of the Second Lok Sabha were issued to two members, to one, on 24 June 1959, and to the other on 18 July 1959, on the basis of intimation received from them that the summons which had been dispatched to them on 25 May 1959, were not received by them.

37. On 28 December 1957, when the summons for the Fourth Session of the Second Lok Sabha, which was to commence on 10 February 1958, were issued, the summons to one member whose election to Lok Sabha had been declared void by the Election Tribunal was not sent. However, on 31 December 1957, the High Court of Madhya Pradesh passed an order staying the operation of the order of the Tribunal and under section 116 A(4) of the R.P. Act, 1951, that member continued to be a member of Lok Sabha without any break and thus became entitled to receive the summons.

Summons for the Fifth Session of the Second Lok Sabha, which was to commence on 1 August 1958 were issued to members on 2 June 1958. The declaration from the Returning Officer regarding the election of a particular member to Lok Sabha was received on 5 June 1958, and a summons was issued to him on the same day.

38. For instance, summons was not issued to a member who was elected on 16 December 1958, after the Sixth Session of the Second Lok Sabha had commenced on 17 November 1958, nor to another member who was nominated by the President on 4 April 1959, after the Seventh Session of the Second Lok Sabha had commenced on 9 February 1959.

39. Election of a member to the Eighth Lok Sabha from Dadra and Nagar Haveli constituency was declared void by Bombay High Court on 2 April 1985. On an application by the member, the H.C. stayed operation of its order for thirty days on an undertaking by him that he shall not participate in the proceedings of or vote in Lok Sabha and that he shall attend Lok Sabha only to record his presence. The member, thereafter, preferred an appeal in the Supreme Court. In its order on 26 April 1985, S.C. continued the operation of stay granted by H.C. with same restrictions till further orders. In view of the restrictions imposed by S.C. summons for Third to Eighth Sessions were not issued to him. He was, however, informed through letters about commencement and duration of sessions. Copies of Bn. (II), question chart, provisional calendars of sittings were also supplied to him along with letters. S.C., in its final judgement on 25 March 1987, allowed the appeal preferred by the member and set aside judgment of Bombay H.C. The member therefore continued to be a member of the Eighth Lok Sabha without any break. Necessary information was published in Bn. (II) dated 10 April 1987 and a circular issued to all Officers/Branches. Copies of the judgement were placed in Parliament Library. Summons for the Ninth Session was issued to the member along with other members.

Election of a member (D.J. Tandel) of the Ninth Lok Sabha from Daman and Diu constituency was set aside by Bombay High Court on 23/25 October 1990. The High Court, however, granted a stay on the operation of its order for eight weeks. Vide its order dated 22 November 1990, the High Court extended the stay for three weeks more. The member preferred an appeal in the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court vide its order on 8 January 1991 admitted the appeal and granted permission to the member to sign the Attendance Register in the Lok Sabha once in 60 days. Later, the Supreme Court vide its order dated 30 January 1991, granted an absolute stay on the order of the High Court and set the appeal for final hearing on 20 March 1991. In view of setting aside of the election of the member, summons for the Seventh Session were not issued to him. He was, however, informed through a letter about the commencement and duration of the session. Copies of Bn. (II), Question Chart and the Provisional Calendar of Sittings were also supplied to him along with the letter.

Before the appeal of the member could come up for final hearing in the Supreme Court, the Ninth Lok Sabha was dissolved on 13 March 1991. Subsequently, Supreme Court, vide its order passed on 26 April 1991, dismissed the appeal by the member as having become infructuous on the dissolution of the Ninth Lok Sabha.

Election of a member (Uttamrao Laxmanrao Patil) to the Ninth Lok Sabha from Erandol constituency was declared null and void by the Bombay High Court on 19 December 1990. Subsequently, vide its order of 20 December 1990, the High Court stayed the operation of its order for four weeks and directed the member to obtain a stay from the Supreme Court. On an appeal by the member, the Supreme Court, vide its order of 10 January 1991 granted a stay on operation of the order of the High Court and directed that status quo be maintained till the final disposal of the matter by the Court in the case.

In view of setting aside of election of the member, summons for the Seventh Session of Ninth Lok Sabha were not issued to him. He was, however, informed through a letter about commencement and duration of the session. Copies of Bn. (II), Question Chart and the Provisional Calendar of Sittings were also supplied to him along with the letter.

Thereafter, due to dissolution of the Ninth Lok Sabha on 13 March 1991, the case was not proceeded with.

Election of a member (Yashwantrao Patil) to the Tenth Lok Sabha from Ahmednagar constituency was declared null and void by the Bombay High Court on 30 March 1993. The High Court, however, granted a stay on the operation of its order for six weeks. The High Court, under section 99 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, named another member (Sharad Pawar) for commission of corrupt practice under section 123(4) of the Act. Both the members, thereafter, preferred appeals in the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court, by its order of 10 May 1993, admitting the appeal by Sharad Pawar, imposed restrictions on the member's right to vote and participate in the proceedings of the Lok Sabha and to draw emoluments as a member of Parliament. Further proceedings under Section 8A of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 were stayed and the member was permitted to sign the Attendance Register to avoid disqualification. Again, by its order of 14 May 1993, the Supreme Court admitting the appeal by Yashwantrao Patil continued the operation of the stay granted by the High Court and imposed restrictions on the member's right to participate in proceedings of the Lok Sabha and vote/and to draw emoluments until further orders. The member was, however, permitted to sign the Attendance Register to avoid disqualification.

In view of these restrictions imposed by the Supreme Court, summons for the Seventh and the Eighth Sessions of the Tenth Lok Sabha were not issued to Yashwantrao Patil. As regards Sharad Pawar, summons for the Seventh Session were not issued to him. However, before commencement of the Eighth Session, he resigned from the membership of the Lok Sabha. In these cases also, the said members were informed through letters about the commencement and duration of the sessions. Copies of Bn. (II), Question Chart and the Provisional Calendar of Sittings were also supplied to them along with the letters.

The Supreme Court, in its final judgement on 19 November 1993, upheld the order of the Bombay High Court setting aside the election of Yashwantrao Patil. The Supreme Court, however, set aside the High Court's order naming Sharad Pawar under Section 99 of the Representation of

A summons already issued may be cancelled and a fresh one issued to members on account of change in the date of commencement of the session<sup>40</sup>.

Along with the summons or immediately after its issue, every member is supplied a printed copy of the Provisional Calendar of Sittings, showing the days on which Lok Sabha will sit and the type of business which will be conducted at each such sitting. Members are also informed in detail, through the Bulletin, about the President's Address, time of sittings of the House, procedure for ballots of Private Members' Business, allotment of days for answering questions and procedure connected with the giving of notices of questions, etc. A chart showing the first and the last dates of receipt of notices of questions is also supplied to each member.

President's Address

At the commencement of the First Session of Parliament after each general election to Lok Sabha and thereafter, at the commencement of the First Session of every year, the President addresses members of both Houses of Parliament assembled together and informs Parliament of the causes of its summons<sup>41</sup>.

the People Act. Yashwantrao Patil ceased to be a member of the Lok Sabha w.e.f. 19 November 1993. Necessary information in this regard was published in Bn. (II) dated 2 December 1993 and a circular issued to all Officers/Branches. Copies of the judgment were placed in the Parliament Library.

40. (i) The Governor-General had summoned the Central Legislative Assembly to meet on 20 January 1947, for the Budget Session and the notification and summons to members had been issued on 29 November 1946. It was subsequently decided by the Governor-General that the session should be postponed to 3 February 1947. The summons were re-issued on 23 December 1946.
  - (ii) The President's order summoning Rajya Sabha to meet on 7 August 1953, was published in the Gazette on 1 June 1953, and summons were issued to members on 28 May 1953. It was subsequently decided by the President on 5 August 1953, that the session should be postponed to 24 August 1953. The summons were re-issued on 6 August 1953, and a paragraph was added at the end thereof, cancelling the previous summons.
  - (iii) The President's order summoning the Lok Sabha to meet on 19 November 1962, was published in the Gazette on 15 September 1962, and summons were issued to members on 19 September 1962. Due to Chinese aggression on India, it was subsequently decided to advance the date of commencement of the session to 8 November 1962. The order changing the date for commencement of the session was signed by the President on 27 October 1962.
  - (iv) The President's order summoning the Lok Sabha to meet on Monday, 13 March 1967, was published in the Gazette on 9 January 1967, and summons were issued to members on 13 January 1967. In the meantime, elections to the new Lok Sabha had been completed and there was a general feeling that instead of the outgoing Lok Sabha holding a lameduck session, the new Lok Sabha should hold a session. The Prime Minister having concurred with this view, it was decided that the session of the outgoing Lok Sabha should be cancelled. Accordingly, the President, by an order published in the Gazette on 3 March 1967, rescinded his earlier order of 9 January 1967. Members were informed of the cancellation of the session of Lok Sabha and the summons issued therefor through a paragraph in Bulletin Part II (Bn. II, 2-3-1967, p. 1994).
41. Art. 87(1). Before article 87(1) was amended in its present form by the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951, the article required the President to address both the Houses assembled together at the commencement of each session. Accordingly, the President addressed each of the three sessions held in 1950 of the Provisional Parliament.

Fourteenth Session of the Thirteenth Lok Sabha commenced on 2 December 2003. The Lok Sabha adjourned sine die on 23 December 2003 but the House was not prorogued. The House was re-convened on 29 January 2004, which was treated as the second part of the session that had commenced on 2 December 2003. Constitutional validity of the proceedings of the second part of the session was challenged<sup>42</sup> before the Supreme Court in a writ petition on the ground that it being the first session of the year, the President should have addressed both Houses under article 87(1) of the Constitution. The writ petition was dismissed by the Supreme Court.

The assembly of members of Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha to hear the President's Address under article 87(1) is deemed to be neither a joint sitting of both the Houses nor a sitting of Lok Sabha nor of Rajya Sabha<sup>43</sup>. When the President addresses the

During the Third Session, a question arose whether the next session might commence with the President's Address or that the session be merely adjourned to meet again on 5 February 1951, which would obviate the necessity of the President's Address. Speaker Mavalankar, in this connection, suggested that instead of the President addressing each session, it might be provided that he would give his Address at the commencement of the first session every year.

The Constitution was accordingly amended with the result that now the President addresses both the Houses assembled together only at the commencement of the first session each year, except, in case, a general election to Lok Sabha has taken place, when on the commencement of the first session of the new Lok Sabha, he again addresses both the Houses assembled together in the same year. In 1957, the President addressed both the Houses assembled together once on 18 March 1957, and again after the general election to Lok Sabha on 13 May 1957. In 1962 also the President addressed both the Houses assembled together once on 12 March 1962, and again after the general election to Lok Sabha on 18 April 1962. In similar situations, in 1989, 1991, 1996, 1999 and 2009, the President addressed both the Houses assembled together twice in each year. However, in 1967, as also in 1971, the President addressed both the Houses assembled together only once, i.e. on 18 March 1967 and 23 March 1971, respectively, as there was no session of the outgoing Lok Sabha after the commencement of the calendar year. In 1977, Lok Sabha was dissolved on 18 January. The first session of Rajya Sabha in that year was held on 28 February, but there was no Address by the President. After the general elections, Lok Sabha was constituted on 23 March 1977. The Vice-President acting as President, addressed both the Houses assembled together on 28 March 1977. In 1980 and 1985, the President addressed both the Houses of Parliament assembled together only once, i.e. on 23 January 1980 and 17 January 1985, respectively. The Fourteenth Session of Thirteenth Lok Sabha was adjourned sine die on 23 December 2003. However, the House was not prorogued. The second part of the Fourteenth Session commenced on 29 January 2004 without the customary Presidential address on the first sitting of Lok Sabha as the Session was in continuation of the earlier Winter Session. The Thirteenth Lok Sabha was subsequently dissolved on 6 February 2004. The Fourteenth Lok Sabha was constituted on 17 May 2004 and the President's Address in the First Session was made on 7 June 2004. See also under Chapter X-President's Address, Messages and Communications to the House.

42. Ramdes Athawale v. Union of India & Others, writ petition (civil) No. 86/2004.

43. This view has been held consistently since the very inception of the Legislature at the Centre. On 16 September 1936, with reference to a question as to whether the speech delivered by the Governor-General to the Legislature was part of the Assembly proceedings, Speaker (President) Abdur Rahim explained the position as follows:

"As regards this point, I want to make the position quite clear. At least one of my predecessors in office (Sir Frederick Whyte) was distinctly of the opinion that when the Governor-General addresses the Members of Assembly or of the Assembly and the Council of State together under Section 63B(3), that is not a meeting of the Assembly or a 'Joint Sitting' of the two Chambers, Houses under the said article, he functions as a limb of Parliament. When he discharges the constitutional function of addressing the two Houses, he is in charge of the proceedings of the Houses until his Address is completed. For the purpose, he may conduct the proceedings in an appropriate manner, consistent with his position and dignity as well as the dignity and status of the Houses. Although the President is in charge of the proceedings, neither he<sup>44</sup> nor the Chairman of Rajya Sabha nor the Speaker nor any other person can be said to preside at the meeting of the members of the two Houses assembled together for his Address under the said article.

However, the President is deemed to exercise control over the members. He can call the members to order, and may ask a member to leave the meeting if the member rises to speak, makes any demonstration or otherwise disrupts the meeting<sup>45</sup>. Action against such member may thereafter be taken by the House to which he belongs.

President's Address to both Houses of Parliament assembled together has to be laid on the Table on the same day by the Secretary-General when the House holds its sitting in its own Chamber half an hour after the President's Address and it is at that stage that the Address is incorporated in the Proceedings of Lok Sabha.

First Sitting of Lok Sabha

The first sitting of Lok Sabha after a general election is held when it meets for the first time on the date and time specified by the President in his order summoning it. A sitting of the House is duly constituted when it is presided over by the Speaker or any other member of Lok Sabha competent to preside over a sitting of the House under the Constitution or the Rules of Procedure<sup>46</sup>.

Before the President addresses the members of Lok Sabha returned at a general election, a few preliminary steps have to be taken. Members have to make and subscribe an oath or affirmation and then to take their seats in the House. Thereafter, the House elects the Speaker. One or two sittings of Lok Sabha are held for this purpose before the date of the President's Address<sup>47</sup>. In subsequent sessions of Lok Sabha no such preliminary formalities have to be observed.

and that a meeting of the Assembly is only duly constituted when Mr. President has taken the Chair... I am inclined to agree with Sir Frederick Whyte"—see L.A. Deb., 16-9-1936, pp. 1142-43.

44. Since the President is not and cannot be a member of either House of Parliament, vide article 59(1), he cannot be said to preside over the meeting of the two Houses assembled together for his address under article 87(1).
45. The Joint Secretary/Additional Secretary, Security remains in attendance in the Central Hall where the President delivers his Address to members of both Houses of Parliament assembled together. The President may requisition his services, if necessary, in forcibly removing the member who may be named by him.
46. Art. 95 and Rule 11.
47. The First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Lok Sabha met on 13 and 15 May 1952, 10 and 11 May 1957, 16 and 17 May 1962, 16 and 17 March 1967, 19 and 22 March 1971, 25 and 26 March 1977, 21 and 22 January 1980, 15 and 16 January 1985, 18 and 19 December 1989, 9 and 10 July 1991, 22 and 23 May 1996 and 23 and 24 March 1998 and 21 and 22 October 1999 and Thus, after a general election to Lok Sabha the First Session commences when Lok Sabha meets in its own chamber for the first time with the Speaker pro tem<sup>48</sup> in the Chair for the purpose of enabling members to take their seats in the House and elect the Speaker and not when the President addresses<sup>49</sup> members of both Houses of Parliament in pursuance of article 87(1).

Prorogation of the House

Termination of a session of the House by an order made by the President under article 85(2) is called 'prorogation'. The President, in exercising the power to prorogue the House, acts on the advice of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister may consult the Cabinet before the advice is submitted to the President. Prorogation of the House may take place any time, even while the House is sitting. Usually, however, prorogation follows the adjournment of the sitting of the House sine die<sup>50</sup>.

2, 3 and 4 June 2004, and 1 and 2 June 2009, respectively, when members took their seats and elected the Speaker. The President addressed both Houses of Parliament assembled together on 16 May 1952, 13 May 1957, 18 May 1962, 18 March 1967, 23 March 1971, 28 March 1977, 23 January 1980, 17 January 1985, 20 December 1989, 11 July 1991, 24 May 1996, 25 March 1998, 25 October 1999, 7 June 2004 and 4 June 2009, respectively.

48. When Offices of the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker are vacant a member of Lok Sabha appointed by the President under article 95(1) to perform the duties of the Speaker is called Speaker pro tem. Need to appoint the Speaker pro tem generally arises when Lok Sabha meets after a dissolution, for the Speaker of dissolved Lok Sabha who continues in Office till the first meeting of new Lok Sabha, vacates his office and someone has to preside till a new Speaker is elected.
49. The expression 'at the commencement' in article 87(1) includes a reasonable time after the date appointed by the President for the commencement of the first session of Lok Sabha. The Minister of Law on a reference made by the Lok Sabha Secretariat in 1960 held the same view.

So far as the Rajya Sabha is concerned, such a position does not arise as that House is a continuing body and the Vice-President of India is its ex-officio Chairman. After dissolution of Lok Sabha on 4 April 1957, Rajya Sabha met only on 13 May 1957, after the President's Address to members of both Houses on that day.

50. On 22 December 1950, the Provisional Parliament was adjourned till 5 February 1951, with the result that the Third Session of Provisional Parliament, which commenced on 15 November 1950, continued till 9 June 1951, and the House was not prorogued during the period of adjournment.

On 11 December 1962 the Third Lok Sabha was adjourned, till 21 January 1963, with the result that its Third Session which commenced on 8 November 1962, continued till 25 January, 1963 and the House was not prorogued during the period of adjournment.

The Eighth Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha, commenced on 23 February 1987 which was adjourned sine die on 12 May 1987. The Speaker, exercising his powers under proviso to Rule 15 reconvened the sittings of Lok Sabha from 27 July to 28 August 1987, with the result that its Eighth Session which commenced on 23 February 1987 continued till 3 September 1987 and the House was not prorogued during the period of adjournment. The Lok Sabha was prorogued on 3 September 1987.

The Fourteenth Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha, commenced on 18 July 1989, was adjourned sine die on 18 August 1989. The Speaker, exercising his power under proviso to Rule 15, reconvened the sittings of Lok Sabha from 11 to 16 October 1989. However, the House was adjourned sine die on 13 October 1989. With the result, the Fourteenth Session which commenced on 18 July 1989 continued till 20 October 1989 and the House was not prorogued during the period of adjournment. The Lok Sabha was prorogued on 20 October 1989.

The period between prorogation of the House and its reassembly in a new session is termed as 'inter-session period'.

Where all the items on the agenda have been discussed and the meeting of the Legislature is adjourned, the adjourned meeting (in this case the Mysore Legislative Assembly met on 15 March 1971, after having been adjourned on 26 December 1970) is not a new 'session' as new items can be added to the agenda or the agenda can be modified. A session is terminated only by prorogation and not by adjournment<sup>51</sup>.

The time-gap between the adjournment of Lok Sabha sine die and its prorogation is generally two to four days<sup>52</sup>, although there are instances when Lok Sabha was prorogued on the same day on which it was adjourned sine die<sup>53</sup>. Information regarding prorogation of Lok Sabha is issued in the Bulletin.

On 20 July 1967, the Madhya Pradesh Legislative Assembly, which was discussing the demands for grants for Education, was prorogued by the Governor on the advice of the Chief Minister<sup>54</sup>.

The matter was discussed in Lok Sabha on the same day, on an adjournment motion. Repudiating the charge that the Union Government had Similarly, the Third Session of the Ninth Lok Sabha commenced, on 7 August 1990, was adjourned sine die on 7 September 1990. The Speaker, exercising his power under proviso to Rule 15, reconvened the sittings of Lok Sabha from 1 to 5 October 1990. With the result, its Third Session which commenced on 7 August 1990 continued till 11 October 1990 and the House was not prorogued during the period of adjournment. The Lok Sabha was prorogued on 11 October 1990. There have been similar instances in case of the First, Fourth and Sixth Sessions of the Eleventh Lok Sabha held in 1996 and 1997, the Fourteenth Session of Thirteenth Lok Sabha in 2003-2004 and the Seventh Session of Fourteenth Lok Sabha in 2006.

The Eighth Session of the Sixth Lok Sabha was prorogued on 3 August 1979, 16 days after its adjournment sine die on 16 July 1979.

The Fifteenth Session of the Seventh Lok Sabha was prorogued on 11 September 1984, 15 days after its adjournment sine die on 27 August 1984.

The Eleventh Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha was prorogued on 30 September 1988, 25 days after its adjournment sine die on 5 September 1988.

The Twelfth Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha was prorogued on 5 January 1989, 20 days after its adjournment sine die on 16 December 1988.

The Seventh Session of the Tenth Lok Sabha was prorogued on 23 September 1993, 26 days after its adjournment sine die on 28 August 1993.

53. The Second and Third Sessions of the Second Lok Sabha, the Fifth, Seventh and Eleventh Sessions of the Third Lok Sabha, the Second Session of the Seventh Lok Sabha and the Fifth Session of Thirteenth Lok Sabha were prorogued on the same day they were adjourned sine die.

issued a directive to the State Governor, the Union Home Minister said that as a constitutional head, the Governor was bound by the advice of the Chief Minister in regard to the prorogation of the Assembly<sup>55</sup>.

The Madhya Pradesh Legislative Assembly was prorogued on 12 March 1969, by the Governor on the advice of the outgoing Chief Minister who had resigned on 10 March owing to the reported differences among the constituents of the ruling SVD.

When the matter was raised in Lok Sabha, the Union Home Minister reiterated the position that “once the Chief Minister gives an advice for prorogation, the Governor is bound to accept it”<sup>56</sup>.

The Haryana Legislative Assembly was prorogued on 28 February 1970, the Assembly having been adjourned sine die the previous day on a motion moved by the Chief Minister and carried by the House. The notice for adjourning the House sine die was received by the Speaker on 27 February at about 12.15 hours. On the same day, after 13.00 hours, the Speaker received a notice for motion of no-confidence in the Council of Ministers which was admitted by him, and discussion thereon was fixed for 3 March.

The ‘constitutional aspect of the question of prorogation when a motion of no-confidence in the Council of Ministers having been admitted was pending in the House’ was discussed in Lok Sabha on 2 and 4 March, 1970. Intervening in the debate, the Union Home Minister said that it was the Governor’s constitutional duty to accept the advice of the Chief Minister to prorogue the House, and the Chief Minister had demonstrated on his motion for adjournment, that the House was with him<sup>57</sup>.

The Punjab Legislative Assembly, which had been adjourned sine die by the Speaker on 27 March 1970, was prorogued by the Governor on 10 April on the advice of the Chief Minister. The Opposition protested against the adjournment of the House on the ground that no-confidence motions against the Speaker were pending in the House.

The Governor rejected various legal and constitutional objections raised by the Opposition to the prorogation: he was satisfied that the notice for moving the resolution for the removal of the Speaker was received late and that the Speaker was within his constitutional rights to ignore it<sup>58</sup>.

Procedure for Prorogation

After the adjournment of Lok Sabha sine die, the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs (or the Leader of the House, as the case may be) sends a communication to the Secretary-General conveying the intention of the Prime Minister or the Cabinet to prorogue the House.

The proposal of the Prime Minister, after being agreed to by the Speaker, is submitted to the President<sup>59</sup> by the Secretary-General. After the President has made the order<sup>60</sup> it is notified in the Gazette Extraordinary of the day on which the order is received in the Secretariat. Simultaneously, a paragraph is issued in the Bulletin informing the members of the prorogation of Lok Sabha. Besides, a press communique is also issued. All India Radio and Doordarshan/L.S.T. V Channel are also asked to broadcast/telecast the news.

It is not necessary that the order of prorogation should reach each and every member individually before it would become effective: it would suffice if the order is duly notified in the Official Gazette<sup>61</sup>.

Effects of Prorogation

On adjournment of Lok Sabha or its adjournment sine die, the pending business does not lapse. Prorogation terminates a session and does not constitute an interruption in the continuity of life of Lok Sabha which is brought to an end only by dissolution<sup>62</sup>.

A distinction has always been made between prorogation and dissolution insofar as their effect upon pending business in the House is concerned. The first standing orders, made under the Government of India Act, 1919, specifically provided that, on prorogation of a session, all pending notices would lapse, but Bills already introduced and pending before the House would be carried over to the next session<sup>63</sup>. This protection accorded to Bill was extended to notices of Bills as well in 1929<sup>64</sup>. By convention, all motions, resolutions and amendments moved and pending in the House and its Committees were also carried over. The saving in favour of pending Bills later came to be incorporated in Section 30(1) of the Government of India Act, 1935<sup>65</sup> and the provision regarding pending notices was incorporated in the Rules of Procedure framed by the Constituent Assembly (Legislative)<sup>66</sup>.

The present position with regard to the effect of prorogation of Lok Sabha upon different categories of pending business in the House may briefly be stated thus:

Bills : Under article 107(3), Bills pending before either House are expressly saved from lapsing upon prorogation. Bills before Select or Joint Committees are also protected. On 26 July 1956, a question was raised as to the effect of prorogation of the House on the functioning of Select or Joint Committees on Bills. The objection was ruled out by the Speaker who observed:

60. The President's order of prorogation takes immediate effect and has seldom been prospective or retrospective.

There is a specific statutory provision in the Constitution that on prorogation of Parliament, a Bill shall not lapse. That means the prorogation has no effect so far as that Bill is concerned. A Bill means all stages of the Bill. Here we were in the Select Committee stage... The Select Committee can go on even when the House is prorogued; because prorogation has no effect on the pendency of a Bill<sup>67</sup>.

The order of the House allotting time for discussion of a Bill or of a particular stage thereof does not lapse upon prorogation<sup>68</sup>. Notices of intention to move for leave to introduce Bills also do not lapse on prorogation and no fresh notice is necessary in the following session except where any recommendation obtained under the Constitution in respect of the Bill has ceased to be operative<sup>69</sup>.

Motions, Resolutions and Amendments: Under the Rules of Procedure, motions, resolutions and amendments which have already been moved and are pending in the House do not lapse on prorogation and are carried over to the next session<sup>70</sup>.

A point was raised in Lok Sabha whether inasmuch as article 107(3) specifically saved only Bills pending before either House from lapsing and all other pending business lapsed upon prorogation. The Speaker observed that the article did not specifically mention that all items of pending business other than Bills would lapse on prorogation, and therefore, the provision in the “Rules of Procedure of Lok Sabha”, framed under article 118, would apply<sup>71</sup>.

Business pending before Parliamentary Committees: The Rules of Procedure specifically provide that any business pending before a Committee shall not lapse by reason only of the prorogation of the House and the Committee shall continue to function notwithstanding such prorogation<sup>72</sup>. This provision, adopted in March 1957,

68. The Bills to which time has been allotted by the House are not placed before the Business Advisory Committee or Committee on Private Members’ Bills and Resolutions, as the case may be, for allocation of time again during the next session.

70. Rule 336.

71. L.S. Deb., 20-7-1956, cc. 420-37.

This view was also supported by the Attorney-General who, upon a reference subsequently made to him, gave his opinion as follows:

Article 107(3) enacts one exception to the rule that a prorogation has the effect of quashing all pending business. That article, however, does not prevent Parliament from creating further and other exceptions to that rule by the exercise of its power under articles 118(1) and 118(2) of the Constitution. There is no provision in the Constitution which fetters or restricts that power so as to prevent Parliament from creating these further and other exceptions. Rules 335 and 336 of the Rules are, therefore, competent and valid.

72. Rule 284. See also Chapter XXX—‘Parliamentary Committees.’

was made in the Rules after consultation with the Attorney-General<sup>73</sup>.

The true construction of article 107(3) is that Parliament wanted to put it beyond doubt that Bills shall not cease by reason of prorogation of the House; and in regard to other effects of prorogation, it left the matter to the will and pleasure of the House by making such provisions as it desired in the Rules of Procedure under article 118(1), even though the House may go to the extent of protecting all part-discussed business of whatever kind from the effect of prorogation and limiting its effect to notices only of which the House is not seized; and even in the case of notices an exception has been made in favour of notice of Bills<sup>74</sup>.

On prorogation of either House of Parliament, the President has the power to issue Ordinances under article 323. If an Ordinance is promulgated before the order of prorogation is made and notified, the Ordinance would be void<sup>75</sup>.

Dissolution of the House

The end of the life of Lok Sabha either by an order made by the President under article 85(2)(b) or on the expiration of the period of five years from the date appointed for its first meeting is termed as 'dissolution of the House'<sup>76</sup>.

Once a Legislature is duly constituted<sup>77</sup>, it becomes capable of dissolution though it begins to function only after it has been summoned to meet.

In Kerala, the newly constituted Legislative Assembly, after the mid-term election in February/March 1965, was dissolved under a Proclamation under article 356 of the Constitution issued on 24 March 1965, even before it could be summoned to meet. The constitutionality and bona fides of the Proclamation were challenged in a petition. The Court held:

"Neither article 172 nor article 174 prescribes that a dissolution of a State Legislature can only be after the date fixed for its first meeting... once the Assembly is constituted, it becomes capable of dissolution"<sup>78</sup>.

73. The Attorney-General in a note to the Rules Committee had stated: Committees not connected with Bills can function during the inter-session period, if the Rules of Procedure so provide. There would seem to be nothing incongruous in the Committee functioning when the parent body is unable to function. The parent body would by its procedural rules authorise the Committees to function so that the power and the authority of the Committees to function will be derived from the parent body—Min. (RC), 19-3-1957, p. 38.

74. This is in accordance with the opinion expressed by the Attorney-General—see also Rule 335.

75. Bidya Chaudhury v. Province of Bihar, A.I.R. 1950 Patna 19.

76. See art. 83(2). By the amendment of this article by the Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976, the duration of Lok Sabha was made six years. The life of Lok Sabha was again made five years by the Constitution (Forty-fourth Amendment) Act, 1978.

77. Section 73 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, provides that upon the issue of a notification by the Election Commission in the Official Gazette of the names of the members elected for the various constituencies, Lok Sabha or the Legislative Assembly "shall be deemed to be duly constituted."

78. K.K. Aboo v. Union of India and others. A.I.R. 1965 Kerala 229.

In another similar instance, the elections for the Thirteenth Bihar Legislative Assembly were held in three phases in the month of February, 2005. Notification was issued by the Election Commission in pursuance of section 73 of the Representation of People Act, 1951. For the 243 seats of the Assembly, none of the parties/pre-poll combinations could gather simple majority. In such circumstances, the Governor of Bihar in his report dated 6 March 2005 recommended to the President that the newly constituted Assembly be kept in suspended animation, since no political party was in a position to form a Government. A notification was issued on 7 March 2005 under article 356 of the Constitution, imposing the President's Rule over the State of Bihar and the Assembly was kept in suspended animation. Even thereafter, when no stable combination could be formed, the Governor of Bihar sent another report on 21 May 2005 to the President of India. It was mentioned in the report that a trend was indicated to win over elected representatives of the people. In his view, a situation had arisen in the State wherein it would be desirable in the interest of the State that Assembly which has been kept in suspended animation be dissolved so that the people/electorate could be provided with one more opportunity to seek the mandate of the people. The Union Cabinet decided to accept the report and recommended to the President the dissolution of the Legislative Assembly of Bihar. The President was pleased to approve the recommendation. After due process the notification of dissolution was issued on 23 May 2005. Thus the Bihar Assembly after its constitution was dissolved even without holding a single sitting. This notification on being challenged before the Supreme Court, the Court by majority judgment held that the Bihar Assembly was for all intents and purposes, was deemed to be duly constituted on issue of notification under section 73 of the Representation of the People Act and the duration thereof is distinct from its due constitution. The Court further held that the proclamation dissolving the Legislative Assembly of Bihar was unconstitutional but observed that even if the dissolution notifications were unconstitutional, the natural consequence was not restoration of status quo ante. The Court felt that restoration of status quo ante would not be a proper relief even if the notifications were declared invalid.<sup>79</sup>

The dissolution of Lok Sabha before the completion of its full term is not unconstitutional.

The Second Lok Sabha was dissolved by the President on 31 March 1962, when it had not completed the full term of five years. A petition filed by Dr. N.C. Samantsinhar before Circuit Bench of the Punjab High Court at Delhi under article 226 of the Constitution praying that a rule nisi be issued (and in the interval respondents be directed not to proceed with the summoning of the Third Lok Sabha on 16 April 1962) declaring the premature dissolution void and ineffective, was dismissed by the High Court on 4 April 1962.

Dissolution puts an end to the representative character of the individuals who at the time compose Lok Sabha. Once dissolved, the Lok Sabha cannot assemble again until after a general election. It has been held:

79. Rameshwar Prasad & Others v. Union of India & another, A.I.R. 2006 SC 980.

A Legislature can be summoned to meet only if it is in esse at the time. A dissolved Legislature is incapable of being summoned to meet<sup>80</sup>.

Rajya Sabha is not subject to dissolution, as also a Legislative Council where the State Legislature is bicameral.

The power to dissolve Lok Sabha is vested in the President and he exercises this power on the advice of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister may consult the Cabinet or inform it of his intention to make a recommendation to the President<sup>81</sup>. The power to advise the President to dissolve Lok Sabha is a potent weapon in the hands of the Prime Minister to keep his party intact and acts as a deterrent against its break-up. A question has been raised whether a Prime Minister who has lost confidence of the party in power or who is in danger of losing such confidence should advise the President for a dissolution of Lok Sabha and whether the President is within his constitutional rights to reject such advice<sup>82</sup>. No definite answers have been provided to these questions and there are no precedents to rely upon. However, one thing is clear: a Prime Minister who has not resigned or who has not been dismissed by the President can always give such advice irrespective of the fact whether he has lost the confidence of his party or not. The President, if he decides not to accept such advice, must first find an alternative Prime Minister who can command a majority in Lok Sabha and then seek his advice and act accordingly.

So far as a State Assembly is concerned, the constitutional provision regarding its dissolution is on the same lines as in the case of Lok Sabha. However, article 356 requires that if at any time during the life of an Assembly the Government of the State cannot be carried on in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, the Governor has to make a report to the President<sup>83</sup>. Normally, the Governor, in such circumstances,

81. In 1970, the Prime Minister conveyed to the President the Cabinet's decision to dissolve the Lok Sabha. Again in 1977, the Prime Minister advised the President to dissolve the Fifth Lok Sabha and order fresh elections.

82. Under the provisions of the Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir, the Governor is bound to accept the advice of the Chief Minister for dissolution of the State Assembly. On the recommendation of the Chief Minister of Jammu and Kashmir, Sheikh Abdullah (who had lost the support of the majority Congress Legislature Party), the Governor dissolved the Assembly and imposed Governor's rule on 27 March 1977. The Governor stated that the Chief Minister had advised him to dissolve the State Assembly. As he had no legal option, he dissolved the Assembly and took over the administration.

83. In exercise of the powers conferred by article 356 of the Constitution, the Vice-President acting as President of India, B.D. Jatti, issued on 30 April 1977, nine Proclamations assuming to himself all functions of the Governments of the States of Bihar, Haryana, Himachal Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh, Orissa, Punjab, Rajasthan, Uttar Pradesh and West Bengal. The Legislative Assemblies of these States were also dissolved. Earlier, the Union Home Minister, Charan Singh, had suggested to the Chief Ministers of these States that in view of the rout of the Congress Party in the Lok Sabha elections held in March 1977, they should themselves dissolve the State Assemblies and seek the mandate of the people. But the Chief Ministers had declined to accept the suggestion. Further, efforts were made to contest the constitutionality of the Union Government's request in the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court, however, declined to interfere.

does not dissolve the Assembly, even though he may be advised by the Chief Minister to do so, but it is not illegal if he dissolves the Assembly, before he has made a report to the President.

The Punjab Legislative Assembly was summoned to meet on 14 June 1971, on the advice of the Chief Minister, as the period for which a vote on account taken earlier from the Assembly was to expire on 30 June. With the growing differences within the ruling Akali Party coming to ahead about 12 June the Chief Minister advised the Governor for the immediate dissolution of the Assembly so that he might seek a fresh-mandate from the people. Acting on his advice, the Governor dissolved the Assembly on 13 June. The Chief Minister also submitted his resignation which the Governor accepted.

The propriety of the action of the Governor in not exploring the possibilities of forming an alternative Government and in dissolving the Assembly himself was discussed in Parliament<sup>84</sup>. Replying to the debate in Rajya Sabha, the Union Minister of State in the Ministry of Home Affairs observed that where a Chief Minister has prima facie lost the confidence of the majority of the Assembly, as appeared to be the case in Punjab, the proper course for the Governor would be not to act on the advice of the Chief Minister in the matter of dissolution but to make an independent assessment of the situation by consulting the Opposition parties<sup>85</sup>.

It is a moot point whether the Governor on his own should dissolve the Assembly before submitting his report to the President under article 356. Normally, the practice has been for the President to order dissolution of the Assembly where so recommended by the Governor in his report, because after consultation with the Opposition parties if the Governor is still of the view that dissolution is the appropriate course of action in the situation prevailing, then in that case, certainly the President would give such an advice of the Governor his most earnest consideration<sup>86</sup>.

There have been two earlier instances when an Assembly was dissolved by the Governor—the Kerala Legislative Assembly on 26 June 1970, and the Tamil Nadu Legislative Assembly on 4 January 1971. However, in both the cases, the Chief Minister enjoyed the majority support of the Assembly.

When the President has issued an order in pursuance of a Proclamation under art. 356 whereby the powers exercisable by the Governor of the State, which have been assumed by the President, would be exercisable also by the Governor, there is no constitutional or legal infirmity in the order of the Governor dissolving the Assembly<sup>87</sup>.

Procedure for Dissolution

The Procedure in regard to the normal dissolution of Lok Sabha is that the Secretary-General, a few days before the termination of the last session of Lok Sabha, makes an enquiry from the Prime Minister through the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs (and through the Leader of the House, if the Prime Minister is not the Leader of the House), or the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs (or the Leader of the House, as the case may be) himself sends a communication about the date suggested by the Prime Minister.

The proposal of the Prime Minister, as agreed to by the Speaker, is submitted by the Secretary-General to the President. A draft order is also sent along with the note indicating the date on which it is proposed to dissolve the House. The order is signed by the President on the date on which Lok Sabha is to be dissolved. After the President has made the order<sup>88</sup>, it is notified in the Gazette Extraordinary of the day on which the order is received in the Secretariat. Simultaneously, the Secretariat issues a press communiqué for wide publicity of the order in the Press as well as over the All India Radio, Doordarshan, etc. A paragraph is also issued in the Bulletin informing the members of the dissolution of Lok Sabha.

In case the Prime Minister decides to recommend to the President to dissolve the Lok Sabha before the end of its normal term, the Prime Minister submits the proposal to the President and communicates the President's order of dissolution to the Speaker who asks the Secretary-General to notify it in the Gazette and inform the members through the Bulletin, press and other news media.

With the break-up of the Congress Parliamentary Party in November 1969, the ruling party lost its majority in Lok Sabha. On the advice of the Prime Minister, the President dissolved Lok Sabha on 27 December 1970 — one year and seventy-nine days before its normal term because the Prime Minister wanted to seek a fresh mandate of the people on the Government's policies with a view that if returned in majority the party in power could implement those policies in a smooth way. The President's order was communicated to the Speaker and members were informed about the dissolution of the House through the bulletin, over the radio, etc.

The Fifth Lok Sabha, which was elected in 1971, was dissolved by the President on 18 January 1977. The President's order dissolving the Lok Sabha was issued to the press on 18 January 1977, by the Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs. Before the Prime Minister advised the President to dissolve the Lok Sabha, she (Smt. Indira Gandhi) had consulted the Speaker.

Effects of Dissolution

Dissolution, as already stated, marks the end of the life of a House and is

---

88. The President's order of dissolution takes immediate effect and has seldom been prospective or retrospective.

followed by the constitution of a new House<sup>89</sup>. Once the House has been dissolved, the dissolution is irrevocable. There is no power vested in the President to cancel his order of dissolution and revive the previous House. The consequences of a dissolution are absolute and irrevocable. In Lok Sabha, which alone is subject to dissolution under the Constitution, dissolution “passes a sponge over the parliamentary slate”. All business pending before it or any of its committees lapses on dissolution<sup>90</sup>. No part of the records of the dissolved House can be carried over and transcribed into the records or registers of the new House<sup>91</sup>. In short, dissolution draws the final curtain upon the existing House<sup>92</sup>.

The position as to the effect of dissolution upon different categories of business may be stated as follows:

Bills: Before 1923, the position in the Central Legislative Assembly was that a Bill passed by one House and transmitted to the other House did not lapse upon the dissolution of the House which had passed it. If the other House passed the Bill, it would become law on receiving assent of the Governor-General. The question then arose as to what the position would be of a Bill where the other House, instead of merely agreeing, made amendments to the Bill. To meet this contingency, Rule 36 C was framed in 1924 which provided:

On the dissolution of either Chamber, all Bills which have been introduced in the Chamber which has been dissolved or have been laid on the Table in that Chamber under Rule 25, and which have not been passed by the Indian Legislature, shall lapse.

This rule remained in force till 14 August 1947, and by implication saved Bills already passed by both the Houses and awaiting assent of the Governor-General from lapsing on the Assembly ceasing to exist.

Article 107 lays down the effect of dissolution upon Bills before each House of Parliament in the event of dissolution of Lok Sabha. The present position of the effect of dissolution upon the pending Bills is that —

In Lok Sabha, all Bills pending at the time of dissolution, whether originating in the House or transmitted to it by Rajya Sabha, lapse; and

In Rajya Sabha, Bills passed by Lok Sabha, but which have not been disposed of and are pending in Rajya Sabha on the date of dissolution, lapse. Only the Bills originating in Rajya Sabha which have not been passed by Lok Sabha but are still pending before Rajya Sabha, do not lapse<sup>93</sup>.

89. In India, under section 14 of the R.P. Act, 1951, a general election to Lok Sabha can be held six months in advance of the expiration of the life of the existing House, although the new House is constituted only after dissolution of the existing House.

90. Even business, like Bills, disposed of by Lok Sabha but remained pending in Rajya Sabha on the date of dissolution lapses.

91. The exceptions, however, are: Reports of Parliamentary Committees and assurances by Ministers.

92. M.N. Kaul: “Effect of Dissolution upon Pending Business in Parliament”, J.P.J., IV(1).

93. A Bill (e.g. the Architects Bill, 1970) originating in Rajya Sabha and pending in that House after having been transmitted to Lok Sabha and returned by Lok Sabha with amendments, also lapses.

If, however, in respect of a Bill upon which the Houses have disagreed and the President has notified his intention of summoning a Joint Sitting of the Houses for the consideration of the Bill prior to dissolution, that Bill does not lapse and may be passed at a Joint Sitting of both Houses, notwithstanding that dissolution has intervened since the President notified his intention to summon the Joint Sitting of the Houses<sup>94</sup>.

There is no express provision in the Constitution regarding the effect of dissolution on a Bill which has been passed by the two Houses of Parliament and sent to the President for assent. It has, however, been held that such a Bill does not lapse on dissolution of Lok Sabha. Further, if such a Bill is returned by the President for reconsideration, the successor House can reconsider it and if it is passed by the successor House (with or without amendments), it will be deemed to have been passed “again”<sup>95</sup>.

Other Business, e.g. Motions, Resolutions, etc.: All other business pending in Lok Sabha, e.g., motions, resolutions, amendments, supplementary demands for grants etc., at whatever stage, lapses upon dissolution, as also the petitions presented to the House which stand referred to the Committee on Petitions.

A motion for approval or modification of statutory rules laid on the Table of both Houses under the provisions of an Act, passed by Lok Sabha and transmitted to Rajya Sabha for concurrence and vice versa also lapses on dissolution of Lok Sabha<sup>96</sup>.

A motion given in pursuance of Section 3(1) of Judges (Inquiry) Act, 1968 for presenting an address to the President praying for removal of a Judge, if admitted, will not lapse on the dissolution of the Lok Sabha<sup>97</sup>.

Anything said or done during the “existence” of a House, “cannot be raised as a privilege issue” after that House has been dissolved<sup>98</sup>.

Business before Committee: All business pending before parliamentary committees of Lok Sabha lapse upon dissolution of Lok Sabha. Committees themselves

94. Art. 108(5).

95. Purushothaman Nambudiri v. State of Kerala, A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 694. In this case it was held that “a Bill pending assent of the Governor or President is outside clause (5) of article 196 and cannot be said to lapse on the dissolution of the Assembly”.

96. The effect of dissolution of Lok Sabha in relation to statutory rules laid on the Table was discussed by the Committee of Secretaries of Legislative Bodies in India at their meeting held at Hyderabad in March 1957. It was held that in such cases the ‘general law of lapsing’ should apply. It was stressed that the new House was a different body and no part of the records of the old House could be carried over to or written into the register of the new House. The new House would not, therefore, be able to entertain any message or amendment communicated by the other House.

97. In Sub-Committee of Judicial Accountability v. Union of India, the Supreme Court held as under:

“It is true that Purushothaman Nambudiri case (A.I.R. 1962 SC 694) dealt with a legislative measure and not a pending business in the nature of motion. But, we are persuaded to the view that neither the doctrine that dissolution of a House ‘passes a sponge over parliamentary slate’ nor the specific provisions contained in any rule or rules framed under Article 118 of the Constitution determine the effect of dissolution on the motion for removal of a Judge under Article 124. The reason is that Article 124(5) and the law made thereunder exclude the operation of Article 118 in this area”. A.I.R. 1992 SC 320.

98. L.S. Deb., 7-4-1977, cc. 11-12.

stand dissolved on dissolution of Lok Sabha<sup>99</sup>. However, a committee which is unable to complete its work before the dissolution of the House may report to the House to that effect, in which case any preliminary memorandum or note that the committee may have prepared or any evidence that it may have taken is made available to the new committee when appointed<sup>100</sup>. Likewise, where a report completed by a committee when the House is not in session is presented by its Chairman to the Speaker and before its presentation to the House in the next session, Lok Sabha is dissolved, the report is laid by the Secretary-General on the Table of the new House at the first convenient opportunity. While laying the report, the Secretary-General makes a statement to the effect that the report was presented to the Speaker of the preceding Lok Sabha before its dissolution; where it was ordered by the Speaker that the report be printed or circulated under Rule 280, the Secretary-General also reports that fact to the House<sup>101</sup>.

Assurances by Ministers

The assurances given by Ministers on the floor of the House, which are pending for implementation are deemed not to lapse on the dissolution of the Lok Sabha, irrespective of whether a report to that effect has been made by the Committee on Government Assurances<sup>102</sup>.

Emergency Session

The procedure for summoning Lok Sabha for an emergency session is generally the same as for a regular session<sup>103</sup>. The President's order takes the same form as for commencement of any other session; so also do other formalities. The Press communique issued by the Secretariat also mentions the special purpose for which the session is being convened. Further, if the session is summoned at a short notice and

101. Dir. 71A(6).

102. Before the dissolution of the First Lok Sabha, the Committee on Government Assurances selected from among the pending assurances such of those as were of a substantial character and incorporated them in a report so as to enable the successor Committee of the new House to pursue them. In the report (which was presented on 28 March 1957, the last sitting of First Lok Sabha), the Committee recommended that these assurances might be implemented by the Government.

103. In 1942, an emergency session of the Legislative Assembly was convened on 14 September 1942, to discuss the situation arising out of the Civil Disobedience Movement launched by the Congress in August 1942. Orders of the Governor-General were received on 24 August 1942, and summons to members were issued the next day.

When the Indian Rupee was devalued, an emergency session of the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) was called on 5 October 1949. The session lasted for two days. Proposal of the Cabinet to summon the session was received late in the evening on 21 September 1949, and summons to members were issued on 23 September 1949.

An emergency session of the Provisional Parliament was held to discuss the Korean situation in 1950. On 11 July 1950, the Cabinet proposed to call the session from 31 July 1950. On the same day, orders of the President were obtained and summons to members were issued.

there is no time to issue the regular summons, members may be informed through Press and Electronic Media<sup>104</sup>.

When an emergency session is summoned at a short notice, the air and railway transport authorities are instructed to give top priority to members proceeding to attend the session.

Considering the duration and purpose for which an emergency session is summoned, the Speaker decides if the Question Hour should be dispensed with<sup>105</sup>.

If the interval between the issue of summons and commencement of the session is such that the prescribed period of notice of questions, private member's resolutions and Bills cannot be completed, the Speaker has the power to relax the period of notice<sup>106</sup>. In the case of questions such power is, however, exercised in consultation with the Government.

104. Rule 3. Proviso.

This Proviso was added to the Rule by the Rules Committee at its meeting held on 14 December 1953.

Since the First Sessions of the Fifth and the Seventh Lok Sabha were called at a short notice and the gap between the date of issue of summons and the date of commencement of sessions was only 4 and 5 days, respectively, in addition to issuing summons in the ordinary course, all outstation members were also informed about the summoning of Lok Sabha telegraphically. Wireless message was also issued to all Chief Secretaries/Administrators of all States/Union territories requesting them to convey to members about the commencement of the Fifth Session of Ninth Lok Sabha and the First Session of the Tenth Lok Sabha. Press Release to all District Collectors/District Magistrates through NICNET with the request to inform members of Lok Sabha about commencement of the First Session of the Eleventh Lok Sabha was also issued. However, these sessions were not emergent sessions.

105. Question Hour was not dispensed with during the Emergency Sessions, 1942, 1949 and 1950.

106. See Rules 33, 65(3) and 170.

During the First Session of the Second Lok Sabha in 1957, the interval between the date of issue of summons and the day when private members' Bills were to be taken up was barely a month. Considering the difficulty in complying with the period of one month's notice in the circumstances, the Speaker relaxed the period for the introduction of Bills. Similar relaxation was also made in the First Session of the Third, the Fourth and the Fifth Lok Sabha in 1962, 1967 and 1971, respectively.

CHAPTER X

President's Address, Messages and Communications to the House

President's Address

The Constitution provides for an Address by the President to either House of Parliament or both Houses assembled together<sup>1</sup>. The Constitution also makes incumbent upon the President to address both Houses of Parliament assembled together at the commencement of the first session after each general election to Lok Sabha and at the commencement of the first session of each year and inform Parliament of the causes of its summons<sup>2</sup>.

The provision for Address by the Head of State to Parliament goes back to the year 1921 when the Central Legislature was set up for the first time under the Government of India Act, 1919. The Act provided for the Address by the Governor-General in his discretion to either House of the Central Legislature<sup>3</sup>. Though there was no specific provision in the Act for the Governor-General's Address to both the Houses assembled together, in practice, however, during the years 1921 to 1946, the Governor-General addressed the Lower House separately as well as both the Houses assembled together on a number of occasions.

Till August 1947, the Address by the Governor-General was governed by the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1919. After Independence in 1947, the Government of India Act, 1935, as adapted, provided that the Governor-General may address the Dominion Legislature and for that purpose require the attendance of members<sup>4</sup>, but actually the Governor-General did not address the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) on any occasion during its existence from November 1947 to January 1950. During the year 1950, when the Constitution came into force, three sessions of the Provisional Parliament were held. It was felt that to have President's Address as many as three times in a year involved repetitions and expenditure of time on discussions of the Address. Besides such a procedure involved some administrative difficulties<sup>5</sup>.

1. Art. 86(1). This provision is analogous to that provided in ss. 63A(2) and 63B(3) as set out in the Ninth Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935. However, since the commencement of the Constitution, the President has not so far addressed either House or both Houses assembled together under the provision of this article.

2. Art. 87(1).

3. Ss. 63A(3) and 63B(3), op. cit.

4. S. 20(1) of the Government of India Act, 1935, as adapted.

5. The Prime Minister, while replying to the debate on clause 7 of the Constitution (First Amendment) Bill, 1951, as reported by the Select Committee, observed:

“The real difficulty of course is that this (Address) involves a certain preparation outside this House which is often troublesome. Members are aware that when a coach and six come, all kinds

Hence, the Constitution was amended to provide for the President's Address only at the commencement of the first session after each general election to Lok Sabha and at the commencement of the first session each year"<sup>6</sup>.

Being a statement of policy of the Government, the Address is drafted by the Government: it is not the President but the Government who are responsible for the contents of the Address<sup>7</sup>. It contains a review of the activities and achievements of the Government during the previous year and its policy with regard to important internal and current international problems. It also contains a brief account of the programmes of Government business for the session. It, however, does not cover the entire probable legislative business to be transacted during the session. Therefore, after the Address, a separate paragraph giving details of the Government business expected to be taken up during the session is published in the Bulletin.

In the States, it is the Governor who delivers the Address to the State Legislature informing it "of the causes of its summons". If the Governor is incapacitated from delivering the Address, the President may make other provisions for performance of that function of the Governor<sup>8</sup>. The provision is mandatory. In this connection, the Calcutta High Court observed:

If a Legislature meets and transacts legislative business, without the preliminary of an address by the Governor, when required under article 176, its proceedings are illegal and invalid and may be questioned in a court of law<sup>9</sup>.

The Governor of West Bengal, in his Address to both Houses of the State Legislature in 1969, skipped over two paragraphs of the Address. The constitutional and political aspects of the matter were debated in Lok Sabha. In his reply to the debate, the Minister of Home Affairs stated that the Address of the Head of State "is a public declaration of policy that the Government wants to follow in the coming year.... The Address is supposed to look to the future and to the present. But the two paras tried to interpret history..."<sup>10</sup>

According to the Attorney General, the Address by the Governor cannot be utilised by the Council of Ministers to cast any reflection on or make any adverse criticism of any act of the Governor done by him as a constitutional head of the State<sup>11</sup>.

The Punjab Governor, while delivering his address to both the Houses of the Legislature assembled together on 14 March 1969, read out the passages which were critical of the actions of the Government during the last year or so. On 21 March, the Punjab Legislative Council adopted an amendment by the Congress Opposition to the official Motion of Thanks for the Governor's Address. The amendment regretted that "the observations made in para 4 of the Address regarding the violations of constitutional provisions and parliamentary conventions at the time of passing the Budget for the year 1968-69 are contrary to admitted facts. The Budget was passed in accordance with the provisions of the Ordinance promulgated by him. By giving his assent to the Appropriation Bills, the Governor became as much a party to the passing of the Budget as the two Houses of the Legislature. These observations amount to such contradictions which he should have been pleased to avoid making in his Address, particularly when they are also against the finding of the Supreme Court of India".

Fixation of Date for the Address

In the case of the first session after each general election to Lok Sabha, the President addresses both Houses of Parliament assembled together after the members have made and subscribed the oath or affirmation and the Speaker has been elected. It generally takes two to three days to complete these preliminaries. No other business is transacted till the President has addressed both Houses assembled together<sup>12</sup>. This is done in order to give precedence to the President's Address over all other business. For the same reason, in the case of the first session each year, the President's Address takes place at the time and date notified for commencement of the session of both the Houses of Parliament. The session of Lok Sabha that day commences half-an-hour after the conclusion of the Address when the Houses assemble in their respective Chambers for the transaction of formal business.

While forwarding to the Speaker the proposal regarding commencement of the first session of a new Lok Sabha or the first session of the year, the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs (or the Leader of the House, in case the Prime Minister is not the Leader of the House) also suggests the date and time at which the President may address both Houses of Parliament assembled together. The President's order summoning either House of Parliament does not make any mention of the Address by the President nor is the information regarding the Address contained in the summons issued to members. Members are informed about the date, time and venue of the President's Address through a paragraph in the Bulletin.

Ceremonies Connected with the Address

Members of both Houses of Parliament assemble together in the Central Hall of the Parliament House where the President delivers his Address<sup>13</sup>. New members who have not already made and subscribed the oath or affirmation are admitted to the Central Hall on the occasion of the President's Address on production of the certificate of election granted to them by the Returning Officer or on introduction by a member who has made oath or affirmation or on production of the summons for the session issued to them by the Secretary-General.

12. L.S. Deb., 11-5-1957, c. 25.

13. Before the First General Elections held in 1952 when two separate Houses were constituted, the President addressed the Provisional Parliament at the commencement of its First, Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth Sessions in the Parliament Chamber (now Lok Sabha Chamber).

In the Central Hall, seats in the first few rows in sectors 1 to 5 are reserved for members of the Union Council of Ministers<sup>14</sup>, Deputy Speaker, Lok Sabha and Deputy Chairman, Rajya Sabha. Seats in the first one or two rows in sectors 6 to 8 are reserved for the leaders of opposition parties and groups having reasonable strength in both the Houses. In the second row in sectors 1 to 8, seats are reserved for the Members of Panel of Chairpersons and Chairpersons of Parliamentary Committees on both sides of the gangway in the Central Hall. Other members may occupy any of the vacant seats.

The President's Address to both Houses of Parliament assembled together is the most solemn and formal act under the Constitution. Utmost dignity and decorum befitting that occasion is maintained. Any action on the part of a member which mars the occasion of the President's Address or creates disturbance is punishable by the House to which he belongs<sup>15</sup>. Where such an offence is committed, the House may

14. In order to ensure that seats reserved for the Ministers do not remain vacant, the Ministers are requested to intimate, well before the President's Address, in case they are unable to attend the Address. On receipt of requisite intimation, seats reserved for the Ministers concerned are released to be occupied by other members.
  15. On the occasion of the President's Address to both the Houses of Parliament assembled together on 12 February 1968, two members of Lok Sabha created obstruction. The incident was followed by a walk-out by about 70 to 80 members belonging to both the Houses. On 28 February, having given an opportunity to the two members to explain their position, Lok Sabha adopted a motion from which other members who had joined in the walk-out were left out, disapproving of their conduct and reprimanded them "for their undesirable, undignified and unbecoming behaviour",—L.S. Deb., 20-2-1968, cc. 2167, 2170-2225, 2234-80; 28-2-1968, cc. 467-87.

A member of Lok Sabha was alleged to have created obstruction and showed disrespect to the President on the occasion of his Address to both the Houses of Parliament assembled together on 23 March 1971. On a motion adopted by the House on 2 April, a Committee was constituted by the Speaker on 5 April 1971 "to go into the matter in all details and to suggest suitable action and also guidelines for the future"—L.S. Deb., 2-4-1971, cc. 188-223, 239-46, 271-72 and Bn. (II), dated 5-4-1971. The Committee presented its first report to the House on 15 November 1971. The Committee were of the view that the conduct of the member should be viewed with disapproval. They, however, suggested that in view of what was stated by the member in his oral evidence before the Committee, a lenient view might be taken and the matter might be dropped.

A similar Committee was constituted earlier in 1963 and on its recommendation being accepted by the House, three members were reprimanded by the Speaker,—L.S. Deb., 18-2-1963, cc. 2-10; 19-2-1963, cc. 173-74; 19-3-1963, c. 4790.

On 13 March 1972, a group of members created disturbance by continuously interrupting the President during his Address and then staging a walk-out. The Speaker referred the said incident for the consideration of a Committee on 17 March 1972 (L.S. Deb., 17-3-1972, c. 193). In their second report, the Committee inter alia formulated certain guidelines for the conduct of members and maintenance of order, dignity and decorum on the occasion of the President's Address: (i) the insertion of a new article, 87A, in the Constitution so as to provide that the President shall preside on the occasion of the Address to the House(s) of Parliament; (ii) amendment of article 118 for making rules as to the procedure on the occasion of the President's Address; and (iii) similar constitutional provisions for the Governor's Address to a State Legislature under articles 175 and 176 of the Constitution.

On 19 February 1973, while the President was delivering his Address, some members walked out of the Central Hall. On 18 February 1974, as soon as the President started delivering his Address, a member made certain remarks. Simultaneously, some members rushed in front of the dais and shouted something. After five minutes, they left the Central Hall, continuing to shout. On 17 February 1975, as soon as the President started reading his Address, a member got up and constitute a committee to go into the matter and report, or where the offence is definite and specific it may punish the member(s) in question without going through the process of a committee. In either case, the accused member must be heard and, if necessary, the discussion on the relevant motion on the incident may be postponed to enable that member to state his position<sup>16</sup>. As a convention, no member leaves the Central Hall while the President is addressing<sup>17</sup>. A few days before the Address, members are informed through Bulletin about the ceremonies and rules to be observed interrupted him by shouting something and then by staging a walk-out. The President did not take any notice of the interruption and continued his Address.

On 16 February 1981, while the Vice-President was reading the Hindi version of President's Address, a member rose in his seat and made a submission and thereafter left the Central Hall. However, Vice-President continued reading the Address. On 18 February 1982, when President was reading his Address, a member made certain remarks regarding UP Government. President asked him to resume his seat and not to disturb him. Thereafter, member sat down and President resumed his Address. On 12 March 1990, when President was reading his Address, some members got up at their places and referred to 'Meham' issue and Punjab problem. President continued reading his Address without paying heed to interruptions. Thereafter, certain members staged a walkout. Subsequently, when the President referred to the downward trend in prices of essential commodities some members voiced their dissent. Thereupon, President observed that they would have ample time to discuss the Address and asked them not to interrupt him. Again when the President referred to the Mandal Commission Report, two members rose and made certain remarks. The President asked them to resume their seats. Later, they staged a walkout. President continued with his Address. On 16 February 2006, when President was reading his Address, one member rose and made certain remarks. President did not take note of it and continued with his Address. On 25 February 2008, when the President was reading her Address, members of Telangana Rashtra Samiti (TRS) rose and shouted slogans and showed placards. Thereafter, they walked out of the Central Hall. However, the President continued with her Address.

However, in the case of disturbances created by some members at the time of the Governor's Address to the Rajasthan Legislative Assembly, the Governor himself ordered expulsion of those members from the House:

On 26 February 1966, the Governor of Rajasthan expelled some members of Rajasthan Legislative Assembly from the House for repeatedly interrupting his Address to the House. Later, a privilege motion was moved by an Opposition member and the matter was referred to the Privileges Committee of the Assembly. The Committee held that the Governor had acted within his powers and authority in expelling those members during the course of his Address under article 176(1)—Raj. L.A. Deb., 24-9-1966.

The action of the Governor in having the members removed from the House was also challenged by a writ petition in the Rajasthan High Court. The Court dismissed the writ petition holding, inter alia, that it was only after the Governor had delivered his Address that the Legislature was given the opportunity to discuss the same and express its opinion and that, therefore, the petitioners could not legitimately claim any right to put questions to the Governor or make any kind of comments even before he had addressed the Assembly. As regards the action of the Governor, the Court did not feel persuaded to entertain the matter for the reason, among others, that the petitioners were expelled during the Address of the Governor only to enable him to discharge his constitutional duty of delivering the Address and to enable other members to hear him.—Yogendra Nath Handa v. State, A.I.R. 1967 Rajasthan 123.

16. See, for instance L.S. Deb., 20-2-1968, c. 2167 and 28-2-1968, cc. 467-488.

17. On the occasion of the President's Address to the Provisional Parliament on 5 February 1953, a member left the Chamber in the middle of the Address. The next day, he sent a letter of apology to the Speaker, explaining the circumstances under which he had to leave in the middle of the Address.

on that occasion. They are also requested to take their seats five minutes before the President arrives in the Central Hall and remain in their seats till the President leaves the Central Hall after the conclusion of the Address<sup>18</sup>.

In West Bengal, the Governor failed to deliver his Address to the Legislature on 8 February 1965, due to noisy disturbances and made up the failure by publication of the Address to the members of the Legislature by laying the Address on the Table of the House. Dismissing the writ of mandamus, the Calcutta High Court observed that procedural failure should not be over-emphasised because by laying a copy of the Governor's Address on the Table, the object of the Address was substantially served and the members could become aware of the contents of the Address. The Court further observed :

“Unless there grows a constitutional convention that the Governor's Address shall be heard with attention, respect and ceremony due to the constitutional head of the State, there may be occasions when members of the Legislature may indulge in loud shoutings and unruly behaviour, when the Governor comes to address. If the shouting be loud enough or the behaviour sufficiently unruly, the Governor may not be able to begin or to finish the Address, due to human limitations, and may have to think of other modes of publication of the Address. To hold that Legislature must not be deemed to have met when a Governor is unable to begin or to finish the Address under article 176, and is compelled otherwise to publish the Address, is to put a value on such disturbances which they do not deserve”<sup>19</sup>.

The President arrives at the Parliament House (north-west portico) in the State coach or Limousine car attended by his Secretary and Military Secretary and escorted by his body-guards. When the President alights from the coach or car at the Parliament House, the body-guards give the ‘National Salute’, and the President is received at the gate by the Chairman, Rajya Sabha; the Prime Minister; the Speaker, Lok Sabha; the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs; and Secretaries-General of the two Houses.

The President is then conducted to the Central Hall in a procession<sup>20</sup> when the procession enters the gangway of the Central Hall, the Marshal of Lok Sabha announces from the dais the arrival of the President. Simultaneously, the two trumpeters positioned

The lobbies and galleries on the ground and first floors, respectively, of the Central Hall are reserved for the President's family members and his guests; for the heads of Foreign Missions and their spouses; for the family members and guests of the Chairman and the Speaker; for the Press correspondents; for the distinguished visitors; and for the visitors sponsored by the members of Rajya Sabha and Lok Sabha.

in the gallery facing the entrance to the Hall give a fanfare<sup>21</sup>. The members rise on the entry of the President and remain standing until he has taken his seat on the dais. On reaching the floor of the Central Hall in front of the dais, the procession bifurcates: the President, the Chairman of Rajya Sabha and the Speaker of Lok Sabha move towards their seats on the dais—the Chairman to the right and the Speaker<sup>22</sup> to the left of the President who occupies the middle seat; the Prime Minister and Minister of Parliamentary Affairs occupy the seats on the benches in the front row facing the dais and other officers in the procession towards their seats in the chairs placed in the pit of the Central Hall on either side of the dais. The Secretary-General of Lok Sabha, Military Secretary to the President and two A.D.Cs sit on the left-hand side of the President, and the Secretary-General of Rajya Sabha, Secretary to the President and two A.D.C.s on the right-hand side. Two A.D.Cs stand behind the President's chair on the dais. With the President reaching his seat on the dais, a band, positioned in the lobby of the Central Hall to the right of the President, plays the National Anthem. Thereafter, as the President sits down, the Presiding Officers, members and visitors in the galleries resume their seats. The President then reads the printed Address<sup>23</sup>, in Hindi or English followed by reading of the Address in the other version by the

On 10 February 1964, the Vice-President discharging the functions of President addressed both Houses of Parliament assembled together. Certain changes were, therefore, made in the order of procession and seating arrangements on the dais. In the procession Deputy Chairman, Rajya Sabha deputised for the Chairman, Rajya Sabha; Secretary and Speaker, Lok Sabha were on the left side and Secretary and Deputy Chairman, Rajya Sabha were on the right side of Vice-President. On the dais, Speaker and Deputy Chairman occupied seats on the right and left, respectively, of the Vice-President. Similarly, in the Central Hall, Secretary, Lok Sabha, sat on the right side and Secretary, Rajya Sabha, on the left side of the dais.

On 28 March 1977, the Vice-President acting as President addressed both Houses of Parliament assembled together. In the procession, Chairman pro tem, Rajya Sabha, deputised for the Chairman, Rajya Sabha; Secretary-General and Speaker, Lok Sabha, were on the left side and Secretary-General and Chairman pro tem, Rajya Sabha were on the right side of the Vice-President acting as President. On the dais, Speaker and Chairman pro tem occupied seats on the right and left, respectively, of the Vice-President acting as President. In the Central Hall, Secretary-General, Lok Sabha sat on the right side and Secretary-General, Rajya Sabha, on the left side of the dais.

21. The announcement of the President's arrival in Central Hall by trumpet and fanfare was introduced on the occasion of the President's Address on 10 February 1958. Prior to that, the A.D.C. leading the procession used to announce the entry of the President in Central Hall by saying: "Members of Parliament—The President". The practice of the Marshal of Lok Sabha announcing the arrival of the President was started in 1978 and for a couple of years trumpeters giving the fanfare was dispensed with.
22. On 5 January 1976, the Deputy Speaker of Lok Sabha deputised for the Speaker, who had resigned the office earlier. On the dais in the Central Hall, the Deputy Speaker, Lok Sabha and the Chairman, Rajya Sabha, occupied seats on the left and right, respectively, of the President.
23. (i) Copies of the Address to be read by the President are obtained from the President's Secretariat and placed on the Table of the President in advance. A copy each of the Address in Hindi and English is also made available for use of the Vice-President and the Speaker.

Chairman, Rajya Sabha. The Vice-President since 2004 has been reading the first and concluding paragraphs of the Hindi or English version and the rest of the Address is being treated as read. After the conclusion of the Address, the President rises in his seat, followed by the members and visitors in the galleries when the National Anthem is played again. The President, thereafter, leaves the Central Hall in a procession which is formed in like manner as at the time of his arrival. The members remain standing till the procession leaves the Central Hall. On arrival at the gate, the President takes leave of the Chairman, Rajya Sabha; the Prime Minister; the Speaker. Lok Sabha; Minister of Parliamentary Affairs; and Secretaries-General of both the Houses. The President's body-guards again give the 'National Salute'. The President attended by his Secretary and Military Secretary boards the State Coach/Car and leaves for the Rashtrapati Bhawan escorted by the body-guards.

No photograph of the ceremony in the Central Hall is permitted to be taken. However, since 20 December 1989, the ceremony is being televised live.

Laying of a Copy of the Address on the Table

Assembly of the two Houses of Parliament to hear the President's Address does not constitute a sitting of Lok Sabha or Rajya Sabha or a joint sitting of the two Houses since a sitting of Lok Sabha or Rajya Sabha or a joint sitting of both the Houses is duly constituted only when it is presided over by the Speaker or any other member competent to preside under the Constitution or the Rules<sup>24</sup>. In order that the Address delivered by the President forms part of, and is incorporated in the proceedings of the House, a separate sitting of the House is held half-an-hour after the conclusion of the President's Address when a copy each of the Hindi and the English version of

(ii) In 1968, the President read the Address first in Hindi. He sat down for a moment and then got up and read the English version. In 1970, the President delivered the Address in English and Hindi version thereof was read by the Secretary to the President, at the conclusion of each paragraph by the President.

A point of order was raised when Lok Sabha met in its own Chamber that reading of the Hindi text of the Address by the Secretary to the President was against the constitutional provisions. The Speaker observed that he was not aware of the constitutional impropriety and he could not direct the President to read the text of the Address in a particular language—L.S. Deb., 20-2-1970, cc. 43-45.

In 1971, 1972, 1973 and 1974, the President read the Address in English, and thereafter the Vice-President read out the Address in Hindi. In 1975 and 1976, the President delivered his Address first in Hindi and later on in English. In 1977, the Vice-President acting as President delivered his Address first in Hindi and later on in English. In 1978, 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1988, 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009 and 2013, the President read the Address in English and thereafter the Vice-President read the Address in Hindi. In 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 2009, 2010, 2011 and 2012, the President read the Address in Hindi and the Vice-President in English. The President, in the year 2005, 2006 and 2007, read his Address through a laptop screen placed on the podium. The President, in 2002 and from 2008 to 2012, delivered his Address while sitting. The President, in 2013, delivered his address while standing.

24. Art. 118; Rule 11 of Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha; and Rule 10, Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in the Council of States (Rajya Sabha).

the Address duly authenticated by the President is laid on the Table by the Secretary-General<sup>25</sup>. The authenticated copy is handed over to the Secretariat by the Military Secretary to the President on the day when the President delivers his Address. After certain formal business like introduction of Bills, presentation of Reports, laying of papers on Table by Ministers, etc., is completed, the House normally stands adjourned for the day<sup>26</sup>.

It is a convention that printed copies of the Address, received from the President's Secretariat, are distributed to members and others only after a copy thereof has been laid on the Table. A copy each of the Hindi and the English versions of the Address is distributed to members in the lobby of the House. Such of the members as do not get their copies from the lobby are requested to obtain them from the Publications Counter<sup>27</sup>.

Procedure for correction of error in the Address: In case certain corrections are made by the President in the copy of the Address authenticated by him and if these corrections have not been incorporated in other printed copies, a corrigendum is issued by the Secretariat before distribution of copies to members<sup>28</sup>.

25. The procedure of laying on the Table a copy of the President's Address was adopted for the first time in 1952 when the President addressed both Houses of Parliament on 16 May 1952 after the first General Elections. Prior to that, the President's Address to the Provisional Parliament or the Governor-General's Address to the Central Legislative Assembly or both Houses of Central Legislature was printed in the Debates without its having been laid on the Table of the House.

A point was raised in the House on 16 September 1936, when a member enquired as to whether the speeches delivered by the Governor-General to the Legislature were part of the proceedings and if not, why they were printed in the Assembly Debates. Speaker Abdur Rahim, explaining the position, said that the Governor-General's Address was not part of the Assembly proceedings as it had been held that when the Governor-General addressed, it was not a meeting of the Assembly or a joint meeting of the two Chambers. But at the same time, he said, it had been the uniform practice since the commencement of the Assembly to include the Address by the Governor-General in the proceedings so as to make available to members a full and authentic report of the Address. He further stated that he did not propose to alter the established practice unless the House clearly expressed a desire to that effect by an appropriate motion—see LA. Deb., 16-9-1936, pp. 1142-43.

26. However, on 18 March 1967, when the House sat in its own Chamber half-an-hour after the conclusion of the President's Address, certain members insisted that motions of adjournment and motions of no-confidence in the Council of Ministers, of which they had given notice, should be taken up on that very day.

As the Government had no objection to the discussion being held on the motion of no-confidence in the Council of Ministers on the same day, the Speaker allowed the motion to be taken up-LS. Deb., 18-3-1967, cc. 100-120.

On another occasion, on 23 January 1980, a Calling Attention on US arms aid to Pakistan in the context of recent developments in Afghanistan was taken up after laying of a copy of the President's Address—LS. Deb., 23-1-1980, cc. 34-36.

27. Members are informed about the arrangements for the distribution of copies of the President's Address through the Bulletin-II.
28. On 8 February 1960, certain corrections were made by the President in the printed copies of the Hindi and English versions of the Address authenticated by him and received in the Secretariat an hour before the commencement of the Address at 11.00 hours. Necessary corrigenda were issued by the Secretariat to both versions of the Address and distributed, along with copies of the Address, to members.

If any error is detected by a Ministry in the Address after it has been delivered by the President and a copy thereof laid on the Table, the procedure for correcting the error is for the Ministry concerned to bring it to the notice of the President. On his approving of the correction being made, the President may send a message to the House, either addressed direct to the Speaker or conveyed to him through a Minister, which, when announced and laid on the Table, is incorporated in the proceedings and official records of the House<sup>29</sup>.

Discussion on the Address

The discussion on the Address is held a few days after the delivery of the Address and in the intervening period other Government business is transacted<sup>30</sup>.

The relevant article of the Constitution, as originally enacted, provided that provision be made by rules regulating the procedure of either House for the allotment of time for discussion of the matters referred to in the President's Address and for the precedence of such discussion over other business of the House<sup>31</sup>.

Accordingly, discussion on the Address commenced, during the three sessions of the Provisional Parliament in 1950, on the day following the delivery of the Address by the President. It was, however, felt that a discussion on the 29. In 1959, the President delivered his Address on 9 February 1959. The discussion on the Motion of Thanks on the President's Address commenced on 13 February 1959. The Motion of Thanks was adopted by the House on 19 February and conveyed to the President on the same day. The Department of Parliamentary Affairs at this stage detected a mistake in the Address, viz., in paragraph 35 of the Address for the words "Forty-Nine Bills" the words "Fifty-Nine Bills" were to be substituted and requested that the correction might either be communicated to members through the Bulletin or the mistake might be corrected in the parliamentary debates. The Department of Parliamentary Affairs were asked to follow the procedure stated above for carrying out the correction in the Address. However, no further communication was received from them.

In 1961, the Ministry of Community Development and Co-operation requested that in para 24 of the President's Address delivered on 14 February 1961, the last word "to" be substituted for the word "by". They also were informed about the procedure to be followed for carrying out correction in the Address but no further communication was received from them.

In another case, after the President delivered his Address on 21 February 1994, an intimation was received from Director, President's Secretariat about omission of a sentence in the Hindi version of the President's Address. On scrutiny, it was found that while addressing members, the President read out the said sentence in the Hindi version and its English translation was also read out by Vice-President. It was also found that the English version of the authenticated copy and copies circulated to members contained the said sentence whereas the authenticated copy and copies circulated to members in Hindi, did not contain the said sentence. It was, therefore, decided that necessary correction may be made in the Hindi version of the authenticated copy and corrigendum need not be issued.

On 20 February 1997, an hour before the delivery of his Address to both the Houses of Parliament, the President deleted one sentence from the authenticated copies (Hindi and English versions) of the Address. Rest of the copies (Hindi and English versions) were corrected in hand by the staff of the President's Secretariat and by Table Office.

30. There was no provision either in the Government of India Act, 1919, or in the Government of India Act, 1935, for discussion on the Governor-General's Address to the Central Legislature. The discussion on his Address, therefore, never took place in the Central Assembly.

31. Art. 87(2), as originally enacted.

Address immediately after it had been delivered did not give sufficient time to members to study the Address and prepare themselves for the discussion and also to give notices of amendments. The words “and for the precedence of such discussion over other business of the House” were, therefore, omitted by the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951<sup>32</sup>.

The Speaker, in consultation with the Leader of the House, allots time for the discussion of the matters referred to in the President's Address<sup>33</sup>. For this purpose, about a week before the President's Address, the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs (or the Leader of the House in case the Prime Minister is not the Leader of the House) suggests the provisional programme of dates for discussion on the Address. After the programme has been approved by the Speaker, it is published in the Bulletin for the information of members. The actual allocation of time for discussion on the Address is, however, made by the House on the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee after the President has delivered the Address. Generally three days are allotted for the discussion.

The discussion takes place on a Motion of Thanks moved by a member and seconded by another member<sup>34</sup>.

According to an established practice, the mover and the seconder of the Motion are selected by the Prime Minister and invariably belong to the ruling party<sup>35</sup>. The notice of the Motion, given by a member and seconded by another, is received through the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs (and through the Leader of the House in case the Prime Minister is not the Leader of the House), and after it is admitted by the Speaker, the Motion is published in the Bulletin and the List of Business.

On the days allotted for discussion, the House is at liberty to discuss the matters referred to in the Address<sup>36</sup>. The scope of discussion on the Address is very wide and the entire administration is thrown open for discussion. Even matters which are not specifically mentioned in the Address are brought into discussion through amendments to the Motion of Thanks. The only limitations are that members cannot refer to matters which are not the direct responsibility of the Government of India<sup>37</sup>, and that the name of the President cannot be brought in during the debate since the Government and not the President is responsible for the contents of the Address<sup>38</sup>.

33. Art. 87(2) and Rule 16. Unlike article 87, there is no constitutional provision making it obligatory for allotment of time for discussion of the matters referred to in the President's Address under article 86(1), though the Rules empower the Speaker to do so—see Rule 22.

35. However, there were occasions when the Motion of Thanks to the President's Address was seconded by one of the members of the ruling coalition or party supporting the Government—see L.S. Deb., 16-3-2000, c. 305; 7-3-2001, c. 410; 15-3-2002, c. 398 and 24-2-2003, c. 390.

Amendments to the Motion of Thanks

Notices of amendments to the Motion of Thanks, received after the President has delivered his Address but before a copy thereof is laid on the Table, are treated as valid. However, lists of amendments are circulated to members after the notice of the Motion of Thanks is received in the Secretariat.

Notices of amendments to the Motion of Thanks are tabled by members with reference to matters referred to in the Address as well as to matters which, in the opinion of the movers thereof, the Address had failed to mention<sup>39</sup>. The amendments are moved by members in such form as is considered appropriate by the Speaker<sup>40</sup>. The amendments tabled by members are examined in the Secretariat and such of them as are prima facie in order are circulated to members. The amendments which are inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution or refer discourteously to a friendly foreign government or Head of State or cast reflection on the conduct of the President and Vice-President or relate to matters under control of the Speaker, are disallowed<sup>41</sup>. If separate time has been allotted during the same session for discussion of particular subjects referred to in the Address, amendments pertaining to those subjects are also disallowed<sup>42</sup>. Substitute motion to the Motion of Thanks, which being itself a substantive motion, is inadmissible.

Discussion on the Motion is initiated by the proposer of the Motion who is followed by the seconder. After the seconder has concluded his speech, an announcement is made by the Speaker to the effect that the members whose amendments to the Motion of Thanks have been circulated, may, if they desire to move their amendments, send slips at the Table within 15 minutes indicating the serial numbers of the amendments they would like to move. Only those amendments, slips in respect of which are received at the Table within the stipulated time, are treated as moved.

A list showing the serial numbers of the amendments indicated by the members is put on the Notice Board thereafter to facilitate the members to immediately bring to the notice of the officers at the Table any discrepancy noticed in the list. Even at this stage the Speaker has the discretion to rule any amendment out of order even though it had been circulated to the members. Those members who do not move the amendments at this stage are not permitted to do so later when the discussion has started<sup>43</sup>. In rare cases, however, where the Speaker is satisfied with the explanation of the member for not indicating his intention to move his amendment at the appropriate stage, he may permit the member to move the amendment at a later stage<sup>44</sup>.

Normally, an amendment given notice of by several members is printed in the list of amendments after clubbing the names of all such members according to the date and time of receipt of notices. However, moving of identical amendments is not in order.

Even if an identical amendment is printed in separate lists, the amendment is treated as moved by the member only whose name appears first in the printed list of amendments and if the member also indicates his intention to move the amendment, notwithstanding that other members also have indicated their intention to move the identical amendments.<sup>45</sup>

The Speaker may, if he thinks fit, prescribe a time limit for speeches after taking the sense of the House<sup>46</sup>. For this purpose, on the opening day of the discussion, the Speaker makes an announcement fixing the time limit which does not ordinarily exceed 30 minutes for the Leaders of Groups and 15 minutes for other members<sup>47</sup>. The Prime Minister, when replying to the debate on behalf of the Government is, however, allowed more time.

Discussion on the Address is generally not interrupted during the course of the sitting of the House by any other business. Only business of a formal character can be transacted on these days before the House commences or continues the discussion on the Address<sup>48</sup>. Interruption of discussion on the Address may, however, take place in favour of discussion on an adjournment motion in case leave to move such a motion has been granted by the House<sup>49</sup>, or discussion on the Address may be postponed on a motion being made to that effect in favour of a Government Bill or other Government business<sup>50</sup>.

At the end, generally the Prime Minister replies to the debate on President's Address<sup>51</sup> but it is in order for any other Minister to do so<sup>52</sup>. On some occasions, however, Ministers have participated in, or replied to, the debate on points concerning their respective Ministries and the Prime Minister has reviewed the position on matters of national and international importance<sup>53</sup>.

After the Prime Minister has replied to the debate, the amendments that had been moved are disposed of and the Motion of Thanks put to the Vote of the House. If during the course of his reply to the debate the Prime Minister announces the decision of the Council of Ministers to resign, the Motion of Thanks is declared infructuous and not proceeded with<sup>54</sup>.

After the Motion is carried, it is conveyed to the President direct by the Speaker through a letter<sup>55</sup>. The President also acknowledges the receipt of the Motion through a message to the Speaker<sup>56</sup>. On receipt of the message, the Speaker reads it out to the House.

Messages and Communications to the House

The Constitution provides that the President may send messages to either House of Parliament, whether with respect to a Bill then pending in Parliament or otherwise, and a House to which any message is so sent shall with all convenient despatch consider any matter required by the message to be taken into consideration<sup>57</sup>.

The Rules provide that when such a message is received from the President, the Speaker shall read out the message to the House and give necessary directions in regard to the procedure that shall be followed for the consideration of matters referred to in the message. In giving these directions, the Speaker is empowered to suspend or vary the Rules to such extent as may be necessary<sup>58</sup>.

The President may also send a message notifying his intention to summon both the Houses to meet in a joint sitting for the purpose of deliberating and voting on a Bill, other than a Money Bill or a Bill to amend the Constitution which, having been

The Speaker, thereupon, observed that in view of the decision of the Council of Ministers to resign, the Motion of Thanks on the President's Address had become infructuous—see L.S. Deb., 6-3-1991, cc. 813-14.

The President has also been empowered to return a Bill, as soon as possible, on presentation to him after its having been passed by the Houses of Parliament for assent, if it is not a Money Bill, or a Bill to amend the Constitution<sup>61</sup> to the Houses with a message requesting them to reconsider the Bill or any specified provisions thereof and, in particular, to consider the desirability of introducing any such amendment as he may recommend in his message<sup>62</sup>. When a Bill is so returned, the Houses have to reconsider the Bill accordingly, and if the Bill is passed again by the Houses with or without amendment and presented to the President for assent, the President cannot withhold assent therefrom.

59. Art. 108(1) (a). On 22 March 2002, the President sent a message notifying his intention to summon both the Houses to meet in a Joint Sitting for the purpose of deliberating and voting on the Prevention of Terrorism Bill, 2002 which after being passed by Lok Sabha on 18 March 2002 was rejected by Rajya Sabha on 21 March 2002, the motion for consideration of the Bill having been negatived by Rajya Sabha. The Bill was finally passed in the Joint Sitting held on 26 March 2002 and assented to by the President on 28 March 2002.

60. Art. 108(1)(b). On 18 April 1961, the President sent a message under this article notifying his intention to summon both the Houses to meet in a Joint Sitting for the purpose of deliberating and voting on the Dowry Prohibition Bill, 1959, regarding which the Houses had finally disagreed as to the amendments to be made in the Bill. Similarly, the President sent a message dated 8 May 1978 received on 10 May 1978 notifying his intention to summon both Houses to meet in a Joint Sitting for the purpose of deliberating and voting on the Banking Service Commission (Repeal) Bill, 1977 on which the Houses had finally disagreed. For details, see Chapter IV-Relations between the Houses.

61. Arts. 111 and 368.

62. So far, the President has returned two Bills with messages for reconsideration of the Bills by Parliament. The Indian Post Office (Amendment) Bill, 1986 was presented to the President on 19 December 1986 for his assent by the Rajya Sabha Secretariat. The President returned the Bill along with a message to reconsider the Bill, specifically clause 16 thereof, to the Rajya Sabha on 7 January 1990. The Bill was not reconsidered by the Rajya Sabha in terms of Presidential message for more than 12 years. On 13 March 2002, Rajya Sabha adopted a motion recommending to Lok Sabha that Lok Sabha do agree to leave being granted by Rajya Sabha to withdraw the Bill. On 16 March 2002 Lok Sabha concurred in the motion. The Bill was ultimately withdrawn in Rajya Sabha on 21 March 2002.

The Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Amendment Bill, 2006, as passed by the Houses, was presented to the President on 24 May 2006 for his assent by Rajya Sabha Secretariat. The President returned the Bill on 30 May 2006 for reconsideration of Houses with a message containing his observations. The Bill was reconsidered and passed again by Rajya Sabha on 27 July 2006. The Bill, as passed again by Rajya Sabha, was laid on the Table of Lok Sabha on 28 July 2006 and passed by Lok Sabha on 31 July 2006. The Bill was assented to by the President on 18 August 2006.

of sitting of the House, his message is conveyed to the Speaker through a Minister<sup>63</sup>.

The messages received from the President are read out by the Speaker to the House<sup>64</sup>. Communications from the House to the President are made—

- (i) by formal address, after motion made and carried in the House; and
- (ii) through the Speaker<sup>65</sup>.

Apart from the Motion of Thanks on the President's Address, no other communication has so far been sent from the House to the President.

63. Rule 246. On two different occasions, messages signed by the President and addressed to the Speaker notifying his intention to summon both the Houses of Parliament to meet in a Joint Sitting for the purpose of deliberating and voting on the (i) Dowry Prohibition Bill, 1959, and (ii) Banking Service Commission (Repeal) Bill, 1977 were forwarded to the Speaker by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs and were read out in the House by the Speaker. L.S. Deb., 19-4-1961, c. 12428; and 10-5-1978, c. 296. However, messages sent by the President every year under his signature acknowledging the Motion of Thanks which are also addressed to the Speaker are received by him direct and reported to the House.

64. L.S. Deb., 19-4-1961, c. 12428.

In the Central Legislative Assembly, till 1935, whenever a message from the Governor-General was reported to the Assembly, it was received by the members standing (LA. Deb., 5-2-1934, p.480; 8-2-1934, p. 655; and 5-2-1935, p. 408). The practice was revived in Lok Sabha in the year 1960 when the message from the President acknowledging receipt of "Motion of Thanks" adopted by the House on his Address was received by the members standing. This practice was, however, discontinued from the year 1962 as certain members had raised objection to it in the previous year.

65. Rule 247. This Rule is analogous to Standing Order 74 of the Central Legislative Assembly.

CHAPTER XI

Powers, Privileges and Immunities of Houses, their Committees and Members

In parliamentary language the term privilege applies to certain rights and immunities enjoyed by each House of Parliament and Committees of each House collectively, and by members of each House individually. The object of parliamentary privileges is to safeguard the freedom, the authority and the dignity of Parliament. Privileges are necessary for the proper exercise of the functions entrusted to Parliament by the Constitution. They are enjoyed by individual members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its members; and by each House collectively for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity<sup>1</sup>.

In modern times, parliamentary privilege has to be viewed from a different angle than in the earlier days of the struggle of Parliament against the executive authority. Privilege at that time was regarded as a protection of the members of Parliament against an executive authority not responsible to Parliament. The entire background in which privileges of Parliament are now viewed has changed because the Executive is now responsible to Parliament. The foundation upon which they rest is the maintenance of the dignity and independence of the House and of its members<sup>2</sup>.

In interpreting these privileges, therefore, regard must be had to the general principle that the privileges of Parliament are granted to members in order that “they may be able to perform their duties in Parliament without let or hindrance”<sup>3</sup>. They apply to individual members “only insofar as they are necessary in order that the House may freely perform its functions. They do not discharge the member from the obligations to society which apply to him as much and perhaps more closely in that capacity, as they apply to other subjects”<sup>4</sup>. Privileges of Parliament do not place a member of Parliament on a footing different from that of an ordinary citizen in the matter of the application of laws unless there are good and sufficient reasons in the interest of Parliament itself to do so<sup>5</sup>.

The fundamental principle is that all citizens, including members of Parliament, have to be treated equally in the eye of the law. Unless so specified in the Constitution or in any law, a member of Parliament cannot claim any privileges higher than those enjoyed by any ordinary citizen in the matter of the application of law<sup>6</sup>.

  5. Report of Committee of Speakers, 1956, p. 9, para 18.
  6. Report of Committee of Privileges in Deshpande Case, 1 L.S., para 17.

When any individual or authority disregards or attacks any of the privileges, rights and immunities, either of the members individually or of the House in its collective capacity or of its committees, the offence is termed a breach of privilege, and is punishable by the House. Besides, actions in the nature of offences against the authority or dignity of the House, such as disobedience to its legitimate orders or libels upon itself, its members or officers are also punishable, although these actions are not breaches of any specific privilege. Such actions, though often called 'breaches of privilege', are more properly distinguished as 'contempts'<sup>7</sup>.

Each House is the guardian of its own privileges: it is not only the sole judge of any matter that may arise which in any way infringes upon those privileges but can, if it deems it advisable, punish, either by imprisonment or reprimand, any person whom it considers to be guilty of contempt. The penal-jurisdiction of the House is not confined to its own members nor to offences committed in its immediate presence, but extends to all contempts of the House, whether committed by members or by persons who are not members, irrespective of whether the offence is committed within the House or beyond its walls.

The power of the House to punish any person who commits a contempt of the House or a breach of any of its privileges is the most important privilege. It is this power that gives reality to the privileges of Parliament and emphasises its sovereign character so far as the protection of its rights and the maintenance of its dignity are concerned<sup>8</sup>.

Question of Codification of Privileges

The powers, privileges and immunities of either House of Parliament and of its members and committees have been laid down in article 105 of the Constitution. In this article, the privilege of freedom of speech in Parliament and the immunity to members from "any proceedings in any court in respect of any thing said or any vote given" by them in Parliament or any committee thereof are specifically provided for. The article also provides that no person shall be liable to any proceedings in any court "in respect of the publication by or under the authority of either House of Parliament of any report, paper, votes or proceedings". In other respects, however, clause (3) of this article as originally enacted, provided that "the powers, privileges and immunities of each House of Parliament, and of the members and the committees of each House, shall be such as may from time to time be defined by Parliament by law, and until so defined, shall be those of the House of Commons of the Parliament of the United Kingdom, and of its members and committees, at the commencement of this Constitution", namely 26 January 1950<sup>9</sup>.

7. For details, see this Chapter under sub-head 'Breach of Privilege and Contempt of the House', infra.

9. For observations of Alladi Krishnaswami Ayyar and Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, see C.A. Deb., 19-5-1949, pp. 148-49; 3-6-1949, pp. 582-83. See also C.A. Deb., 16-10-1949, pp. 374-75.

Article 105(3) was amended by the Constitution (Forty-fourth Amendment) Act, 1978<sup>10</sup>. Section 15 of the Constitution (Forty-fourth Amendment) Act, 1978 which came into force with effect from 20 June 1979 provides that in other respects, the powers, privileges and immunities of each House of Parliament, and of the members and the Committees of each House, shall be such as may from time to time be defined by Parliament by law, and until so defined, shall be those of that House and of its members and committees immediately before the coming into force of Section 15 of the Constitution (Forty-fourth Amendment) Act, 1978. Privileges enjoyed by Parliament as on 20 June 1979, have thus been specified as the period of reference and specific mention of the House of Commons has been omitted. The purpose of this amendment, as stated by the then Law Minister while replying to the discussion on the Constitution (Amendment) Bill, was that “a proud country like India would like to avoid making any reference to a foreign institution in its own solemn constitutional document”. The amendments made in the articles 105(3) and 194(3) were, however, of verbal nature and the position remains basically the same as on 26 January 1950.

No comprehensive law<sup>11</sup> has so far been passed by Parliament to define the powers, privileges and immunities of each House, and of the members and the committees thereof. In the absence of any such law, the powers, privileges and immunities of the House, and of the members and the committees thereof, continue to remain in actual practice, the same as those of the House of Commons, U.K., and of its members and committees, at the time of the commencement of the Constitution.

10. Similarly, article 194(3) relating to the powers, privileges and immunities of the Houses of State Legislatures has been amended [by section 26 of the Constitution (Forty-fourth Amendment) Act, 1978], so that the powers, privileges and immunities of a House of the Legislature of a State, and of the members and the committees of a House of such Legislature, shall be such as may from time to time be defined by the Legislature by law, and, until so defined, shall be those of that House and of its members and committees immediately before the coming into force of section 26 of the Constitution (Forty-fourth Amendment) Act, 1978.
11. In 1956, Parliament enacted the Parliamentary Proceedings (Protection of Publication) Act, 1956, sponsored by a private member, section 3 of which provided:
  - (1) Save as otherwise provided in sub-section (2), no person shall be liable to any proceedings, civil or criminal, in any court in respect of the publication in a newspaper of a substantially true report of any proceedings of either House of Parliament, unless the publication is proved to have been made with malice.
  - (2) Nothing in sub-section (1) shall be construed as protecting the publication of any matter, the publication of which is not for the public good.

The Act also applied to parliamentary proceedings broadcast by wireless telegraphy. The said Act was repealed in February 1976. However, the position as under the Act of 1956 was restored by the Parliamentary Proceedings (Protection of Publication) Act, 1977.

Under section 135A of the Code of Civil Procedure, members of Parliament and State Legislatures are exempt from arrest and detention under civil process during the continuance of a session of the House or a committee meeting and during forty days before and after such session or committee meeting.

Article 361A of the Constitution inserted by section 42 of the Constitution (Forty-fourth Amendment) Act, 1978, provides that:

- (1) No person shall be liable to any proceedings, civil or criminal, in any court in respect of the publication in a newspaper of a substantially true report of any proceedings of either House of Parliament or the Legislative Assembly, or, as the case may be, either House of the Legislature of a State, unless the publication is proved to have been made with malice:

The question of undertaking legislation on the subject has engaged the attention of the Presiding Officers since 1921. Speaker Frederick Whyte stated at the first Speakers' Conference held that year:

The whole question of 'privileges' in respect of the Legislatures in India was one of great importance..., the point being whether legal powers should be asked for to enable the Legislatures to punish contempts.

He further observed that since no privileges resembling those of the House of Commons had been statutorily conferred on Legislatures in India, they possessed no powers to punish contempts.

The matter was considered from time to time at the Conference of Speakers and ultimately in 1933, when the discussions on the Government of India Bill were taking place in the Parliament of the U.K., the Secretary of the Central Legislative Assembly was authorized by the Speakers' Conference to address a memorandum to the Clerk to the Joint Select Committee, House of Lords, London. Paragraph 4 of the memorandum, which was approved and signed by Speaker Shanmukham Chetty, stated as follows:

The unanimous opinion of the Conference of Speakers was that the future Legislatures, both Central and Provincial, in India must be given the privileges, immunities and powers enjoyed by the House of Commons... The Conference felt that in order to achieve this object it was essential that a section on the lines of section 18 of the British North America Act, 1867, as subsequently amended by the Parliament of Canada Act, 1875, should be incorporated in the Constitution of India..., for the purpose of the exercise and safeguarding these privileges and immunities, the Legislatures, both Central and Provincial, should be made a Court of Record to enquire into and punish contraventions of the Act.

The British Parliament, however, did not accept the proposal.

The question was again taken up at the Speakers' Conference in 1938.

Speaker Abdur Rahim addressed memorandum on the subject to the Government of India to be forwarded to the authorities concerned. Paragraph 5 of this memorandum stated as follows:

The Conferences were unanimously and emphatically of opinion that the Government of India should be requested to take immediate steps to get sections 28 and 71 of the Government of India Act, 1935, amended so as to secure for the Central and Provincial Legislatures and the officers and members thereof all the powers and privileges which are held and enjoyed by the Speaker and members of the British House of Commons.

Provided that nothing in this clause shall apply to the publication of any report of proceedings of a secret sitting of either House of Parliament or the Legislative Assembly, or as the case may be, either House of the Legislature of a State.

- (2) Clause (1) shall apply in relation to reports or matters broadcast by means of wireless telegraphy as part of any programme of service provided by means of a broadcasting station as it applies in relation to reports or matters published in a newspaper.

Explanation: In this article, "Newspaper" includes a news agency report containing material for publication in a newspaper.

At the Presiding Officers Conference held in 1939, it was agreed that there should be a definition of privilege. However, no legislation on the subject was ultimately passed<sup>12</sup>.

Subsequently, at the instance of Speaker Mavalankar, as far as the Centre was concerned, section 28 of the Government of India Act was amended by an Adaptation Order, dated 31 March 1948. As adapted, S. 28(2) reads as follows:

In other respects, the privileges of members of the Dominion Legislature shall be such as may from time to time be defined by Act of the Dominion Legislature and, until so defined, shall be such as were immediately before the establishment of the Dominion enjoyed by the members of the House of Commons of the Parliament of the United Kingdom.

In September 1949, when the question of enacting legislation on the subject was considered by the Conference, the Chairman (Speaker Mavalankar) expressed this view:

It is better not to define specific privileges just at the moment but to rely upon the precedents of the British House of Commons. The disadvantage of codification at the present moment is that whenever a new situation arises, it will not be possible for us to adjust ourselves to it and give members additional privileges. Today, we are assured that our privileges are the same as those of the members of the House of Commons...

In the present set-up any attempt at legislation will very probably curtail our privileges. Let us, therefore, content ourselves with our being on a par with the House of Commons. Let that convention be firmly established and then we may, later on, think of putting it on a firm footing<sup>13</sup>.

A Committee consisting of four Speakers was appointed to examine the recommendations received from the Provinces on the question of legislation on the subject.

In their Report, the Committee of Speakers, inter alia, made the following observations:

The Committee is doubtful as to whether under article 194(3) a Legislature can enact a law defining the powers, privileges and immunities of its members in certain respects only and also providing therein that in other respects the powers, privileges and immunities will be those of the House of Commons. The Committee is of the opinion that if it is competent to a Legislature under this article to enact such a law, then only the Legislature should undertake a legislation defining the powers, privileges and immunities of members. Otherwise, it would not be advisable to undertake any legislation at present<sup>14</sup>.

The issue of the codification of privileges and the report of the Committee of Speakers were discussed in detail at the Conference of Presiding Officers held in August 1950. In his opening address to the Conference, the Chairman (Speaker Mavalankar) observed:

There will be two great difficulties and handicaps if we were to think of any legislation in respect of the privileges. These are:

- (i) Any legislation at the present stage would mean legislation only in regard to matters acceptable to the Executive Government of the day. It is obvious that, as they command the majority, the House will accept only what they think proper to concede. It is important to bear in mind that the privileges of members are not to be conceived with reference to this or that party, but as privileges of every member of the House, whether he belongs to Government or the Opposition party. My fears are, therefore, that an attempt at legislation would mean a substantial curtailment of the privileges as they exist today.
- (ii) My second reason is that any legislation will crystallize the privileges and there will be no scope for the presiding authorities to widen or change the same by interpretation. Today they have an opportunity of adapting the principles on which the privileges exist in the United Kingdom to conditions in India.

I may here invite your attention to the Secretary's note<sup>15</sup> on the subject which is being circulated to you<sup>16</sup>.

The note referred to above, inter alia, emphasized:

Our Constitution has one important peculiarity in that it contains a declaration of fundamental rights and the Courts have been empowered to say that a particular law or a part of law is void or invalid because it is in conflict with a particular fundamental right and therefore beyond the powers of Parliament.

At the present time the privileges of Parliament are part and parcel of the Constitution and, therefore, of what is known as the 'fundamental law'. The Courts will, therefore, be compelled to reconcile the existing law of privilege, which carries with it the power of the Speaker to issue a warrant without stating the grounds on the face of it, with the fundamental rights. It will be extremely difficult for the Supreme Court to say that what is so explicitly provided in a part of the Constitution in regard to the existing privileges of Parliament is in any way restricted by the fundamental rights<sup>17</sup>.

Once, however, the privileges are codified by an Act of Parliament in India, the position changes entirely... The statute will be examined in the same way as any other statute passed by Parliament and the courts may well come to the conclusion that in view of the provisions in the fundamental rights, it is not open to any Legislature in India to prescribe that the Speaker may issue a valid warrant without disclosing the grounds of commitment on

17. In 1958, the Supreme Court in the Searchlight Case upheld this view and declared:

"It is true that a law made by Parliament in pursuance of the earlier part of art. 105(3) or by the State Legislature in pursuance of the earlier part of art. 194(3) will not be a law made in exercise of constituent power ... but will be one made in exercise of its ordinary legislative powers under art. 246 read with the entries.... (entry 75 of List I and entry 39 of List II of the Seventh Schedule), and that consequently if such a law takes away or abridges any of the fundamental rights, it will contravene the pre-emptory provisions of art. 13(2) and will be void to the extent of such contravention and it may well be that, that is precisely the reason why our Parliament and the State Legislatures have not made any law defining the powers, privileges and immunities just the face of the warrant... all matters would (then) come before the courts and Parliament would lose its exclusive right to determine matters relating to its privilege.

During the discussion that took place in the Conference, opinions were divided. Some expressed their views in favour of undertaking legislation while others opposed the idea. No decision was ultimately taken by the Conference on the subject<sup>18</sup>.

The plea for codification of privileges was also put forward in 1954 by the Press Commission<sup>19</sup>, but it was not upheld by Speaker Mavalankar who, in his address to the Conference of Presiding Officers at Rajkot on 3 January 1955, observed:

The Press Commission considered this matter purely from the point of view of the Press. Perhaps they may have felt the difficulties of the Press to be real; but from the point of view of the Legislature, the question has to be looked at from a different angle.

Any codification is more likely to harm the prestige and sovereignty of the Legislature without any benefit being conferred on the Press. It may be argued that the Press is left in the dark as to what the privileges are. The simple reply to this is that those privileges which are extended by the Constitution to the Legislature, its members, etc. are equated with the privileges of the House of Commons in England. It has to be noted here that the House of Commons does not allow the creation of any new privileges; and only such privileges are recognized as have existed by long time custom. No codification, therefore, appears to be necessary<sup>20</sup>.

The Conference debated the issue and unanimously decided that “in the present circumstances, codification is neither necessary nor desirable”<sup>21</sup>.

Speaking in the Lok Sabha on private member’s Bill—the Parliamentary Privilege Bill—which sought to include members’ letters to Ministers within the meaning of the term “Proceedings in Parliament”, the Minister of Law observed<sup>22</sup>.

as the Australian Parliament had not made any under section 49 of their Constitution corresponding to art. 194(3)... It does not, however, follow that if the powers, privileges or immunities conferred by the latter part of those articles are repugnant to the fundamental rights, they must also be void to the extent of such repugnancy. It must not be overlooked that the provisions of art. 105(3) and art. 194(3) are constitutional laws and not ordinary laws made by Parliament or the State Legislatures and that, therefore, they are as supreme as the provisions of Part III.

Art. 19(1) & (4) and art. 194(3) have to be reconciled and the only way of reconciling the same is to read art. 19(1)(a) as subject to the latter part of art. 194(3)... in our judgment the principle of harmonious construction must be adopted and so constructed that the provisions of art. 19(1) & (4), which are general, must yield to art. 194(1) and the latter part of its clause (3) which are special,” *M.S.M. The dignity and independence of the two Houses are in great measure preserved by keeping their privilege indefinite—H.C. Deb., Vol. 563, cc. 1300-01.

22. L.S. Deb., 20-2-1959, cc. 2275-76.

After all, it is now acknowledged more or less universally that matters of privilege should be left uncoded rather than coded. It is all the more so in this country. Though in England, Parliament may, if it so chooses, pass any law concerning privilege without any limitation whatsoever either by way of extending it or restricting it, in this country the moment we think of passing any law we shall have to contend with limitations which the Constitution imposes upon us. That matter has been made quite clear in the recent judgment of the Supreme Court in the Patna Searchlight Case wherein it appears to have been laid down that if Parliament sought to pass a law seeking to confer some privilege which it now enjoys, it might have been bad in law as well as against the Constitution.

Therefore, I think it will be a good rule of caution and prudence if we do not indulge in large scale legislation or indiscriminate legislation concerning the privileges of this House or of the other House.

It was contended in a writ petition filed in the Madras High Court that article 194(3) was transitional or transitory in character, that non-enactment of any law on the subject was a deliberate inaction with the consequence that what was guaranteed under the second limb of the said article was no longer available, and must be held to have lapsed by default. In this connection, the Court observed:

It is very difficult to see how any theory of automatic lapse, or lapse due to inaction, can apply to article 194(3) in its relation to the State Legislature... it is impossible to arrive at any conclusion that the inaction is deliberate; far more so, to sustain any theory that such inaction has the effect of a lapse or extinction. Far contra, where the Constitution intends setting a term to any situation of rights it explicitly says so, and articles 334, 337 and 343 are very clear instances<sup>23</sup>.

A plea for the codification of powers, privileges and immunities of the Legislatures and members and committees thereof was made at the Conference of Presiding Officers held at Bombay in 1965. The Conference debated the issue and decided against codification.

The Second Press Commission, in its report submitted to the Government on 3 April 1982, recommended that from the point of view of freedom of the Press it is essential that the privileges of Parliament and State Legislatures should be codified as early as possible. It was also recommended that the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business of the Houses of Parliament and State Legislatures dealing with the procedure for taking action against alleged breaches of privilege, etc., should be reviewed with a view to incorporating therein, provisions for affording reasonable opportunity to contemnors to defend themselves in the proceedings for breach of privilege.

The question of codification of powers, privileges and immunities of the House and of the members and the Committees thereof was also considered during the First Conference of the Chairmen of Committees of Privileges of Parliament and State Legislatures in India, held in New Delhi on 14 and 15 March 1992. It was unanimously decided by the Conference that 'there should be no codification of privileges'.

The matter was also taken up by the Committee of Privileges of the Tenth Lok Sabha for examination with the approval of the Speaker, Lok Sabha. The Committee in their Fourth Report on the issue of 'Codification of Parliamentary Privileges' which was laid on the Table of the House on 19 December 1994 felt that the ground reality was entirely opposite to the picture projected insofar as allegations of the misuse of parliamentary privileges are concerned. The Committee also held the view that the Legislature's powers to punish for contempt was more or less akin and analogous to the power given to the courts to punish for their contempt. The Committee, therefore, felt that what constitutes a breach of privilege or contempt of the House can be best decided according to the facts and circumstances of each case rather than by specifying them in so many words. In view of this, the Committee recommended against codifying parliamentary privileges.

Even after presentation of the Fourth Report (Tenth Lok Sabha), various misconceptions did continue to exist and lamentably even among the educated classes. The Committee of Privileges (Fourteenth Lok Sabha) felt that there was a strong case for revisiting the very concept of parliamentary privileges. The Committee of Privileges accordingly, with the approval of the Speaker, Fourteenth Lok Sabha, took up for consideration the matter regarding "Parliamentary Privileges – Codification and related matters." The Eleventh Report of the Committee of Privileges was laid on the Table of the House on 30 April 2008. The Committee at the very threshold, addressed the basic reasons/primary factors from which emanated the oft felt need in certain quarters and demand from others for codification of parliamentary privileges. The Committee felt it appropriate to focus on these core areas/factors. The Committee, therefore proceeded to clarify the extent and scope of privileges of the members and dispel certain misconceptions that prevail. Through a comprehensive questionnaire the Committee elicited opinion from the eminent persons/institutions belonging to Legislature, Legal Profession, Media and Academia. The Committee also obtained opinion from Foreign Parliaments.

The Committee in their Report, after having considered the entire gamut of aspects relating to parliamentary privileges, the ground realities, responses to questionnaire on parliamentary privileges, established a position in the matter, and after an in-depth study of the case law summed up their observations/conclusions as under:

- (i) Parliamentary privileges are made available to members of Parliament solely to enable them to perform their parliamentary duties unfettered. Members while not performing their parliamentary duties do not enjoy any privileges.
- (ii) Contrary to certain misconceptions in some quarters, privileges are not any special rights which are conferred upon members to the exclusion of common citizens. Privileges do not compromise the fundamental precept that all citizens are equal in the eyes of law.
- (iii) Privileges are enabling rights of members to put across the views and voice the concerns of their constituents fearlessly. These could, therefore, be termed as indirect rights of members' constituents. It is this essence of privileges which needs to be appreciated.

- (iv) The penal powers of the House for breach of privilege or contempt of the House have been very sparingly used. During the past five and a half decades in Lok Sabha there has been only one case of admonition, two cases of reprimand and one case of expulsion for commission of breach of privilege and contempt of the House. In Rajya Sabha there have been only two cases of reprimand for commission of breach of privilege and contempt of the House.
- (v) The above position bears testimony to the fact that there has not been any misuse of parliamentary privileges as erroneously believed in some quarters.
- (vi) The majority view of those who responded to the Committee's questionnaire do not favour codification of parliamentary privileges.

The Committee finally opined that there does not arise any occasion for codification of parliamentary privileges and as a matter of fact an awareness needs to be created with regard to the true import of the term parliamentary privileges and the ground realities that exist. The Committee accordingly recommended against codification of parliamentary privileges.

The main arguments that have been advanced in favour of codification are—

- (i) Parliamentary privileges are intended to be enjoyed on behalf of the people, in their interests and not against the people opposed to their interests;
- (ii) unless the parliamentary privileges, immunities and powers are clearly defined and precisely delimited through codification, they remain vague and inscrutable for the citizens and for the Press—nobody really knowing what precisely the privileges of Parliament, its members and its committees are, thereby causing many an unintended violations;
- (iii) the concept of privileges for any class of people is anachronistic in a democratic society and, therefore, if any, these privileges should be the barest minimum—only those necessary for functional purposes—and invariably defined in clear and precise terms;
- (iv) sovereignty of Parliament has increasingly become a myth and a fallacy for, sovereignty, if any, vests only in the people of India who exercise it at the time of general elections to the Lok Sabha and to the State Assemblies;
- (v) in a system wedded to freedom and democracy—rule of law, rights of the individual, independent Judiciary and constitutional government—it is only fair that the fundamental rights of the citizens enshrined in the Constitution should have primacy over any privileges or special rights of any class of people, including the elected legislators, and that all such claims should be subject to judicial scrutiny, for situations may arise where the rights of the people may have to be protected even against the Parliament or against captive or capricious parliamentary majorities of the moment;
- (vi) the Constitution specifically envisaged privileges of the Houses of Parliament and State Legislatures and their members and committees being defined by law by the respective Legislatures and as such the Constitution-makers definitely intended these privileges being subject to the fundamental rights, provisions of the Constitution and the jurisdiction of the courts;

- (vii) it is best if matters which are amenable to judicial scrutiny are dealt with by courts and, in any case, there is hardly any reason why courts which have full power to enquire into the existence of privileges, powers and immunities claimed by the Houses of Parliament should not also look to their proper exercise, and to set aside any order made by the Houses or to give interim relief to a complainant pending final disposal of the complaint; and
- (viii) in any case, there is no question of any fresh privileges being added inasmuch as (a) under the Constitution, even at present, parliamentary privileges in India continue in actual practice to be governed by the precedents of the House of Commons as they existed on the day our Constitution came into force; and (b) in the House of Commons itself, creation of new privileges is not allowed<sup>24</sup>.

It would thus be seen that while the predominant view in the parliamentary forums has been against codification, the academic circles and the Press have been, by and large, in favour of codification. The main arguments against codification are as follows:

- (i) The privileges of Parliament are part and parcel of the Constitution and, therefore, of what is known as the 'fundamental law'. As pointed out by the Supreme Court in the Searchlight Case, the provisions of article 105(3) and article 194(3) are constitutional laws and not ordinary laws made by Parliament or the State Legislatures and they are, therefore, as supreme as the provisions of Part III.
- (ii) As further pointed out by the Supreme Court in M.S.M. Sharma v. Sri Krishna Sinha Case (A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 395), article 19(1)(a) and article 194(3) have to be reconciled and the only way of reconciling the same is to read article 19(1)(a) as subject to the latter part of article 194(3). The principle of harmonious construction must be adopted and so constructed that the provisions of article 19(1)(a), which are general, must yield to article 194(1) and the latter part of clause (3) thereof which are special.
- (iii) A law made by Parliament in pursuance of the earlier part of article 105(3) or by the State Legislature in pursuance of the earlier part of article 194(3) will not be a law made in exercise of constituent power... but will be one made in exercise of its ordinary legislative powers under article 246... and that consequently if such a law takes away or abridges any of the fundamental rights, it will contravene the pre-emptory provisions of article 13(2) and will be void to the extent of such contravention<sup>25</sup>.
- (iv) To say that parliamentary privileges are intended to be enjoyed on behalf of the people and not against the people, pre-supposes a conflict of interest.

24. See Subhash C. Kashyap: Parliament of India, New Delhi, 1988, pp. 212-13.

25. M.S.M. Sharma v. Sri Krishna Sinha, A.I.R. 1959, S.C. 395.

This is a fallacious argument. In fact, there is or should be no dichotomy between the two.

It is to be stressed that these privileges do not belong to any feudal body or feudal lords; they belong to the representatives of the people elected to the Houses of Parliament and as such should not be seen as something antagonistic to the rights and interests of the people. The people of India, through the Constitution, have conferred these rights on members to be exercised by them collectively and individually in their capacity as representatives of the people in the wider interest of the people.

- (v) The only purpose and justification for these privileges is that the representatives of the people should be enabled to discharge their responsibilities and duties to the people effectively and efficiently without any fear or favour and without any obstruction or hindrance.
- (vi) The scope of parliamentary privileges is very well-defined and restricted. The litmus test is that no privilege of Parliament or a member of Parliament will be attracted if any obstruction, libel or reflection upon a member of Parliament does not concern his character or conduct in his capacity as a member of the House and is not based on matters arising in the actual transaction of the business of the House. The volume of case law built up in India over the last fifty years has clearly established this principle. It is, therefore, not correct to say that parliamentary privileges are vague and inscrutable.
- (vii) The basic law that all citizens should be treated equally before the law holds good in the case of members of Parliament as well. They have the same rights and liberties as ordinary citizens except when they perform their duties in the Parliament. The privileges, therefore, do not, in any way, exempt members from their normal obligation to society which apply to them as much and perhaps, more closely in that capacity as they apply to others.
- (viii) To take for granted that the codification of privileges will ipso facto put an end to confrontation between makers of law and dispensers of justice is perhaps a naive notion; instead of solving any problems, may be, it will create other unforeseen problems in the matter of relations between the Legislature and the Judiciary.
- (ix) The Legislature's power to punish for contempt is more or less akin and analogous to the power given to the courts to punish for their contempt. What constitutes a breach of privilege or contempt of the House can be best decided according to the facts and circumstances of each case rather than by specifying them in so many words.
- (x) If there is mutual trust and respect between Parliament and courts, there is hardly any need to codify the law on the subject of privileges. With a codified law more advantage will flow to persons bent on vilifying Parliament, its members and committees and the courts will be called upon more and more to intervene... A written law will make it difficult for Parliament as well as courts to maintain that dignity which rightly belongs to Parliament and which the courts will always uphold as zealously as they uphold their own<sup>26</sup>; and

- (xi) If the privileges are codified, all matters would come before the courts and the Legislatures would lose their exclusive right to determine matters relating to their privilege and precision will be gained at the sacrifice of substance.

Ambit and Scope of Privileges

In the Eleventh Lok Sabha, the Committee of Privileges decided to undertake a review of the entire gamut of parliamentary privileges and related matters. Consequently, a Study Group of the Committee of Privileges was constituted for undertaking a study of parliamentary privileges, ethics and related matters. The Study Group, however, decided to enlarge the scope of the study and undertook a comprehensive study of not only the privileges and rights but also responsibilities and obligations of members which brought the study within the realms of Ethics and Code of Conduct. The Study Group, after making a comparative study<sup>27</sup> of mechanisms existing in the United Kingdom, the United States of America and Australia for dealing with ethics, standards, privileges and related matters, arrived at its conclusions and submitted its Report to the Committee of Privileges on 14 October 1997. The Committee of Privileges, after due deliberation and making certain modifications, adopted the Report on 'Ethics, Standards in Public Life, Privileges, Facilities to Members and other related matters' on 7 November 1997.

As the House was not in session, the Chairman, Committee of Privileges presented<sup>28</sup> the Report to the Speaker on 27 November 1997. However, before the Report could be presented to the House, the Eleventh Lok Sabha was dissolved on 4 December 1997.

This Report covers in detail the various facets of parliamentary privileges and more particularly, ethical matters. The crux of the recommendations/conclusions made in the Report is based upon the Committee's considered opinion that privileges/obligations and ethics are all interlinked and hence should be dealt with by a single Parliamentary Committee. The pivotal recommendation has been that the Committee of Privileges be renamed as the Committee on Ethics and Privileges for dealing with both ethics and privilege related matters.<sup>29</sup> There are various other vital recommendations in respect of obligations and privileges of and facilities to members, electoral reforms, amendment of the Anti-Defection Law and criminalisation of politics. Subsequently on 16 May 2000, the Speaker (13 LS) constituted a 15 member Committee on Ethics in Lok Sabha.

recommendations, if and when implemented, would have far reaching ramifications inasmuch as they tend to redefine the legislators' role in our polity and to an extent amplify the scope of parliamentary privileges.

Main Privileges of Parliament

Some of the privileges of Parliament and of its members and committees are specified in the Constitution, certain statutes and the Rules of Procedure of the House, while others continue to be based on precedents of the British House of Commons and on conventions which have grown in this country.

Some of the more important of these privileges are:

(i) Privileges specified in the Constitution :

Freedom of speech in Parliament<sup>30</sup>.

Immunity to a member from any proceedings in any court in respect of anything said or any vote given by him in Parliament or any committee thereof<sup>31</sup>.

Immunity to a person from proceedings in any court in respect of the publication by or under the authority of either House of Parliament of any report, paper, votes or proceedings<sup>32</sup>.

Prohibition on the courts to inquire into proceedings of Parliament<sup>33</sup>.

Immunity to a person from any proceedings, civil or criminal, in any court in respect of the publication in a newspaper of a substantially true report of any proceedings of either House of Parliament unless the publication is proved to have been made with malice. This immunity is also available in relation to reports or matters broadcast by means of wireless telegraphy<sup>34</sup>.

(ii) Privileges specified in Statutes :

Freedom from arrest of members in civil cases during the continuance of the session of the House and forty days before its commencement and forty days after its conclusion<sup>35</sup>.

(iii) Privileges specified in the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business of the House :

Right of the House to receive immediate information of the arrest, detention, conviction, imprisonment and release of a member<sup>36</sup>.

36. Rules 229 and 230.

Exemption of a member from service of legal process and arrest within the precincts of the House<sup>37</sup>.

Prohibition of disclosure of the proceedings or decisions of a secret sitting of the House<sup>38</sup>.

- (iv) Privileges based upon Precedents : Members or officers of the House cannot be compelled to give evidence or to produce documents in courts of law, relating to the proceedings of the House without the permission of the House<sup>39</sup>.

Members or officers of the House cannot be compelled to attend as witness before the other House or a committee thereof or before a House of State Legislature or a committee thereof without the permission of the House and without the consent of the member whose attendance is required<sup>40</sup>.

In addition to the above-mentioned privileges and immunities, each House also enjoys certain consequential powers necessary for the protection of its privileges and immunities. These powers are:

to commit persons, whether they are members or not, for breach of privilege or contempt of the House<sup>41</sup>.

to compel the attendance of witnesses and to send for persons, papers and records<sup>42</sup>.

to regulate its procedure and the conduct of its business<sup>43</sup>.

to prohibit the publication of its debates and proceedings<sup>44</sup> and to exclude strangers<sup>45</sup>.

Privilege of Freedom of Speech and Immunity from Proceedings

Constitutional Provisions: The privilege of freedom of speech of members of Parliament is embodied in clauses (1) and (2) of article 105, and is reproduced below:

1. Subject to the provisions of this Constitution and to the rules and standing orders regulating the procedure of Parliament, there shall be freedom of speech in Parliament.

2. No member of Parliament shall be liable to any proceedings in any court in respect of anything said or any vote given by him in Parliament or any committee thereof, and no person shall be so liable in respect of the publication by or under the authority of either House of Parliament of any report, paper, votes or proceedings.

This privilege was expressly granted to the members of the Indian Legislature for the first time under the Montague-Chelmsford reforms and given statutory recognition<sup>46</sup>. Thereunder, a member of the Legislature had the immunity from any proceedings in any court in respect of his “speech or vote” in either Chamber of Indian Legislature<sup>47</sup>. In the Government of India Act, 1935, both as originally enacted and as adapted, and subsequently in the Constitution, the position was stated beyond doubt by using the words “anything said or any vote given<sup>48</sup>”.

In a case, it was argued that the immunity granted by article 105(2) related to what was relevant to the business of Parliament and not to something which was utterly irrelevant. Rejecting the argument, the Supreme Court ruled:

The article confers immunity inter alia in respect of “anything said... in Parliament”, the word “anything” is of the widest import and is equivalent to “everything”. The only limitation arises from the words “in Parliament” which means during the sitting of Parliament and in the course of business of Parliament. Once it is proved that Parliament was sitting and its business was being transacted, anything said during the course of that business was immune from proceedings in any Court. What they say is only subject to the discipline of the rules of Parliament, the good sense of the members and the control of proceedings by the Speaker. The Courts have no say in the matter and should really have none<sup>49</sup>.

The provisions of article 105(2) also apply in relation to persons who by virtue of the Constitution have the right to speak in, and otherwise to take part in the proceedings of, either House or any committee thereof as they apply in relation to members of Parliament<sup>50</sup>. The immunity, however, is confined to “anything said or vote given” in Parliament or any committee thereof.

Speech and action in Parliament may be said to be unquestioned and free. However, this freedom from external influence or interference does not involve any unrestrained licence of speech within the walls of the House. The right to freedom of speech in the House is circumscribed by the constitutional provisions<sup>51</sup> and the Rules

47. Section 28(1) of the Government of India Act, 1935.

50. Art. 105(4). Under article 88, every Minister and the Attorney-General of India have the right to speak in, and otherwise to take part in the proceedings of, either House, any joint sitting of the Houses, and any Committee of Parliament of which he may be named a member, but is not by virtue of this article entitled to vote.

51. For instance, see art. 121.

which also guard against making of unwarranted allegations against a person<sup>52</sup>, and the procedure for inviting attention to incorrect statements made by Ministers or members is governed by Directions<sup>53</sup>. When a member violates any of these restrictions, the Speaker may direct him to discontinue his speech<sup>54</sup> or order the defamatory, indecent, unparliamentary or undignified words used by the member to be expunged from the proceedings of the House<sup>55</sup>, or direct the member to withdraw from the House<sup>56</sup>, or put the question for suspension of the member from the service of the House<sup>57</sup>.

The freedom of speech conferred on members under article 105(2) is thus subject only to those provisions of the Constitution which regulate the procedure of Parliament and to the rules and standing orders of the House, but is free from any restrictions which may be imposed by any law made under article 19(2) upon the freedom of speech of an ordinary citizen.<sup>58</sup>

...the words 'regulating the procedure of the Legislature' occurring in cl. (1) of art. 194 should be read as governing both 'the provisions of the Constitution' and the rules and standing orders. So read, freedom of speech in the Legislature becomes subject to the provisions of the Constitution regulating the procedure of the Legislature, that is to say, subject to the articles relating to procedure in Part VI, including arts. 208 and 211; just as freedom of speech in Parliament under article 105(1), on a similar construction, will become subject to the articles relating to procedure in Part V, including articles 118 and 121.

For his speech and action in Parliament, a member is subject only to the discipline of the House itself and no proceedings, civil or criminal, can be instituted against him in any court in respect of the same<sup>61</sup>. Absolute privilege has been given in respect of anything said or any vote given in Parliament or a committee thereof so that members may not be afraid to speak out their minds and freely express their views. are, therefore, completely protected from any proceedings in any court even though the words uttered by them in the House may be false and malicious to their knowledge<sup>62</sup>. Though a speech delivered by a member in the House may amount to contempt of court, no action can be taken against him in a court of law as speeches made in the House are privileged<sup>63</sup>. Anything said or done in the House is a matter to be dealt with by the House itself<sup>64</sup>. On the same principle, proceedings for breach of privilege have not been allowed in the Lok Sabha in respect of a speech, allegedly casting reflections on members of Parliament, delivered by a member of a State Legislative Assembly in that Assembly<sup>65</sup>.

The express constitutional provisions of clauses (1) and (2) of article 105 are thus a complete and conclusive code in respect of the privilege of freedom of speech and immunity from liability to proceeding in a court for anything said in the House or for publication of its reports. Anything which falls outside the ambit of these provisions is, therefore, liable to be dealt with by the courts in accordance with the law of the land. Thus, if a member publishes questions which have been disallowed by the Speaker and which are defamatory, he will be liable to be dealt with in a court under the law of defamation<sup>66</sup>.

Maintaining Privilege of Freedom of Speech: It is the duty of each member to refrain from any course of action prejudicial to the privilege of freedom of speech which he enjoys. As declared by the House of Commons, U.K., by a resolution on 15 July 1947:

It is inconsistent with the dignity of the House, with the duty of a member to his constituents and with the maintenance of the privilege of freedom of speech of any member of this House to enter into any contractual agreement with an outside body, controlling or limiting the member's complete independence and freedom of action in Parliament or stipulating that he shall act in any way as the representative of such outside body in regard to any matters to be transacted in Parliament; the duty of a member being to his constituents and to the country as a whole, rather than to any particular section thereof<sup>67</sup>.

respect of what they say in the House or a Committee thereof. This privilege may be regarded as an extension of the privilege of freedom of speech of the House as its purpose is to ensure that information is given to the House freely and without interference from outside.

Any molestation of, or threats against, persons who have given evidence before any committee thereof on account of what they may have said in their evidence, is treated by the House as a breach of privilege<sup>68</sup>.

It is also a contempt of House to molest any petitioner or counsel on account of his having preferred a petition to the House<sup>69</sup> or in respect of his conduct while discharging his professional duties as a counsel<sup>70</sup>.

Similarly, the bringing of legal proceedings against any person on account of any evidence which he may have given in the course of any proceedings in the House or in a committee thereof, is treated by the House as a breach of privilege<sup>71</sup>. Moreover, an action for slander based on statements made in evidence before a committee of the House will not be entertained by the courts<sup>72</sup>.

Right to Exclude Strangers

Each House has the right to exclude strangers and to debate within close doors. This right flows as a necessary corollary to the privilege of freedom of speech as it enables the House to obtain, when necessary, such privacy as may secure freedom of debate. As observed by the Supreme Court<sup>73</sup>:

...the freedom of speech claimed by the House (House of Commons) and granted by the Crown is, when necessary, ensured by the secrecy of the debate which in its turn is protected by prohibiting publication of the debates and proceedings as well as by excluding strangers from the House... This right (to exclude strangers) was exercised in 1923 and again as late as on 18 November 1958. This shows that there has been no diminution in the eagerness of the House of Commons to protect itself by secrecy of debate by excluding strangers from the House when any occasion arises.

The object of excluding strangers is to prevent the publication of the debates and proceedings in the House...

In the Lok Sabha, the Speaker has the power to order the withdrawal of strangers from any part of the House whenever he may think fit<sup>74</sup>. During a secret sitting of the House no stranger is permitted to be present in the Chamber, the Lobby or the Galleries<sup>75</sup>.

If any stranger is found to be present in any part of the precincts of the House which is reserved for the exclusive use of members, or if any stranger misconducts himself within the precincts of the Parliament House or does not withdraw when the strangers are directed to withdraw while the House is sitting, he may be removed from the precincts of the House or be taken into custody by the Additional Secretary/Joint Secretary, Security of the Lok Sabha<sup>76</sup>.

Right to Control Publication of Proceedings

The publication of report of debates or proceedings of Parliament is subject to the control of the respective House which has the right to prohibit the publication of its proceedings. In this regard the Supreme Court, inter alia, observed:

Our Constitution clearly provides that until Parliament or the State Legislature, as the case may be, makes a law defining the powers, privileges and immunities of the House, its members and Committees, they shall have all the powers, privileges and immunities of the House of Commons as at the date of the commencement of our Constitution and yet to deny them those powers, privileges and immunities after finding that the House of Commons had them at the relevant time, will be not to interpret the Constitution but to remake it<sup>77</sup>.

The underlying object of the power of the House to control and, if necessary, to prohibit the publication of its debates and proceedings is to protect freedom of speech by ensuring privacy of debate whenever necessary, and prevails over the general right of the individual to freedom of speech and expression guaranteed by the Constitution<sup>78</sup>.

In the Lok Sabha, the Secretary-General is authorised to prepare and to publish a full report of the proceedings of the House under the directions of the Speaker<sup>79</sup>. The Speaker may also authorise the printing, publication, distribution or sale of any paper, document or report in connection with the business of the House or any paper, document or report laid on the Table or presented to the House or a committee thereof. Such printing, publication, distribution or sale is deemed to be under the authority of the House within the meaning of the constitutional provisions in this regard<sup>80</sup>. If a question arises whether a paper, document or report is in connection with the business of the House or not, the question is referred to the Speaker whose decision is final<sup>81</sup>.

81. Rule 382.

Publication by any person in a newspaper of a substantially true report of any proceedings of either House of Parliament is protected under the Constitution from civil or criminal proceedings in court unless the publication is proved to have been made with malice<sup>82</sup>. Statutory protection has also been given by the Parliamentary Proceedings (Protection of Publication) Act, 1977, to publication in newspapers or broadcasts by wireless telegraphy, of substantially true reports of proceedings in Parliament<sup>83</sup>.

If a member publishes his own speech made in the House separately from the rest of the debate, it becomes a separate publication unconnected with the proceedings in the House, and the member publishing it becomes responsible for any libellous matter contained therein under the ordinary law of the land<sup>84</sup>.

Right of each House to be the Sole Judge of the Lawfulness of its own Proceedings

Parliament is sovereign within the limits assigned to it by the Constitution. There is an inherent right in the House to conduct its affairs without any interference from an outside body. The Constitution specifically bars the jurisdiction of courts of law in respect of anything said or any vote given by a member in the House. In the matter of judging the validity of its proceedings, the House has exclusive jurisdiction<sup>85</sup>.

The House has also collective privilege to decide what it will discuss and in what order, without any interference from a court of law:

...It is well known that no writ, direction or order restraining the Speaker, from allowing a particular question to be discussed, or interfering with the legislative processes of either House of the Legislature or interfering with the freedom of discussion or expression of opinion in either House can be entertained<sup>86</sup>.

The House is not responsible to any external authority for following the procedure it lays down for itself, and it may depart from that procedure at its own discretion<sup>87</sup>.

The validity of any proceedings in Parliament cannot be called in question in any court on the ground of any alleged irregularity of procedure. No officer or member of Parliament in whom powers are vested for regulating the procedure or the conduct of business, or for maintaining order, in Parliament, is subject to the jurisdiction of any court in respect of the exercise by him of those powers<sup>88</sup>. The Allahabad High Court in this regard held:

87. Rule 388.

88. Art. 122, Art. 212 in case of State Legislatures.

...This Court is not, in any sense whatever, a court of appeal or revision against the Legislature or against the ruling of the Speaker who, as the holder of an office of the highest distinction, has the sole responsibility cast upon him of maintaining the prestige and dignity of the House.

...This Court has no jurisdiction to issue a writ, direction or order relating to a matter which affected the internal affairs of the House<sup>89</sup>.

The Kerala High Court have, however, in their full Bench decision held:

The immunity envisaged in article 212(1) of the Constitution is restricted to a case where the complaint is no more than that the procedure was irregular.

If the impugned proceedings are challenged as illegal or unconstitutional such proceedings would be open to scrutiny in a court of Law<sup>90</sup>.

Right of the House to punish its Members for their Conduct in Parliament

Each House has the power to punish its members for disorderly conduct and other contempts committed in the House while it is sitting<sup>91</sup>. This power is vested in the House by virtue of its right to exclusive cognizance of matters arising within the House and “to regulate its own internal concerns”.

It has been observed by the Allahabad High Court that “a Legislative Assembly would not be able to discharge the high functions entrusted to it properly, if it had no power to punish offenders against breaches of its privileges, to impose disciplinary regulations upon its members or to enforce obedience to its commands”<sup>92</sup>.

Again in a case which related to an action for contempt of court arising out of a speech delivered in the Orissa Legislative Assembly, the Orissa High Court held that “anything said or done in the House is a matter to be dealt with by the House itself” and that the Legislature or the Speaker had the power “to take suitable action against a member who, while exercising his freedom of speech under clause (1) of art. 194, transgresses the limits laid down in that clause”<sup>93</sup>.

The Speaker, who preserves order in the House, has “all powers necessary for the purpose of enforcing his decisions”<sup>94</sup>. The disciplinary powers of the Speaker and the House are partly embodied in the rules which provide for the withdrawal or suspension of any member whose conduct is grossly disorderly or who disregards the authority of the Chair or abuses the rules of the House by persistently and wilfully obstructing its business<sup>95</sup>.

In a writ petition filed by some members of the Haryana Vidhan Sabha, the High Court of Punjab and Haryana observed inter alia that the power of the Speaker to regulate the procedure and conduct of business could not be questioned by the court and it was not competent to inquire into the procedural irregularities of the House<sup>96</sup>.

Proceedings in Parliament

The term “proceedings in Parliament” or the words “anything said in Parliament” have not so far been expressly defined by courts of law. However, as technical term, these words have been widely interpreted to mean any formal action, usually a decision taken by the House in its collective capacity, including the forms of business in which the House takes action, and in the whole process, the principal part of which is debate, by which it reaches a decision. The term thus connotes more than mere speeches and debates.

The term “proceedings in Parliament” covers both the asking of a question and the giving of written notice of such question, motion, Bill or any other matter and includes everything said or done by a member in the exercise of his functions as a member in a committee of either House, as well as everything said or done in either House in the transaction of parliamentary business<sup>97</sup>.

In this connection, the Orissa High Court, inter alia, observed:

It seems thus a settled parliamentary usage that “proceedings in Parliament” are not limited to the proceedings during the actual session of Parliament but also include some preliminary steps such as giving notice of questions or notice of resolutions, etc. Presumably, this extended connotation of the said term is based on the idea that when notice of a question is given and the Speaker allows or disallows the same, notionally it should be deemed that the questions were actually asked in the session of Parliament and allowed or disallowed, as the case may be<sup>98</sup>.

Under the Constitution, as already stated, the validity of any ‘proceedings in Parliament cannot be called in question on the ground of any alleged irregularity of procedure’<sup>99</sup>.

While giving of a written notice of a question or a resolution is regarded as ‘proceedings in Parliament’, a letter written by a member of Parliament to a Minister on a public matter in the course of discharge of his duties as a member is not regarded as ‘proceedings in Parliament’.

99. Art. 122(1).

Evidence in Courts Regarding Proceedings in Parliament

Leave of the House is necessary for giving evidence in a court of law in respect of the proceedings in that House or committees thereof or for production of any document connected with the proceedings of that House or Committees thereof, or in the custody of the officers of that House. According to the First Report of the Committee of Privileges of the Second Lok Sabha, “no member or officer of the House should give evidence in a court of law in respect of any proceedings of the House or any Committees of the House or any other document connected with the proceedings of the House or in the custody of the Secretary-General without the leave of the House being first obtained”<sup>100</sup>.

When the House is not in session, the Speaker may, in emergent cases, allow the production of relevant documents in courts of law in order to prevent delays in the administration of justice and inform the House accordingly of the fact when it reassembles or through the Bulletin<sup>101</sup>. However, in case the matter involves any question of privilege, especially the privilege of a witness, or in case the production of the document appears to him to be a subject for the discretion of the House itself, the Speaker may decline to grant the required permission without leave of the House<sup>102</sup>.

Whenever any document relating to the proceedings of the House or any committee thereof is required to be produced in a court of law, the court or the parties to the legal proceedings have to request the House stating precisely the documents required, the purpose for which they are required and the date by which they are required. It has also to be specifically stated in each case whether only a certified copy of the document should be sent or an officer of the House should produce it before the court<sup>103</sup>.

In pursuance of the above recommendations of the Committee of Privileges and the discussion in the House thereon, the Government of India requested all States to discuss the matter with the Chief Justices of their respective High Courts for issue of suitable directions on the following points:

that when parliamentary records are required to be produced before courts of law, a proper form of address should be adopted; that in most cases it would be sufficient to call for only the certified copies of the documents, at any rate in the first instance, and that the original documents might be called for at a later stage if the parties insisted upon their strict proof;

Where the document required to be produced in a court of law relates to an administrative matter connected with the service record of an officer of the Secretariat, the Speaker may himself give the necessary permission under Rule 383.

that the courts should bear in mind the provisions of section 78(2) of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, under which proceedings of the Legislatures can be proved by the production of the authorized parliamentary publications and ensure that Parliament is troubled only when unpublished documents in its custody are required in evidence.

A special form of letter of request is prescribed for use by the courts of law while requesting the House for the production of parliamentary records or for oral evidence of officers of the House in the courts.

When request is received during a session of the Lok Sabha for producing in a court of law a document connected with the proceedings of the House or Committees thereof or a document which is in the custody of the Secretary-General<sup>104</sup>, the case is referred by the Speaker to the Committee of Privileges. On a report from the Committee, a motion is moved in the House by the Chairman or a member of the Committee to the effect that the House agrees with the report, and further action is taken in accordance with the decision of the House<sup>105</sup>.

A question was raised whether it was necessary to refer to the Committee of Privileges every such request received and whether the Speaker himself could not grant such permission. The Speaker considered it correct, in the light of provisions of article 105(3), that the present procedure should continue to be followed<sup>106</sup>.

The Committee of Privileges, Fourteenth Lok Sabha, felt that it was about time that the procedure for dealing with the requests for documents relating to proceedings of the House, its Committees etc., received from Courts of Law and investigating agencies were given a fresh look, particularly in the light of the provisions of the Right to Information Act, 2005. The Committee, with the permission of the Speaker, took up the examination of the matter. The Twelfth Report in the matter was presented to the Speaker, Lok Sabha on 28 April 2008 and laid on the Table of the House on 30 April 2008. The Report was adopted by the House on 23 October 2008.

The Committee in their Report recommended the following procedure:

- (I) Procedure for making requests for documents relating to the proceedings of the House or of any Committee of the House:
  - A. If request for documents relating to proceedings of the House or of any Committee of the House is made by a court or by the parties to a legal proceedings before a court, the court or the parties to the proceedings as the case may be, shall specify the documents required, the purpose for which they are required and the date by which they are required. It should also be specifically stated in each case whether only certified copies or photocopies of the documents should be sent or an officer of the House should produce it before the court.

104. Custody of records, documents and papers belonging to the House or any of its Committees or the Secretariat vests in the Secretary-General. No such records, documents or papers are permitted to be taken out of Parliament House without the permission of the Speaker. Rule 383.

- B. If the request for documents relating to proceedings of the House or of any Committee thereof is made by investigating agencies like the police, the Central Bureau of Investigation, etc., they shall specify the documents required, the purpose for which they are required and the date by which they are required.

(II) Procedure for dealing with requests for documents relating to proceedings of the House or any Committee of the House.

- A. (i) If the request has been made by a court or by the parties to the proceedings before a court and the House is not in session, the Speaker may in emergent cases allow the production of the relevant documents in court in order to prevent delays in administration of justice and inform the House accordingly of the fact when it meets.
  - (ii) If such a request, however, appears to the Speaker to involve any question of privilege, especially the privilege of the House, any Committee of the House, any member or a witness or, in case the production of the document appears to him to be a subject for the discretion of the House itself, he may, notwithstanding the fact that House is not in session, decline to grant the required permission and refer the matter to the Committee of Privileges for examination and report.
  - (iii) If such a request has been made when the House is in session, the request may be referred by the Speaker to the Committee of Privileges.
  - (iv) If the request requires appearance of a member or officer of the House in court, with or without documents for deposition, in relation to proceedings of the House or any Committee of the House, the Speaker may refer the matter to the Committee of Privileges, whether the House is in session or not.
  - B. (i) If the request has been made by investigating agencies like the police, the Central Bureau of Investigation, etc., the Speaker may permit them to take photocopies or photographs of the required documents without parting with the original documents.
  - (ii) In case, however, such a request appears to the Speaker to involve any question of privilege, especially the privilege of the House, any Committee of the House, any member, or a witness, or in case the production of the document appears to him to be a subject for discretion of the House itself, or the investigating agency insists on having the original documents for reasons to be specified in writing or they desire to record evidence of any member or officer of the House, he may refer the matter to the Committee of Privileges for examination and report.
- (III) Procedure for dealing with requests from courts or investigating agencies for documents other than those relating to the proceedings of the House or any Committee of the House, which are in the custody of the Secretary-General.

- A. If requests are received from a court or an investigating agency like the police or the Central Bureau of Investigation, etc., for documents, other than those relating to the proceedings of the House or any Committee of the House, which are in the custody of the Secretary-General, copies of such documents may be made available, with the permission of the Speaker.

Explanation: Documents in the custody of the Secretary-General, other than those relating to the proceedings of the House or any Committee of the House, shall mean and include (but it shall not be treated as an exhaustive list of such documents), those relating to general information pertaining to the sittings of the House, any Committee of the House, any member of the House or duration of sessions of the House, like dates on which the House sat; the number and/or dates of sittings of a Committee of the House; the number of the days a member attended the sittings of the House or any Committee of the House; TA/DA drawn by a member during a specified time; specimen signatures/handwriting of a member; documents submitted by a member; information submitted by a member regarding his assets and liabilities; the names and addresses of PAs etc. employed by a member; and so on.

- (IV) The question whether a document relates to the proceedings of the House or any Committee of the House shall be decided by the Speaker and his decision shall be final.
- (V) Documents relating to the proceedings of the House or any Committee of the House which are public documents should be taken judicial notice of and requests for certified copies thereof may not be ordinarily made unless there are sufficient reasons for making such requests.
- (VI) Procedure after the Report of the Committee of Privileges has been presented or laid on the Table of the House.

After the Report of the Committee of Privileges has been presented to or laid on the Table of the House, the Chairman or any member of the Committee may move a motion in the House to the effect that the House agrees with the Report and further action will be taken in accordance with the decision of the House.

A recommendation was also made that the Government may bring forward an amendment to the Right to Information Act, 2005 inter alia requiring an applicant under the Act for information/documents relating to matters coming under the jurisdiction of Parliament to state the reasons for which the same are required; empowering the presiding officer to refer such a request to the Committee of Privileges of the House for examination and report.

Proceedings in Parliament and the Criminal Law

Since a member of Parliament is not liable to any proceedings in any court in respect of anything said or any vote given by him in Parliament or any Committee thereof<sup>107</sup>, it follows that a member is not amenable to the courts of law for anything said in debate, however criminal in its nature. Thus, the Orissa High Court held that “no law court can take action against a member of the Legislature for any speech made by him there”<sup>108</sup>.

It has also been held that the disclosures made in the House either by speeches or questions cannot be made the subject matter of a prosecution under the Official Secrets Act<sup>109</sup>.

A criminal act committed by a member within the House cannot be regarded as a part of the proceedings of the House for purposes of protection. Thus, in the Maharashtra Legislative Assembly when a member shouted at the operator to connect his mike to the loudspeaker, threw a paper-weight in the direction of the loudspeaker-operator and rushed towards the Speaker and grabbed the mike in front of the Speaker, he was not only expelled from the House but was subsequently convicted under different sections of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to a rigorous imprisonment for six months<sup>110</sup>.

JMM Case – Immunity from Proceedings in Court for Voting in the House

In the General Election for the Tenth Lok Sabha held in 1991, the Indian National Congress (I.N.C.) emerged as the single largest party and it formed the Government with P.V. Narasimha Rao as the Prime Minister. During the Seventh Session of the Tenth Lok Sabha, on 28 July 1993, a No-Confidence Motion was moved against the Government by Ajoy Mukhopadhyaya, a member belonging to CPI(M). At that time, the effective strength of the Lok Sabha was 528 and Congress (I) had a strength of 251 members, Congress (I) was short of 14 members for a simple majority. The Motion of No-Confidence was taken up for discussion in the Lok Sabha on 26 July 1993 and the debate continued till 28 July 1993. The Motion was, thereafter, put to vote that day. On 28 February 1996, Ravindra Kumar of Rashtriya Mukti Morcha (R.M.M.) filed a complaint dated 1 February 1996 with the Central Bureau of Investigation (C.B.I.) wherein it was alleged that in July 1993, a criminal conspiracy was hatched by P.V. Narasimha Rao, Satish Sharma, Ajit Singh, V.C. Shukla, R.K. Dhawan and Lalit Suri to prove the majority of the Government on the floor of the House on 28 July 1993 by bribing members of Parliament of different political parties, individuals and groups to an amount of over Rs. 3 crore and that in furtherance of the said criminal conspiracy a sum of Rs. 110 crore was handed over by the aforementioned persons to Suraj Mandal. On the basis of the said complaint, the CBI registered four cases under Section 13(2) read with Section 13(1)(2)(iii) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 inter alia against Shibu Soren, Simon Marandi and Shailendra Mahto, members of Parliament belonging to the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha (JMM) Party.

These developments also found an echo in the Lok Sabha. During the Sixteenth Session of the Tenth Lok Sabha, on 11 March 1996, a question of privilege was sought to be raised in the House regarding the issue of alleged pay off and inducements to members of JMM for not voting in favour of the No-Confidence Motion. The then Speaker, Shivraj V. Patil, while disallowing the notice observed, "...The matter is before the court which may take a proper decision on the basis of the evidence that may be produced before it". Subsequently, in pursuance of the order dated 24 May 1996 passed by the Delhi High Court in Civil Writ Petition No. 23/96, another case was registered on 11 June 1996 against V.C. Shukla, R.K. Dhawan, Lalit Suri and others under Section 120-B IPC and Sections 7, 12, 13 (2) read with Section 13(1)(d)(iii) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. After completing the investigation, the CBI submitted three chargesheets dated 30 October 1996, 9 December 1996 and 22 January 1997 in the court of Special Judge, New Delhi.

Meanwhile, in a related development in the Lok Sabha, in October 1996, representations were made to the Speaker, Eleventh Lok Sabha, P.A. Sangma by Shibu Soren, member, Eleventh Lok Sabha and Suraj Mandal, Simon Marandi and Shailendra Mahto, members of the Tenth Lok Sabha in the matter.

Shibu Soren, in his representation dated 5 October 1996 inter alia had posed a legal query viz. "an allegation of bribe against a member of House in connection with the voting in the House is a breach of privilege, which can only be inquired by the House and is not justiciable in a Court of Law".

Shibu Soren, Suraj Mandal, Simon Marandi and Shailendra Mahto, in their joint representation dated 18 October 1996, while referring to the ongoing case against them in the court of Ajit Bharihoke, Special Judge, Delhi in response to a Civil Writ Petition filed by R.M.M., had inter alia contended that "the investigation which is being conducted by the CBI into the aforesaid allegations, (their) arrest and the proceedings which are being pursued by them and others in various courts in respect of the same, are not only unconstitutional or without any jurisdiction, but constitute a serious encroachment upon the supremacy of the Lok Sabha in its exclusive field, its powers and privileges".

On the point of immunity to the members of Parliament from proceedings in any Court of Law, in respect of anything said or any vote given by them in Parliament or any Committee thereof, it had also been contended that "the entire proceedings of the learned High Court are barred not only by article 105(2) of the Constitution of India, but also by the powers and privileges and the exclusive jurisdiction of the Lok Sabha to investigate any matter which involves breach of its privileges".

On examination of this matter, it was felt that as there was no definitive judicial pronouncement on these issues till that time, the proper forum for raising such legal and constitutional points would therefore be a Court of Law. Shibu Soren was thereafter informed in writing that as the constitutional and legal issues raised in his representation regarding the scope and extent of the immunity to members under article 105 of the Constitution involve precise interpretation, and the proper forum for raising such issues was therefore a Court of Law. The member was accordingly requested that if he so desired, he might take up these constitutional and legal points through his counsel, with the appropriate court.

The Special Judge, after hearing the arguments, passed the order dated 6 May 1997 wherein he held that there is sufficient evidence on record to justify framing of charges against all the appellants. The Special Judge also held that there is prima facie evidence of commission of offence under Section 193 of IPC by accused Nos. A-3 to A-5, i.e. Suraj Mandal, Shibu Soren and Shailendra Mahto.

Before the Special Judge, an objection was raised on behalf of the accused persons that the jurisdiction of the court to try the case was barred under article 105(2) of the Constitution, as the trial is in respect of matters which relate to the privileges and immunities of the House of Parliament (Lok Sabha) and its members, in as much as the foundation of the charge sheets is the allegation of acceptance of bribe by some members of Parliament for voting against the No-Confidence Motion and that the controversy to be decided in this case would be in respect of the motive and action of members of Parliament pertaining to the vote given by them in relation to the No-Confidence Motion. The Revision petition against the said order of the Special Judge in the Delhi High Court was filed. After examination of the matter, the Delhi High Court found that there was no ground for interfering with the order passed by the Special Judge.

Feeling aggrieved by the said judgment of the High Court, the appellants moved in appeal to the Supreme Court of India. The appeals were heard by a bench of three Judges of the Supreme Court. After hearing the arguments of the counsel for the appellants, the following order was passed by that bench on 18 November 1997:—

Among other questions a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of article 105 of the Constitution of India is raised in these petitions. These petitions are, therefore, required to be heard and disposed of by a Constitution Bench.

In pursuance of the said order, the matter was placed before the five-judge Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court. At the commencement of the hearing, the Court passed the following order on 9 December 1997:—

By order dated 18 November 1997 these matters have been referred to this Court for the reason that among the questions, a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of article 105 of the Constitution of India is raised in these petitions. These petitions are, therefore, required to be heard and disposed of by a Constitution Bench. The learned counsel for the parties agree that the Constitution Bench may only deal with the questions relating to interpretation of article 105 of the Constitution and the applicability of the Prevention of Corruption Act to a member of Parliament and member of State Legislative Assembly and the other question can be considered by the Division Bench.

The five-judge Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court delivered their judgement in the matter on 19 April 1998.

The two basic questions formulated by the Court for its consideration were as follows—

- (i) Does article 105 of the Constitution confer any immunity on a member of Parliament from being prosecuted in a criminal court for an offence involving offer or acceptance of bribe?

- (ii) Is a member of Parliament excluded from the ambit of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 for the reason that – (a) he is not a person who can be regarded as a “public servant” as defined under Section 2(c) of the said Act, and (b) he is not a person comprehended in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) of Section 19 of the said Act and there is no authority competent to grant sanction for his prosecution under the said Act?

Three separate decisions were delivered by the five-judge bench – first by Justice S.C. Agarwal and Justice A.S. Anand; the second by Justice G.N. Ray; and the third by Justice S.P. Bharucha and Justice S. Rajendra Babu.

The learned judges, put the accused/appellants into two broad categories – (a) the alleged bribe takers; and (b) the alleged bribe givers. The first category was further divided into two sub-categories – those who voted in the House on the Motion of No-Confidence and those who did not vote on the motion.

The majority and minority judgments on each of the above two points and the rationale adopted for the judgment may be summarised in brief as follows:–

- (i) Does article 105 of the Constitution confer any immunity on a member of Parliament from being prosecuted in a criminal court for an offence involving offer or acceptance of bribe?

The Majority Judgment, delivered by Justice S.P. Bharucha and Justice S. Rajendra Babu, Justice G.N. Ray concurring with them in a separate judgment, held that the alleged bribe takers, other than Ajit Singh, have the protection of article 105(2) and are not answerable in a Court of Law for the alleged conspiracy and agreement. Ajit Singh, not having cast his vote on the Motion of No-Confidence, derives no immunity from article 105(2). The alleged bribe givers do not enjoy any immunity. The criminal prosecution against them must, therefore, go ahead.

“The charge against the alleged bribe takers is that they were party to a criminal conspiracy and agreed to or entered into an agreement with the alleged bribe givers to defeat the No-confidence Motion...by illegal means... The stated object of the alleged conspiracy and agreement is to defeat the No-confidence Motion and the alleged bribe takers are said to have received monies as a motive or reward for defeating it. The nexus between the alleged conspiracy and bribe and the No-confidence Motion is explicit. The charge is that the alleged bribe takers received the bribes to secure the defeat of the No-confidence Motion... We do not think that we can ignore the fact that the votes were cast and, if the facts alleged against the bribe takers are true, that they were cast pursuant to the alleged conspiracy and agreement, it must then follow, given that the expression “in respect of” must receive a broad meaning, that the alleged conspiracy and agreement had a nexus to and were in respect of those votes and that the proposed inquiry in the criminal proceedings is in regard to the motivation thereof. It is difficult to agree with the learned Attorney-General that, though the words “in respect of” must receive a broad meaning, the protection under article 105(2) is limited to court proceedings that impugn the speech that is given or the vote that is cast or arise thereout or that the object of the protection would be fully satisfied, thereby. The object of the protection is to enable members to speak their mind in Parliament and vote in the same way, freed of the fear of being made answerable on that account in a Court of Law—Article 105(2) does not say, which it would have if the learned Attorney-General were right, that a member is not liable for what he has said or how he has voted. While imputing no such motive to the present prosecution, it is not difficult to envisage a member who has made a speech or cast a vote that is not to the liking of the powers that be being troubled by a prosecution alleging that he had been party to an agreement and conspiracy to achieve a certain result in Parliament and had been paid a bribe.”

“The protections to be enjoyed by a member of Parliament as contained in sub-article(2) of article 105 essentially flows from the freedom of speech guaranteed under sub-article (1) of article 105. Both the sub-articles (1) and (2) complement each other and indicate the true content of freedom of speech and freedom to exercise the right to vote envisaged in article 105 of the Constitution. The expression ‘in respect of’ appearing in several articles of the Constitution and in some other legislative provisions has been noticed in a number of decisions of this Court. The correct interpretation of the expression ‘in respect of’ cannot be made under any rigid formula but must be appreciated with references to the context in which it has been used and the purpose to be achieved under the provision in question. The context in which the expression ‘in respect of’ has been used in sub-article (2) of article 105 and the purpose for which the freedom of speech and freedom to vote have been guaranteed in sub-article (2) of the article 105 do not permit any restriction or curtailment of such right expressly given under sub-article (1) and sub-article (2) of article 105 of the Constitution. It must, however, be made clear that the protection under sub-article (2) of article 105 of the Constitution must relate to the vote actually given and speech actually made in Parliament by a member of Parliament.”

“Mr. Rao submitted that since, by reason of the provisions of article 105(2), the alleged bribe takers had committed no offence, the alleged bribe givers had also committed no offence. Article 105(2) does not provide that what is otherwise an offence is not an offence when it is committed by a member of Parliament and has a connection with his speech or vote therein. What is provided thereby is that a member of Parliament shall not be answerable in Court of Law for something that has a nexus to his speech or vote in Parliament. If a member of Parliament has by his speech or vote in Parliament, committed an offence, he enjoys, by reasons of article 105(2), immunity from prosecution therefore. Those who have conspired with the member of Parliament in the commission of that offence have no such immunity. They can, therefore, be prosecuted for it.”

The minority judgement delivered by Justice S.C. Agarwal and Justice A.S. Anand held that a member of Parliament does not enjoy immunity under article 105(2) or under article 105(3) from being prosecuted before a criminal court for an offence involving offer or acceptance of bribe for the purpose of speaking or by giving his vote in Parliament or in any committee thereof.

“The expression ‘in respect of’ precedes the words ‘anything said or any vote given’ in article 105(2). The words ‘anything said or any vote given’ can only mean speech that has already been made or a vote that has already been given. The immunity from liability, therefore, comes into play only if a speech has been made or vote has been given. The immunity would not be available in a case where a speech has not been made or a vote has not been given... If the construction placed by Shri Rao on the expression 'in respect of' is adopted, a member would be liable to be prosecuted on a charge of bribery if he accepts bribe for not speaking or for not giving his vote on a matter under consideration before the House but he would enjoy immunity from prosecution for such a charge if he accepts bribe for speaking or giving his vote in Parliament in a particular manner and he speaks or gives his vote in Parliament in that manner. It is difficult to conceive that the framers of the Constitution intended to make such a distinction in the matter of grant of immunity between a member of Parliament who receives bribe for speaking or giving his vote in Parliament in a particular manner and speaks or gives his vote in that manner and a member of Parliament who receives bribe for not speaking or not giving his vote on a particular matter coming up before the House and does not speak or give his vote as per the agreement so as to confer an immunity from prosecution on charge of bribery on the former but denying such immunity to the latter. Such an anomalous situation would be avoided if the words 'in respect of' in article 105(2) are construed to mean 'arising out of'. If the expression 'in respect of' is thus construed, the immunity conferred under article 105(2) would not be confined to liability that arises out of or is attributable to something that has been said or to a vote that has been given by a member in Parliament or any committee thereof. The immunity would be available only if the speech that has been made or the vote that has been given is an essential and integral part of the cause of action for the proceedings giving rise to the liability. The immunity would not be available to give protection against liability for an act that precedes the making of the speech or giving of vote by a member in Parliament even though it may have a connection with the speech made or the vote given by the member if such an act gives rise to a liability which arises independently and does not depend on the making of the speech or the giving of vote in Parliament by the member. Such an independent liability cannot be regarded as liability in respect of anything said or vote given by the member in Parliament. The liability for which immunity can be claimed under article 105(2) is the liability that has arisen as a consequence of the speech that has been made or the vote that has been given in Parliament."

"The construction placed by us on the expression 'in respect of' in article 105(2) raises the question: Is the liability to be prosecuted arising from acceptance of bribe by a member of Parliament for the purpose of speaking or giving his vote in Parliament in a particular manner on a matter pending consideration before the House an independent liability which cannot be said to arise out of anything said or any vote given by the member in Parliament? In our opinion, this question must be answered in the affirmative. The offence of bribery is made out against the receiver if he takes or agrees to take money for promise to act in a certain way. The offence is complete with the acceptance of the money or on the agreement to accept the money being concluded and is not dependent on the performance of the illegal promise by the receiver. The receiver of the money will be treated to have committed the offence even when he defaults in the illegal bargain. For proving the offence of bribery all that is required to be established is that the offender has received or agreed to receive money for a promise to act in a certain way and it is not necessary to go further and prove that he actually acted in that way.”

“The offence of criminal conspiracy is made out when two or more persons agree to do or cause to be done an illegal act or when two or more persons agree to do or cause to be done by illegal means an act which was not illegal. In view of the proviso to Section 120A IPC, an agreement to commit an offence shall by itself amount to criminal conspiracy and it is not necessary that some act besides the agreement should be done by one or more parties to such agreement in pursuance thereof. This means that the offence of criminal conspiracy would be committed if two or more persons enter into an agreement to commit the offence of bribery and it is immaterial whether in pursuance of that agreement the act that was agreed to be done was done or not.

The criminal liability incurred by a member of Parliament who has accepted bribe for speaking or giving his vote in Parliament in a particular manner thus arises independently of the making of the speech or giving of vote by the member and the said liability cannot, therefore, be regarded as a liability ‘in respect of’ anything said or any vote given in Parliament. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the protection granted under article 105(2) cannot be invoked by any of the appellants to claim immunity from prosecution.”

One important observation made by the learned judges (Justice Bharucha and Justice Rajendra Babu) is that Parliament may proceed against the alleged bribe givers as well as the bribe takers for breach of privilege and contempt.

- (ii) Is a member of Parliament excluded from the ambit of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 for the reason that: (a) he is not a person who can be regarded as a “public servant” as defined under Section 2(c) of the said Act, and (b) he is not a person comprehended in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) of Section 19 of the said Act and there is no authority competent to grant sanction for prosecution under the said Act?

On this issue, strictly speaking there were no majority or minority decisions. All the three judgments held that members of Parliament are ‘public servants’.

However, according to Justice Bharucha and Justice Rajendra Babu, the members of Parliament cannot be prosecuted for offences under Sections 7, 10, 11 and 13 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 because of want of authority competent to grant sanction.

According to Justice Agarwal and Justice Anand, since there is no authority competent to remove a member of Parliament and to grant sanction for his prosecution under Section 19(1) of the Act, the court can take cognizance of the offences mentioned in Section 19(1) in the absence of sanction but till provision is made by Parliament in that regard by suitable amendment in the law, the prosecuting agency, before, filing a charge-sheet in respect of an offence punishable under Sections 7, 10, 11, 13 and 15 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 against a member of Parliament in a criminal court, shall obtain the permission of the Chairman, Rajya Sabha/Speaker, Lok Sabha as the case may be.

Justice G.N. Ray concurred with this judgment :

“Although in the Constitution the word ‘office’ has not been used in the provisions relating to members of Parliament and members of State Legislatures but in other parliamentary enactments relating to members of Parliament the word ‘office’ has been used. Having regard to the provisions of the Constitution and the Representation of the People Act, 1951 as well as the Salary, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament Act, 1954 and the meaning that has been given to the expression ‘office’ in the decision of this Court, we are of the view that membership of Parliament is an ‘office’ inasmuch as it is a position carrying certain responsibilities which are of a public character and it has existence independent of the holder of the office. It must, therefore, be held that the member of Parliament holds an ‘office’.

The next question is whether a member of Parliament is authorised or required to perform any public duty by virtue of his office. As mentioned earlier, in R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, this Court said that though a member of the State Legislature is not performing any public duty either as directed by the Government or for the Government but he no doubt performs public duties cast on him by the Constitution and by his electorate and he discharges constitutional obligations for which he is remunerated fees under the Constitution.”

“In the 1988 Act, the expression ‘public duty’ has been defined in Section 2(b) to mean a duty in the discharge of which the State, the public or the community at large has an interest.”

“The Form of Oath or Affirmation which is required to be made by a member of Parliament (as prescribed in Third Schedule to the Constitution) is in these terms:

“I, A.B. having been elected (or nominated) a member of the Council of States (or the House of the People) do swear in the name of God/solemnly affirm that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the Constitution of India as by law established, that I will uphold the sovereignty and integrity of India and that I will faithfully discharge the duty upon which I am about to enter.”

“The words ‘faithfully discharge the duty upon which I am about to enter’ show that a member of Parliament is required to discharge certain duties after he is sworn in as a member of Parliament. Under the Constitution, the Union Executive is responsible to Parliament and members of Parliament act as watchdogs on the functioning of the Council of Ministers. In addition, a member of Parliament plays an important role in parliamentary proceedings, including enactment of legislation, which is sovereign function. The duties discharged by him are such in which the State, the public and the community at large have an interest and the said duties are, therefore, public duties. It can be said that a member of Parliament is authorised and required by the Constitution to perform these duties and the said duties are performed by him by virtue of his office.”

“We are, therefore, of the view that a member of Parliament holds an office and by virtue of such office he is required or authorised to perform duties and such duties are in the nature of public duties. A member of Parliament would, therefore, fall within the ambit of sub-clause (viii) of clause (c) of Section 2 of the 1988 Act.”

However, as suggested by the Court, no law has been enacted by the Parliament as yet specifying the competent authority to grant sanction for prosecution of a member of Parliament under Section 19(1) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. Therefore, in case a member of Parliament is sought to be prosecuted, the prosecuting agency before filing of a charge-sheet in respect of an offence punishable under Sections 7, 10, 11, 13 and 15 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, is required to obtain the permission of the Chairman, Rajya Sabha or Speaker, Lok Sabha, as the case may be. Accordingly, the Speaker, Lok Sabha is the competent authority to grant sanction for prosecution of members of Lok Sabha. During the Fifteenth Lok Sabha, the Speaker sanctioned prosecution of two members of Lok Sabha for offences punishable under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, on a request in this regard, received from the prosecuting/ investigating agencies.

Subsequent Developments

In November 1998, the Union Government filed a petition seeking review of the above judgment of the Supreme Court. On 16 December 1998, a five-judge Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court dismissed the Union Government's review petition on the ground of inordinate delay in filing of the same. The Bench was headed by Chief Justice A.S. Anand and consisted of Justices S.P. Bharucha, K. Venkatasami, B.N. Kirpal and S. Rajendra Babu. The Chief Justice, in his order, observed:

“There is inordinate delay in filing the review petition. The application seeking condonation of the delay contains no reasonable or satisfactory explanation. It is merely mentioned that the delay occurred due to paucity of staff... It is hardly any ground for condonation of delay. The application for condonation of delay is dismissed and as a consequence, the review petition is also dismissed as time barred.”

On 5 May 1999, the Supreme Court of India while disposing of all appeals to it moved by P.V. Narasimha Rao and others against the order of the Delhi High Court dismissing the appellants' revision petition against the order of Special Judge Ajit Bharihoke, Delhi High Court, inter alia, passed the following order:

“During the pendency of these appeals, as this Court had not granted any stay of further proceeding, the trial has already commenced and is continuing. In view of the questions already answered by the Constitution Bench on the issues posed before their Lordships, it is not necessary for us to go into any other questions raised in these appeals since those questions have to be answered by the learned Trial Judge bearing in mind the law laid down by the Constitution Bench in the aforesaid case.”

In pursuance of the above order of the Supreme Court, the alleged bribe takers moved applications for their discharge claiming immunity from prosecution in view of their parliamentary privilege under article 105(2) of the Constitution.

These applications were contested by the prosecution vide its reply dated 31 May 1999 wherein it was alleged that the judgment of Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court dated 17 April 1999, cannot be construed to have conferred immunity to alleged bribe takers (applicants) for the act of abetment of commission of offence punishable under Section 7 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. Therefore, this trial against them should proceed under Section 12 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. It was further alleged that the accused Shibu Soren, Suraj Mandal and Simon Marandi had also been charged with offence punishable under Section 193 IPC, which was allegedly committed during the pendency of investigation of this case. Thus, the aforesaid act having no direct nexus with the votes given by the said applicants in the Parliament, the trial on the aforesaid charge should proceed. It was also alleged that so far as accused Ajit Singh was concerned, Supreme Court had categorically held that he was not entitled to protection of article 105(2) of Constitution of India; therefore, there was no merit in his plea seeking immunity under article 105(2) of the Constitution of India as well as discharge in this case.

After consideration of the submissions by the applicants and the prosecution, the Special Judge, CBI delivered the following Judgment on 4 June 1999:

- (i) "All the applicants have been charged for having committed offence of conspiracy punishable under Section 120-B IPC read with Sections 7, 12 and 13(2) read with 13(1)(d) of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 as well as substantive offences punishable under Section 7 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 and 13(2) read with 13(1)(d) of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. Besides that, accused Suraj Mandal, Shibu Soren and Simon Marandi have also been charged for the offence punishable under Section 193 IPC. There is a factual difference pertaining to voting pattern on No-confidence Motion in the role of accused Ajit Singh and other applicant-accused persons. As per record, the applicants except Ajit Singh voted against the No-confidence Motion, whereas Ajit Singh voted in favour of No-confidence Motion..."
- (ii) 'It is obvious that as per majority view of the Constitution Bench of the Apex Court all the applicants except Ajit Singh are entitled to immunity conferred by article 105(2) of the Constitution of India. Now the question arises as to how far this immunity can be extended in case of the applicants who admittedly were members of Parliament at the relevant time.' Clue to answer to this question can be found in para nos. 134 to 137 of the judgment and para no. 143 of the judgment which reads as follows:

"Our conclusion is that the alleged bribe takers, other than Ajit Singh, have the protection of article 105(2) and are not answerable in a Court of Law for the alleged conspiracy and agreement. The charges against them must fail. Ajit Singh, not having cast a vote on the No-confidence Motion, derives no immunity from article 105(2)."
- (iii) "Perusal of the observation of Honourable Justice Bharucha in the above referred judgment makes it clear that majority view of the Constitution Bench of Honourable Supreme Court is that article 105(2) of the Constitution should be given a broader interpretation and immunity granted vide said article is not only available to the applicants against the criminal proceedings regarding their alleged act of taking bribe for voting against the No-confidence Motion, but it is also available against the alleged conspiracy by the bribe takers to defeat the No-confidence Motion by illegal means because the nexus between the alleged conspiracy and the bribe and No-confidence Motion is explicit. Conclusion of Honourable Justice Bharucha in para no. 143 of the judgment reported in (1998) 4 SCC 425 makes it clear that after analysing the facts of the case and Article 105(2) of the Constitution vis-a-vis the provisions of Prevention of Corruption Act, majority have concluded that alleged bribe takers other than Ajit Singh have protection of article 105(2) of the Constitution and they are not answerable in the Court of Law for the alleged conspiracy and agreement. The charges against them must fail... Thus conclusion of majority view of Constitution Bench is clear that applicants namely Suraj Mandal, Shibu Soren, Simon Marandi, Ram Lakhan Singh Yadav, Ram Sharan Yadav, Roshan Lal, Anadi Charan Das, Abhay Pratap Singh and Haji Gulam Mohammed Khan are entitled to immunity under article 105(2) of the Constitution, so far as the charges under section 120-B IPC, read with Sections 7, 12, and 13(2) read with 13(1)(d) of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 and substantive charges under Sections 7 and 13(2) read with 13(1)(d) of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 are concerned. Thus, in my view, they cannot be proceeded against the aforesaid charges and said charges must be dropped.”

- (iv) “Now the question arises, if the aforesaid immunity under article 105(2) of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 can be extended to accused Suraj Mandal, Shibu Soren and Simon Marandi who have charges for the offence punishable under Section 193 IPC. Allegations against them are that during the pendency of investigation of the present case, while writ petition no. 789/96 was pending disposal in Honourable High Court of Delhi in between February and April 1996 at Delhi, Ranchi and other places, said accused persons caused to bring false evidence into existence by fabricating or causing to fabricate the documents or records, i.e. to JMM Central Office, Ranchi in order to create an evidence to the effect that the amounts deposited in their accounts were actually donation received by the party and not the alleged bribe amount.”
- (v) “As per evidence collected by investigating officer, voting on No-confidence Motion was done in July 1993 and fabrication of the evidence have allegedly been done during February to April 1996 when the investigation of this case was going on. Considering such a long time gap between the voting and the alleged fabrication of evidence/record, it cannot be said that there is any nexus between the actual vote given by these accused persons in the Parliament and the fabrication. Alleged fabrication of the evidence is a subsequent act on the part of applicant accused persons not only to create a defence for use in judicial proceedings against them, but said fabricated evidence can be used as a defence against the accused persons who are being prosecuted for having conspired to abet the act of taking bribe by the alleged bribe takers. Thus, in my opinion, the charge under Section 193 IPC framed against Suraj Mandal, Shibu Soren and Simon Marandi may be having a remote connection to the other charges against them, but it has no direct nexus with the vote given by them in the Parliament. As such, aforesaid charges cannot be dropped. Immunity under article 105(2) of the Constitution is only in respect of anything said or any vote given by member of Parliament in the Parliament. But alleged act which is subject matter of charge under Section 193 IPC, has been committed outside the Parliament and after a lapse of more than two and half years from the vote given by these accused persons in the Parliament. Now, therefore, no nexus can be drawn between vote given by accused and fabrication. Thus, I am of the view that applicants can be tried for charges under Section 193 IPC...”.

- (vi) “His (Ajit Singh’s) role in the episode is different from the role of other alleged bribe takers. As per evidence collected during investigation, other alleged bribe takers had voted against the No-confidence Motion and they had allegedly received bribe in furtherance of conspiracy for defeating the Confidence Motion by voting against it. However, in the case of accused Ajit Singh as per his own contention he has voted in favour of No-confidence Motion, whereas charges against him are that he entered into a criminal conspiracy with others to defeat No-confidence Motion by illegal means and agreed to obtain illegal gratification other than this legal remuneration from the alleged bribe givers as a motive or reward for defeating the No-confidence Motion and in furtherance of said agreement he also accepted and obtained illegal gratification of Rs. 300 lakh for self as well as other Janata Dal (Ajit Group) MPs. If we analyse aforesaid charges framed against the accused, Ajit Singh’s alleged motive of his having entered into conspiracy and having accepted illegal gratification for self and others, was to defeat the No-confidence Motion by voting against it. However, admittedly he has voted in favour of No-confidence Motion, therefore, no nexus can be derived between the alleged motive of Ajit Singh for voting in favour of No-confidence Motion and his motive relating to conspiracy in question and acceptance of illegal gratification. Thus, in my view, immunity under article 105(2) cannot be extended to him. It may not be out of place to mention that after judgment of Constitution Bench was pronounced, Ajit Singh admittedly filed a review petition in Honourable Supreme Court. He admittedly took the plea in his review petition that he has actually voted in favour of No-confidence and he has been denied immunity by the judgment of Constitution Bench on mis-conception of the fact that he did not vote on No-confidence Motion. Said review petition was admittedly dismissed by Honourable Supreme Court. Mere fact that Honourable Supreme Court dismissed the review petition even after the fact of vote given by Ajit Singh on No-confidence Motion was brought to their notice, makes it clear that as per Apex Court, Ajit Singh is not entitled to the immunity under article 105(2) of the Constitution. Reason is obvious. The motive of vote given by Ajit Singh in favour of No-confidence Motion is entirely different from the motive of his having allegedly accepted the bribe. Thus no nexus could be drawn between the motive of Ajit Singh voting in favour of No-confidence Motion and his motive of entering into alleged conspiracy and taking illegal gratification. Thus, in my opinion, in view of categoric finding of majority view of Constitution Bench, Ajit Singh is not entitled to be discharged on the basis of immunity under article 105(2) of the Constitution of India.”

- (vii) “The act of abetment by alleged bribe takers has a direct nexus with their having accepted illegal gratification pursuant to the abetment as well as the motive behind the vote given in the Parliament. Therefore, in view of the majority view of the Constitution Bench, of Apex Court, immunity under article 105(2) of the Constitution also extends to the alleged act of conspiracy and abetment.”
- (viii) “In view of my discussion above, I conclude that all the applicants except Ajit Singh are entitled to immunity under article 105(2) of the Constitution in relation to charges under Section 120-B IPC read with Sections 7, 12 and 13(2) read with 13(1)(d) of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, but prosecution of accused persons Suraj Mandal, Shibu Soren and Simon Marandi shall proceed for offence punishable under Section 193 IPC. I further conclude that applicant Ajit Singh is not entitled to immunity under article 105(2) of the Constitution and his trial on charges framed against him shall proceed. As a result of above said conclusion, accused Ram Lakhan Singh Yadav, Ram Sharan Yadav, Roshan Lal, Anadi Charan Das, Abhay Pratap Singh, and Haji Gulam Mohammed Khan are hereby discharged and all the charges except under Section 193 IPC against accused Suraj Mandal, Shibu Soren and Simon Marandi are dropped.”

Privilege of Freedom from Arrest or Molestation

Need of the Privilege: The privilege of freedom from arrest in civil cases for the duration of the session and for a period of forty days before and after the session, like other privileges, is granted to members of Parliament in order that they may be able to perform their duties in Parliament without let or hindrance. The object of this privilege is “to secure the safe arrival and regular attendance of members on the scene of their parliamentary duties”.

Scope of the Privilege: A review of the development of this privilege reveals a tendency to confine it more narrowly to cases of civil character and to exclude not only every kind of criminal case, but also cases which, not strictly criminal, partake more of a criminal than of a civil character. This development is in conformity with the principle laid down by the Commons in a conference with the Lords in 1641 that “privilege of Parliament is granted in regard to the service of the Commonwealth and, is not to be used to the danger of the Commonwealth”.

In India, the exemption from arrest and detention in prison under civil process was conferred in 1925 on the members of legislative bodies by the Legislative Members Exemption Act<sup>111</sup>, which inserted section 135A in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. This section, subsequently adapted by the Adaptation of Laws Order, 1950<sup>112</sup> provides that a member of a Legislature is not liable to arrest or detention in prison under civil process during the continuance of any meeting of the House of Legislature or any committee thereof, of which he may be a member, and during fourteen days before and after such meeting. However, with the enforcement of the Constitution on 26 January 1950, the scope and duration of the privilege of freedom from arrest in India came to be the same as that obtaining in the United Kingdom<sup>113</sup>, i.e. forty days before and after a session of the House and not merely for fourteen days as provided in section 135A of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908<sup>114</sup>. Thus, the Madras High Court ruled:

There is immunity extending for a period of forty days prior to the meeting and forty days subsequent to the conclusion of the meeting for a member of Parliament from being arrested for a civil debt; that is, if there is a decree against him, or, if he is sought to be arrested before judgment, he can certainly claim the immunity and freedom from arrest. It is also clear that such immunity cannot extend or be contended to operate, where the member of Parliament is charged with an indictable offence<sup>115</sup>.

The arrest of a member of Parliament in civil proceedings during the period when he is exempted from such arrest is a breach of privilege and the member concerned is entitled to his release. In a case in the Rajasthan Vidhan Sabha, the House agreed with the report of its Committee of Privileges that the arrest of a member in revenue proceedings was a breach of privilege of the House, revenue proceedings being in the nature of civil proceedings<sup>116</sup>.

Freedom from arrest does not extend to criminal offences: The privilege of freedom from arrest “cannot extend or be contended to operate, where the member of Parliament is charged with an indictable offence<sup>117</sup>. The House will not allow even the sanctuary of its walls to protect a member from the process of criminal law though service of a criminal process on a member within the precincts of Parliament may be a breach of privilege<sup>118</sup>. A member released on parole cannot attend the sittings of the House<sup>119</sup>.

In a case where the petitioner, a member of the then Travancore-Cochin Legislative Assembly, was under arrest in connection with two criminal cases pending against him, the Travancore-Cochin High Court observed:

...It is clear from May’s Parliamentary Practice (15th Ed. p. 7S) that ‘the privilege of freedom from arrest is not claimed in respect of criminal offences or statutory detention' and that the said freedom is limited to civil causes, and has not been allowed to interfere with the administration of criminal justice or emergency legislation...

So long as the detention is legal...the danger of the petitioner losing his seat [under art. 190(4)] or the certainty of his losing his daily allowance cannot possibly form the foundation for relief against the normal or probable consequences of that detention<sup>120</sup>.

In the Dasaratha Deb Case (1952), the Committee of Privileges of the Lok Sabha inter alia held that the arrest of a member of Parliament in the course of administration of criminal justice did not constitute a breach of privilege of the House.

On 24 December 1969, a question of privilege was raised in the Lok Sabha regarding arrests of some members while they were stated to be on their way to attend the House. The Chair ruled that since the members were arrested under the provisions of the Indian Penal Code and had pleaded guilty, no question of privilege was involved<sup>121</sup>.

Any investigation outside Parliament of anything that a member says or does in the discharge of his duties as a member of Parliament would amount to a serious interference with the member's right to carry out his duties as such member. References made in the First Information Report and affidavits filed in court by the Central Bureau of Investigation to the disclosures made by a member in the Lok Sabha and the documents laid by him on the Table of the House have been deprecated by the Chair<sup>122</sup>. But where disclosures made by a member on the floor of the House indicate that he is in possession of vital information in a criminal case which is under investigation by the police, the Committee of Privileges, Rajya Sabha, recommended the following procedure—

If in a case a member states something on the floor of the House which may be directly relevant to criminal investigation and is, in the opinion of the investigating authorities, of vital importance to them as positive evidence, the investigating authority may make a report to the Minister of Home Affairs accordingly. If the Minister is satisfied that the matter requires seeking the assistance of the member concerned, he would request the member through the Chairman to meet him. If the member agrees to give the required information the Home Minister will use it in a manner which will not conflict with any parliamentary right of the member. If, however, the member refuses to respond to the Home Minister's request, the matter should be allowed to rest there<sup>123</sup>.

In pursuance of the recommendations of the Committee, suitable instructions were issued by the Ministry of Home Affairs to all State Governments and Union Territory Administrations<sup>124</sup>.

Freedom from arrest not claimed in respect of Preventive Detention: The privilege of freedom from arrest does not extend to preventive arrest or detention under statutory authority by executive order.

In Deshpande Case (1952), the Committee of Privileges of Lok Sabha reported that the arrest of a member under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, did not constitute a breach of the privileges of the House. The Committee inter alia observed:

Preventive detention is in its essence as much a penal measure as any arrest by the police, or under an order of a Magistrate, on suspicion of the commission of a crime, or in course of, or as a result of, the proceedings under the relevant provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code and no substantial distinction can be drawn on the ground that preventive detention may proceed merely on suspicion and not on the basis of the commission of an offence on the part of the person directed to be detained. The Constitution authorizes preventive detention in the interests of the State and it is well settled that “the privilege of Parliament is granted in regard to the service of the Commonwealth and is not to be used to the danger of the Commonwealth”, and further every detention by whatever name it is called—preventive, punitive or any other, as was pointed out by the Committee of Privileges in the House of Commons in Ramsay’s Case, has this in common: ‘the protection of community as a whole’...

The above position has also been reiterated by courts of law in India. The Calcutta High Court, inter alia, observed:

Preventive detention partakes more of a criminal than of a civil character. The Preventive Detention Act only allows persons to be detained who are dangerous or are likely to be dangerous to the State. It is true that such orders are made when criminal charge’s possibly could not be established but the basis of the orders are a suspicion of nefarious and criminal or treasonable activities<sup>125</sup>...

In a case before the Madras High Court, a member of the Madras Legislative Assembly, who was in detention under the Maintenance of Public Order Act when he received the summons for a session of the Madras Legislative Assembly, prayed to the court for the issue of a writ by way of mandamus or other appropriate writ to declare and enforce his right to attend the sittings of the Madras Legislative Assembly either freely or with such restrictions as might be reasonably imposed. The Court held that a member could not claim any privilege from arrest and detention under the preventive detention legislation and observed:

Once a member of a Legislative Assembly is arrested and lawfully detained, though without actual trial under any Preventive Detention Act, there can be no doubt that under the law as it stands, he cannot be permitted to attend the sittings of the House. A declaration by us that he is entitled to do so, even under armed escort, is entirely out of the question<sup>126</sup>.

In this context, the Supreme Court observed:

Rights of a member of Parliament to attend the session of Parliament, to participate in the debate and to record his vote are not constitutional rights in the strict sense of the term and quite clearly, they are not fundamental rights at all. So far as a valid order of detention is concerned, a member of Parliament can claim no special status higher than that of an ordinary citizen<sup>127</sup>.

Exemption from Attending as Witness in Courts

The privilege of exemption from attending as a witness in a court is akin to the privilege of freedom from arrest in a civil case and is based on the principle that attendance of a member in the House takes precedence over all other obligations and that the House has the paramount right and prior claim to the attendance and service of its members.

In the Madras Legislative Assembly, a member sought to raise a question of privilege that he had been served with a subpoena to attend a court as a witness when the Assembly was in session. The Chair took pleasure of the House whether it would give leave to the member to attend to the court as a witness. On the House not agreeing, the Chair observed that the member could claim privilege and remain in the House<sup>128</sup>.

On 1 May 1974, the Speaker of the Lok Sabha received a notice from the Supreme Court in the matter of the Special Reference under article 143 of the Constitution regarding Presidential election. The notice required the Speaker to appear before the Court through an Advocate of the Court and take such part in the proceedings before the Supreme Court as he may deem fit. The General Purposes Committee before whom the matter was placed advised that neither Lok Sabha nor the Speaker should enter appearance in this matter. The House agreed with this decision and the Supreme Court was informed accordingly<sup>129</sup>.

A similar notice from the Supreme Court was also received by the Chairman, Rajya Sabha. As advised by its General Purposes Committee no action was taken in the matter by the Rajya Sabha<sup>130</sup>.

In another case, the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee received summons from a court regarding a suit involving certain observations made in a report of that Committee. The Speaker of Lok Sabha while placing the matter before the House on 1 August 1975, advised the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee to ignore the summons and not to put in any appearance in the court<sup>131</sup>.

Immunity from Service of Legal Process and Arrest within the Precincts of the House

No arrest can be made within the precincts of the House nor a legal process, civil or criminal, served without obtaining the permission of the Speaker, and this permission is necessary whether the House is in session or not<sup>132</sup>. Precincts of the House have been defined in the Rule<sup>133</sup>.

The Punjab Vidhan Sabha, in a case where a police officer attempted to execute a warrant of arrest against a member within the precincts of the House without first obtaining the leave of the House, held the police officer guilty of breach of privilege. The police officer concerned tendered an unqualified apology which was accepted by the House<sup>134</sup>.

However, in a case of arrest of employees of the Legislature Secretariat within the precincts of the House, the Speaker of the Kerala Legislative Assembly, disallowing the question of privilege, ruled:

The prohibition against making arrest, without obtaining the permission of the Speaker, from the precincts of the House is applicable only to the members of the Assembly. I do not think it is possible, nor is it desirable to extend this privilege to persons other than the members, since it would have the effect of putting unnecessary restrictions and impediments in the due process of law<sup>135</sup>.

The Government of India have issued instructions to the authorities concerned to the effect that courts of law should not seek to serve a legal process, civil or criminal, on members of Parliament through the Speaker or the Secretariat. The appropriate procedure is for the summons to be served direct on the member concerned outside the precincts of Parliament, i.e., at their residence or at some other place<sup>136</sup>.

Instructions have also been issued by the Government of India to the police and other authorities concerned, through the State Governments and Administrations, to the effect that requests for seeking the permission of the Speaker to make arrests within the precincts of the House should not be made by the authorities concerned as a matter of routine. Such requests should be confined only to urgent cases where the matter cannot wait till the House adjourns for the day. The request in each case should be signed by an officer not below the rank of a Deputy Inspector-General of Police and should state the reasons why arrest within the precincts of the House is necessary<sup>137</sup>.

House to be informed of the Arrest, Detention, Conviction and Release of Members

When a member is arrested on a criminal charge or for a criminal offence or is sentenced to imprisonment by a court or is detained under an executive order, the committing judge, magistrate or executive authority, as the case may be, must immediately intimate such fact to the Speaker indicating the reasons for the arrest, detention or conviction, as the case may be, as also the place of detention or imprisonment of the member, in a prescribed form. In Jambuwant Dhote Case (1973), the Committee of Privileges recommended that when a member is arrested and detained under the Maintenance of Internal Security Act, 1971, or under any other law providing for preventive detention, the authorities should, besides sending to the Speaker immediate information regarding the arrest and detention of the member together with the reasons for arrest and detention, send a copy of the detailed 'grounds' to the Speaker, Lok Sabha, simultaneously, when those grounds are supplied to the detainee as per law for preventive detention<sup>138</sup>. When a member is arrested and after conviction released on bail pending an appeal or is otherwise released, such fact is also required to be intimated to the Speaker by the authority concerned in the prescribed form<sup>139</sup>.

Even when a member has not been arrested within the strict legal meaning of the term "arrest" but has been detained by the police for sometime and then let off, failure on the part of the authorities concerned to send the necessary intimation in the matter to the Speaker has been held to constitute, technically, a breach of privilege of the House<sup>140</sup>.

It is the committing judge or magistrate who is to inform the Speaker about the arrest or detention or conviction of a member, because it is he who has prevented the member from attending the House and discharging his duty. Where a panel of judges has awarded the punishment, it is the senior-most judge who has to intimate the fact. Only a person in lawful authority may arrest or detain any person and the House has,

The Government of India have advised the State Governments and Administrations that when a member was released from jail on any ground, for example, on bail pending appeal or on the sentence being set aside on appeal or on the remission of sentence by Government on appeal or on termination of preventive detention, such release should invariably be communicated to the Speaker. When a member, who is under detention or is undergoing a sentence of imprisonment, is transferred from one jail to another, the change in the place of detention or imprisonment is also required to be intimated to the Speaker. Ministry of Home Affairs, Letter No. 35/2/57-P. II, 21 May 1958.

therefore, to see on receipt of the information whether the person had the authority to prevent a member from functioning.

In case a fine is imposed on a member, it is not incumbent on the authorities to send such intimation. Where it is so sent by an officer of a court e.g. the Registrar, it is not contrary to the Rules.

As soon as the intimation regarding the arrest, conviction or release of a member is received by the Speaker, he reads it out in the House if it is in session<sup>141</sup>. If the House is not in session, he directs that the information be published in the Bulletin for the information of the members<sup>142</sup>.

When the intimation of the release of a member either on bail or by discharge on appeal is received before the House has been informed of the original arrest, the fact of his arrest, or his subsequent release or discharge need not be intimated to the House by the Speaker<sup>143</sup>.

If a member has started attending the House before the House has been informed of his release, such intimation is not read out in the House, but is published in the Bulletin for the information of the members.

The failure on the part of a judge or a magistrate or other authority to inform the House of the arrest, detention or imprisonment of a member would constitute a breach of the privileges of the House.

On 1 March 1950, a member raised a question of privilege in the House regarding the removal from Delhi of another member, under the East Punjab Public Safety Act, 1949, without communicating the fact to the Speaker of the House. The matter was discussed by the House and when the Government expressed their regret, the House, on a motion moved by a member, decided to drop the matter<sup>144</sup>.

The Hyderabad Legislative Assembly held a sub-inspector of police guilty of breach of privilege for failure to intimate to the Speaker of the Assembly the arrest of a member. The sub-inspector was called to the Bar of the Andhra Pradesh Legislative Assembly (the principal successor of the Hyderabad Legislative Assembly on reorganization of States) where he tendered an unconditional apology<sup>145</sup>.

Although the failure to intimate to the Speaker the place of imprisonment or detention of a member, or his transfer from one jail to another or his release from custody would not by itself involve a breach of privilege, it would nevertheless be non-compliance with an established convention in this regard<sup>146</sup>.

146. Minutes recorded by Speaker Ayyangar on 23 August, 1957 and Ministry of Home Affairs Letter No. 35/2/57-P. II, 21 May 1958, to all State Governments and Administrations.

It has been held by the Committee of Privileges in the Dasaratha Deb Case (1952), that where a member is arrested in the course of administration of criminal justice and immediately released on bail, there is no duty on the part of the magistrate concerned to inform the House. It was also held by the Committee in their Fourth Report (1958) that no breach of privilege had been committed by the authorities concerned in not sending intimation to the Speaker of the release of a member on bail pending trial.

If a member is bound over under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for keeping the peace, it is not necessary for the magistrate passing the order to inform the Speaker of the matter since such an order does not prevent the member concerned from attending the sittings of the House.

In order to determine whether in a particular case the required intimation has been immediately sent to the Speaker, all the circumstances of that case are taken into account. The Committee of Privileges have held that “while it is well recognized that such intimation should be given promptly, it is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule on the subject. Much would depend upon the surrounding circumstances of each case<sup>147</sup>.”

In case where delays have occurred in sending the required intimation to the Speaker, the authorities concerned have expressed regret for the same<sup>148</sup>.

Communications from a Member in Custody to the Speaker or the Chairperson of a Parliamentary Committee not to be Withheld

It is a breach of privilege to withhold any communication addressed by a member in custody to the Speaker, Secretary-General or the Chairperson of a Parliamentary Committee. No breach of privilege is, however, involved where the government withholds a letter written from jail by a member to another member<sup>149</sup>. The Madras High Court in 1952 held that a member of a Legislature, in detention, was “entitled to the right of correspondence with the Legislature, and to make representations to the Speaker and the Chairman of the Committee of Privileges and no executive authority has any right to withhold such correspondence<sup>150</sup>.”

The Committee of Privileges recommended in 1958 that provisions might be incorporated in the Jail Codes, Security of Prisoners Rules, etc. of State Governments and Administrations to the effect that all communications addressed by a member of Parliament, under arrest or detention or imprisonment for security or other reasons, to the Speaker of Lok Sabha or the Chairman of Rajya Sabha, as the case may be, or to the Chairperson of a Parliamentary Committee or of a Joint Committee of both

In the interests of uniformity, the Committee also suggested making of similar provisions in respect of members of the State Legislatures.

The Ministry of Home Affairs accordingly advised all State Governments and Administrations to make necessary provisions in their relevant rules<sup>152</sup>.

Use of Handcuffs

There is no privilege specifically exempting a member of Parliament, who is under arrest on a criminal charge, from being handcuffed<sup>153</sup>. The Government of India have, however, issued instructions to the police and other authorities concerned, through the State Governments and Administrations, to the effect that persons in police custody and prisoners, whether under trial or convicts, should not be handcuffed as a matter of routine and that the use of handcuffs should be restricted to cases where the prisoner is a desperate character or where there are reasonable grounds to believe that he will use violence or attempt to escape or where there are other similar reasons<sup>154</sup>.

Extension of Privilege of Freedom from Arrest and Molestation to Witnesses, Petitioners, etc.

Upon the same principle which applies to members of Parliament, the privilege of freedom from arrest and molestation has been extended to witnesses summoned to attend before the House or any Committee thereof, and to others in personal attendance upon the business of the House, such as counsel of witnesses of parties appearing before the House or a Committee, in coming, staying and returning; and to officers of the House, in immediate attendance upon the service of Parliament<sup>155</sup>.

Consequently, it is contempt of the House to arrest or procure the arrest on a civil process of witnesses, petitioners or other persons summoned to attend the House or any Committee thereof, while going to, attending, or returning from the House or any Committee of the House<sup>156</sup>. Similarly, to arrest or procure the arrest of an officer of the House in immediate attendance upon the service of the House, except on a criminal charge, is a contempt of the House<sup>157</sup>.

Power of the House to Punish for Breach of Privilege or Contempt and Commit to Custody and Prison

Each House of Parliament, as also a House of the Legislature of a State, has the power to secure the attendance of persons on matters of privilege and to punish for breach of privilege or contempt of the House and commit the offender to custody or prison.

Parliament and State Legislatures possess not only the power to punish for contempt but have also the right to judge for themselves what is contempt or what is not, as without this the privilege of punishing for contempt would be worthless<sup>158</sup>.

The term “breach of privilege” means a disregard of any of the rights, privileges and immunities either of members of Parliament individually, or of the House in its collective capacity. After due inquiry, a breach of privilege is punished in the same way as courts of law punish for contempt of their dignity or authority.

In practice, the term “breach of privilege” is also applied to contempts generally. It is, however, properly applicable only to that type of contempt which consists in the violation or disregard of the privileges of the House or the individual members thereof.

Contempt of the House may be defined generally as “any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results, even though there is no precedent of the offence”<sup>159</sup>. Hence, if any act, though not tending directly to obstruct or impede the House in the performance of its functions, has a tendency to produce this result indirectly by bringing the House into odium, contempt or ridicule or by lowering its authority, it constitutes a contempt. Further, the House may punish not only contempts “arising out of facts of which the ordinary courts will take cognizance, but also those of which they cannot, such as contemptuous insults, gross calumny or foul epithets by word of mouth not within the category of actionable slander or threat of bodily injury”<sup>160</sup>.

Contempts of Parliament may, however, vary greatly in their nature and in their gravity. At one extreme they may consist in little more than vulgar and irresponsible abuse; at the other they may constitute grave attacks undermining the very institution of Parliament itself<sup>161</sup>. Such offences are usually described as breaches of privilege, but this is not strictly correct. Whereas all breaches of privilege are contempts of the House whose privileges are violated, a person may be guilty of a contempt of the House even though he does not violate any of the privileges of the House, e.g. when he disobeys an order to attend a committee or publishes reflections on the character or conduct of a member in his capacity as a member.<sup>162</sup>

The power of the House to punish for contempt or breach of privilege has been aptly described as the “keystone of parliamentary privilege” and is considered necessary to enable the House to discharge its functions and safeguard its authority and privilege<sup>163</sup>. This power is akin in nature and owes its origin to the powers possessed by the courts of law to punish for contempt. Without such a power, the House “would sink into utter contempt and inefficiency”<sup>164</sup>.

The power of the Legislature to punish for contempt is of recent origin in this country. The Act of 1919 which conferred certain privileges on the members of the Indian Legislature, did not give the Legislature any power to punish for contempt or breach of privilege<sup>165</sup>. The Government of India Act, 1935, widened the ambit of privileges but it expressly stated that nothing in that Act or any other Indian Act, should be construed as conferring, or empowering the Federal Legislature to confer, on either Chamber or on both Chambers sitting together, or on any Committee or Office of the Legislature, the status of a court, or any punitive or disciplinary powers other than a power to remove or exclude persons infringing the rules or standing orders, or otherwise behaving in a disorderly manner<sup>166</sup>. With the commencement of the Constitution, however, the power to punish for contempt or breach of privilege and to commit the offender to custody or prison was conferred on the Houses of Parliament and State Legislatures, and was upheld by the Bombay High Court in 1957, when Coyajee, acting Chief Justice, inter alia, observed:

...the framers of the Constitution intended the House alone to be sole judge on a question of admitted privilege. To my mind, it is quite clear, therefore, that under article 194(3), when it prescribed that the privileges shall be those of the House of Commons of the Parliament of United Kingdom, the power to punish for contempt is expressly conferred on the House in clear and unequivocal terms and therefore it must follow that the exercise of that power is identical with that of the House of Commons.

And further:

...privilege is enjoyed by the House of Commons of committing for contempt, the most important ingredient of that right is of committing and arresting by a general warrant. Therefore, it cannot be contended that if in terms, the powers of the House of Commons are conferred, not by a statute but by the Constitution on a House of Legislature in India, the right to commit by a general warrant is a mere incident of the power to commit of the House of Commons and does not pass to the Legislature on whom the same power is conferred, because when the power is conferred, it is the power of the superior court, namely a Court of Record and the powers of the Court of Record or the superior court to issue a warrant must belong to the House of Commons and therefore it follows that such power to issue the warrant goes with the power<sup>167</sup>.

This position was later reiterated by the Assam High Court in 1958:

It is well established now that the House of Commons in England has certain well-defined rights and privileges, honoured and sanctified by tradition and custom, one of the most important of them being the right to commit a person for contempt of its high authority and for breach of its privileges. This power extends not merely to members of the House but even to persons outside it and when the House acts in vindication of these rights and privileges, the courts of the land have no right to interfere. The proper forum is the House itself where the person affected can claim the redress of his rights. By virtue of the Indian Constitution, these powers and privileges are enjoyed by Houses of Parliament in India and the Houses of State Legislature<sup>168</sup>.

The power to secure the attendance of persons on matters of privilege, including the power to send for supposed offenders in custody, was exercised by the Uttar Pradesh Vidhan Sabha in 1952.

Homi D. Mistry, the then acting Editor of Blitz, a weekly news magazine, was arrested by the police on 11 March 1952<sup>169</sup>, at Bombay in pursuance of a warrant issued by the Speaker of the Assembly to enforce the presence of Mistry before the House on 19 March 1952, to answer a charge of breach of privilege. Mistry was kept in custody at Lucknow till 18 March 1952, when he was released in pursuance of an order of the Supreme Court on a habeas corpus petition<sup>170</sup> on the ground that Mistry had not been produced before a magistrate within 24 hours of his arrest which contravened the provisions of article 22(2). In a civil suit subsequently filed by Mistry, claiming damages for wrongful arrest and detention, the acting Chief Justice, Coyajee of the Bombay High Court held, inter alia, that the House had power to order the supposed offender to be arrested and brought before the Bar of the House to answer a charge of breach of privilege. In this connection, the Court observed:

...The Legislative Assembly of Uttar Pradesh was fully entitled to protect its dignity by the exercise of the privilege expressly conferred on it under article 194 and in exercise of that privilege it issued a warrant which on the face of it states that it is for contempt of the House and therefore that warrant being a general warrant is not subject to scrutiny and that it can be validly executed...<sup>171</sup>

Nafisul Hassan*, proceeded entirely on a concession of counsel and cannot be regarded as a considered opinion on the subject".

The power to commit to prison for contempt or breach of privilege has been exercised by Parliament and State Legislatures in India<sup>172</sup>.

If contempt is committed in the immediate presence of the House, the contemner may not be heard. He is taken into custody immediately by the Additional Secretary, Security and detained for the minimum time necessary for interrogation. The contemner may apologize and the House may be pleased to accept it and let him off. If the contemner has to be punished, it can be done by the House only. For this purpose, a motion is moved by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs. The motion may specify the period of imprisonment and the place or jail where the accused is to be lodged. On the motion being adopted by the House, a warrant of commitment addressed to the Superintendent in-charge of the jail is signed by the Speaker. The accused is, thereafter, taken to the place of imprisonment by the Additional Secretary, Security.

Period of Imprisonment

The period for which the House can commit an offender to custody or prison for contempt is limited by the duration of the session of the House<sup>173</sup>. A prisoner is automatically entitled to release when the House is prorogued. Where, however, the House considers that a prisoner, who has been released on account of prorogation, has not been sufficiently punished, he may be committed again in the next session and detained until the House is satisfied.

Forms of Warrants

No specific form to which warrants issued by the Speaker by order of the House should conform, is prescribed. In 1957, Coyajee, A.C.J. of the Bombay High Court observed<sup>174</sup>:

...the warrant in this case on a reading of it is clearly a general warrant indicating that the party was required in connection with a contempt proceedings and, therefore, no court would be entitled to scrutinize such a warrant and decide whether it was a proper and valid warrant or not.

Powers for the Execution of Warrants

Each House has the power to enforce its orders, including the power for its officers to break open the doors of a House for that purpose, when necessary, and execute its warrants in connection with contempt proceedings<sup>175</sup>. It can also direct the civil authorities to aid and assist in the execution of a warrant issued by its Presiding Officer under the authority of the House. Every branch of the civil government is considered by the House as bound to assist, when required, in executing the warrants and orders of the House.

In the Bombay High Court it was argued that the execution of a warrant issued by the Speaker could be effected only through the machinery of the Legislature and not by employing a police officer or by seeking the aid of other officers of a State Government. Coyajee, A.C.J. observed<sup>176</sup>:

Use of force for the purpose of enforcing the orders of the Assembly is an absolute ingredient of the privilege to commit and punish for contempt and merely because there are no officers corresponding to that of the Sergeant at Arms, it does not follow that the content of the privilege is thereby lessened or destroyed, but in my opinion.. remains entirely unaffected... it cannot be that because of the lack of such prescribed machinery the Assembly has no power to implement its decision in connection with contempt and punishment... even if it is addressed to the Sergeant at Arms by the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Sergeant at Arms would take in aid in execution of the warrant through the police or even any civilian... an officer of the House, whoever he may be, can take other aid.

In the case of Lok Sabha, summons, letters, etc., have been served through the agency of Union or State Governments. When summons are issued to a witness or a person accused of breach of privilege or contempt of the House, to appear before the Committee of Privileges of Lok Sabha, a duplicate copy of the summons is served on him through the agency of the State Government concerned, the original copy of the summons being sent to the person concerned direct by registered post.

This procedure was adopted by the Committee on the Conduct of a Member in the Mudgal Case (1951) for calling witness to appear before the Committee. The procedure was also followed in the Blitz Case (1961) while summoning the Editor of the Blitz, to appear at the bar of the House to receive the reprimand for committing a breach of privilege and contempt of the House.

The agency of the Government of Punjab was utilised for delivering a duplicate copy of a letter to H.L. Sally asking him to submit his written statement to and personally appear before the Committee of Privileges (1966)<sup>177</sup>.

When government officers accused of committing a breach of privilege or contempt of the House are asked to appear before the Committee of Privileges, letters for securing their attendance are sent to the Ministry/ Department concerned, requesting them to direct the officer concerned to present himself before the Committee<sup>178</sup>.

Protection to Officers Executing Orders of the House

Warrants for commitment issued by the Speaker by order of the House provide protection to the officers acting thereunder against actions for trespass, assault, or false imprisonment, unless the causes of commitment stated in the warrant appear to be beyond the jurisdiction of the House. If the officer does not exceed his authority, he will be protected by the courts, even if the warrants are not technically formal according to the rules by which the warrants of inferior courts are tested. In this regard, Coyajee, A.C.J. of the Bombay High Court, observed<sup>179</sup>:

...all officers or anyone else aiding in the execution of the writ would be protected, because as laid down by May, both Houses consider every branch of the civil Government is bound to assist when required, in executing their warrants and orders, and have repeatedly required such assistance.

Form of Punishment for Breach of Privilege or Contempt

In cases where the offence of breach of privilege or contempt is not so serious as to warrant the imprisonment of the offender by way of punishment, the person concerned may be summoned to the bar of the House and admonished or reprimanded by the Speaker by order of the House. Admonition is the mildest form of punishment, whereas reprimand<sup>180</sup> is the more serious mark of the displeasure of the House. In Lok Sabha, there have been two cases of persons having been summoned to the bar of the House and reprimanded by the Speaker—one for breach of privilege and contempt of the House, for a libellous despatch appearing in a weekly magazine<sup>181</sup>, and the other for contempt of the House in deliberately misrepresenting facts and giving false evidence before a Parliamentary Committee<sup>182</sup>. In another case, two police officers of the State of Maharashtra were summoned to the bar of the House to answer the charge of breach of privilege and contempt of the House for allegedly assaulting and abusing a member<sup>183</sup>. In one case, a former Secretary-General of Lok Sabha was admonished without being summoned to the bar of the House, through a resolution adopted in the House, for having cast aspersions on the Speaker, Lok Sabha in an interview telecast on a TV News Channel<sup>184</sup>. The two officers expressed apologies to the member concerned and to the House for whatever happened on that

180. The punitive power of reprimand was also exercised by the House in a case which though did not involve breach of privilege or contempt of the House but related to misconduct by a member. In the case relating to allegations of misconduct in the implementation of MPLAD Scheme against some members of Lok Sabha, motion moved by the Leader of the House agreeing with the recommendation made by the Committee to Inquire into the matter, reprimanding the members was adopted by the House on 20 March, 2006. day. In view of the apologies tendered by them, the House decided to treat the matter as closed.

In Rajya Sabha also there has been a case where three persons—joint authors of a book—were summoned to the bar of the House and reprimanded by the Chairman for describing in the said book the Finance Bill, 1980 as Finance Act, 1980, before it had received the assent of the President<sup>185</sup>.

Prosecution of Offenders: In the case of a breach of privilege which is also an offence at law, the House may, if it thinks that the punishment which it has the power to inflict would not be adequate to the offence, or where for any other reason, the House feels that a proceeding at law is necessary, either as a substitute for, or in addition to, its own proceeding, direct the prosecution of the offender in a court of law.

Lok Sabha, in the case of a Government Officer, directed that in addition to the reprimand administered to him, the Government should take departmental action against him. Subsequently, on 25 April 1973, the Minister of Steel and Mines informed the House that certain constitutional difficulties had arisen in implementing the second part of the Resolution adopted by the House. The matter was, therefore, reviewed by the Committee on Privileges and upon its recommendations, the House adopted another resolution on 29 November 1973, rescinding the latter part of its earlier resolution of 2 December 1970<sup>186</sup>.

In another case, a visitor was punished for shouting slogans in the Public Gallery and for possessing on his person two pistols and a cracker. Besides awarding punishment of one month's rigorous imprisonment for contempt of the House, the motion adopted by the House provided that the punishment would be without prejudice to any other punishment under the law. The matter was subsequently referred to the police authorities under the orders of the Speaker<sup>187</sup>.

In two other cases in Lok Sabha, visitors who were carrying daggers and explosives on their persons were punished with rigorous imprisonment without prejudice to any other action to which they were liable under the law. Written reports were subsequently lodged in Police Station by the Watch and Ward Officer of Lok Sabha with the permission of the Speaker<sup>188</sup>.

Punishment of Members: In the case of its own members, two other punishments are also available to the House by which it can express its displeasure more strongly than by admonition or reprimand, namely, suspension from the service of the House and expulsion.

On 8 June 1951, a motion for appointment of a Committee to investigate the conduct and activities of a member of Lok Sabha was adopted. The Committee held that the conduct of the member was derogatory to the dignity of the House and inconsistent with the standard which Parliament was entitled to expect from its members.

In pursuance of the report of the Committee, a motion was brought before the House on 24 September 1951, to expel the member from the House. The member, after participating in the debate, submitted his resignation to the Deputy Speaker. The House deprecated the attempt of the member to circumvent the effect of the motion and unanimously adopted the following amended motion on 25 September 1951 —

“That this House, having considered the Report of the Committee appointed on the 8th June 1951, to investigate the conduct of Shri H.G. Mudgal, Member of Parliament, accepts the findings of the Committee that the conduct of Shri Mudgal is derogatory to the dignity of the House and inconsistent with the standard which Parliament is entitled to expect from its members, and resolves that Shri Mudgal deserved expulsion from the House and further that the terms of the resignation letter he has given to the Deputy Speaker at the conclusion of his statement constitute a contempt of this House which only aggravates his offence”<sup>189</sup>.

On 18 November 1977, a motion was adopted by the House referring to the Committee of Privileges a question of breach of privilege and contempt of the House against Indira Gandhi, former Prime Minister, and others regarding obstruction, intimidation, harassment and institution of false cases by Indira Gandhi and others against certain officials who were collecting information for answer to a certain question in the House during the previous Lok Sabha.

The Committee of Privileges were of the view that Indira Gandhi had committed a breach of privilege and contempt of the House by causing obstruction, intimidation, harassment and institution of false cases against the concerned officers who were collecting information for answer to a certain question in the House. The Committee recommended that Indira Gandhi deserved punishment for the serious breach of privilege and contempt of the House committed by her but left it to the collective wisdom of the House to award such punishment as it may deem fit.

On 19 December 1978, the House adopted a motion resolving that Indira Gandhi be committed to jail till the prorogation of the House and also be expelled from the membership of the House for the serious breach of privilege and contempt of the House committed by her<sup>190</sup>.

A member of the Maharashtra Legislative Assembly was expelled from the House—Maharashtra L.A. Deb., 13-8-1964, pp. 12-28.

In March, 1966, two members of the Madhya Pradesh Legislative Assembly were expelled, and their seats were declared vacant. On writ petitions by the two ex-M.L.As., the Madhya Pradesh High Court upheld their expulsion.

On 7 May 1981, the Seventh Lok Sabha, however, rescinded the motion adopted by the Sixth Lok Sabha on 19 December 1978 by adopting the following resolution<sup>191</sup>.

“Whereas the Sixth Lok Sabha by a Resolution adopted on 19 December 1978, agreed with the ...recommendations and findings of the Committee (of Privileges) and on the basis thereof held Shrimati Indira Gandhi, Shri R.K. Dhawan and Shri D. Sen guilty of breach of privilege of the House and inflicted on them the maximum penalty possible in violation of the principle of natural justice.

* * * *

Now therefore this House resolves and declares that:

- (a) the said proceedings of the Committee and the House shall not constitute a precedent in the law of parliamentary privileges;
- (b) the findings of the Committee and the decision of the House are inconsistent with and violative of the well-accepted principles of the law of parliamentary privilege and the basic safeguards assured to all and enshrined in the Constitution; and
- (c) Smt. Indira Gandhi, Shri R.K. Dhawan and Shri D. Sen were innocent of the charges levelled against them.

And accordingly this House:

rescinds the resolution adopted by the Sixth Lok Sabha on the 19th December 1978.”

After the expulsion of Indira Gandhi, C.M. Stephen, Leader of the Opposition in Lok Sabha, had raised certain legal and constitutional issues before the Election Commission who called a public hearing and after hearing the various points of view put before him by the various political parties and individuals, made the following order—

“Sections 149(1) and 150 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, deal with filling up of casual vacancies in the House of the People and a State Legislative Assembly, respectively. There are thus three categories mentioned in these sections in which a casual vacancy may arise, namely:—

- (1) the seat becoming vacant;
- (2) the seat declared vacant; and
- (3) the election declared void.

These sections do not specify the circumstances in which a seat may become vacant or be declared vacant or void. Clauses (1) to (3) of article 101 of the Constitution deal with cases of seats becoming vacant, and clause (4) of article 101 deals with cases of seats being declared vacant. [Articles 190 and 191 of the Constitution correspond for State Legislative Assemblies]. It is not correct to say that these articles of the Constitution are exhaustive in their operation and do not admit of any other contingencies in which a seat may be deemed to have become vacant or may be declared vacant. Death is a contingency in which a seat becomes vacant; but it is not specified in this article. In contradiction, article 62(2) of the Constitution specifically mentions death as one of the contingencies in which a vacancy may arise in the office of the President. The election of a returned candidate may be declared void on the grounds other than the grounds of disqualification for membership in the House of the People as envisaged in article 102 of the Constitution. An election can be declared void if: (i) the nomination of a returned candidate has been improperly accepted; (ii) the nomination of a defeated candidate is improperly rejected; (iii) votes have been improperly received, accepted, refused or rejected materially affecting the result of the election; or (iv) if a returned candidate has not taken the oath as required under article 84(a) of the Constitution. If articles 101 and 102 are to be treated as exhaustive and section 149 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, is to be completely correlated with the provisions of these articles only, the other contingencies which result in the vacation of a seat or the election being declared void as stated above cannot be given effect to under section 149.

Article 105(3) deals with the powers, privileges and immunities of each House of Parliament and of the members and the Committees of each House and provides further that until defined by law, those powers, privileges and immunities shall be those of the House of Commons of the Parliament of the United Kingdom and of its members and Committees at the commencement of the Constitution. The expression “in other respect” used in that article clearly implies the wide scope of the field of its operation. As we have seen earlier, actions of different authorities under the Constitution and the Representation of the People Act can result in a seat becoming vacant or a seat being declared vacant or void. This being so, article 101 or 102 are not exhaustive and article 105 should be regarded as supplemental to them in the matter of a further contingency in which a seat may become vacant by reason of expulsion.”

“Notwithstanding the judgement of the Punjab and Haryana High Court in Shri Hardwari Lal’s case, the Lok Sabha has asserted its power to expel a member. The Election Commission is required under section 149 of the representation of the People Act, 1951, to implement the decision of the House and to give effect to the order of expulsion by Lok Sabha.”

* * * *

“The term ‘expulsion’ has not been defined in the Constitution, Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha or any law relating to elections. Nevertheless, there are passages in the judgments of both Punjab and Haryana High Court and Madhya Pradesh High Court which clearly indicate that vacation of a seat is an automatic result of expulsion”.

The following observations of the Punjab and Haryana and Madhya Pradesh High Courts are significant:

“(431) In the view held by the Majority, we allow this writ petition, hold the resolution of the Haryana Legislative Assembly dated 8 January 1975, expelling the petitioner, to be unconstitutional, illegal and inoperative, and as a necessary consequence direct the Election Commission of India not to proceed to fill the vacancy supposedly resulting from the action aforesaid. We leave the parties to bear their own costs.”

[ILR (1977) 2 Punjab & Haryana 269 at p. 577].

“It is true that the privilege or right which the House of Commons has is of expelling a member and the vacation of a seat is only the result of expulsion. But the Madhya Pradesh Assembly is not claiming any privilege of creating a vacancy and of expelling a member for that purpose. It is also not claiming the right to issue a direction for filling a seat when a member is expelled. If a member’s seat becomes vacant as a result of his expulsion then the seat is filled in accordance with the Representation of the People Act, 1951, by holding a by- election. Section 150 of the Representation of the People Act does not contain anything to rule out the application of that provision to a case where the seat of a member becomes vacant as a result of his expulsion. If the learned counsel by his argument intended to suggest that the Madhya Pradesh Assembly could expel a member but could not make his seat vacant and thus exclude him from the sittings of the House for all time, then the suggestion must be rejected as altogether untenable.”

[AIR 1967 Madhya Pradesh 95 at p. 103].

“In our opinion, it cannot be contended with any degree of force that as there is no express provision in the Constitution providing for a member’s seat becoming vacant as a result of his expulsion by the State Legislature, the right or privilege of expelling a member cannot be claimed by the Legislature. So far as the exercise of the power of expulsion by the State Legislature is concerned, article 194(3) operates quite independently of articles 190 and 191 or any other article. There is nothing in the Constitution affording any ground or justification for subtracting from the powers, privileges and immunities declared as belonging to the State Legislature and the power of expelling a member having the result of making vacant the seat of the member expelled. The argument based on articles 190 and 191 cannot therefore be accepted.”

“(25) It remains to consider the effect of the absence in the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business framed by the Madhya Pradesh Assembly of a rule dealing with expulsion of members. The absence of a rule is in no way indicative of the fact that the Legislature has not the power of expelling a member rendering his seat vacant or of precluding the exercise of the power.”

“In the above view, expulsion carries with it the automatic effect of vacation of the seat and there is no need to declare a seat vacant following the expulsion of a member by a separate order of the House.”

“Confusion and doubts have arisen from the use of words ‘Consequent on’ and ‘ceases to be a member’ in the notification, implying thereby that the notification has declared the seat vacant after expulsion has taken place. This interpretation must be rejected in view of the conclusion reached by me about that expulsion includes vacation of seat simultaneously and there is no interval between the two events. The notification must be read as conveying the information only that the House has taken a decision to expel the member which means conclusively that a seat has become vacant concurrently”.

* * * *

“The form in which information is communicated to the Election Commission that vacancy has arisen under sections 149 or 150 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, is also important. In this connection, I refer to the communication received from the Madhya Pradesh Vidhan Sabha<sup>192</sup> in which a formal intimation was sent to the Election Commission regarding the vacancy arising from the expulsion of Shri Suresh Seth. The notification of the Lok Sabha Secretariat is a general notification and a copy thereof has been sent by an officer of the Secretariat to the Election Commission, among other officers of Government without any formal request to fill the vacancy. In order to avoid in future, objections and doubts such as were extensively raised in the present case the communication to be sent to the Election Commission should be a formal document as this is the basis on which election process begins. In the present case, I take note of the information contained in the Gazette Notification, dated 19-12-78 that Lok Sabha has expelled Smt. Indira Gandhi and I hold that expulsion means vacation of the seat simultaneously. I hold further that expulsion falls in the first category of a seat becoming vacant in section 149 of the Representation of People Act, 1951.”

Allegations of Improper Conduct

In 2005, few members of Parliament were accused of misusing their positions<sup>193</sup>. An ad hoc committee viz. Committee to Inquire into Allegations of Improper Conduct, was set up by the Speaker, which presented its report on 21 December 2005. The committee recommended the expulsion of the members involved. On 23 December 2005, the Leader of the House moved the following motion:

“That this House having taken note of the Report of the Committee to inquire into allegations of improper conduct on the part of some members, namely Narendra Kumar Kushawaha, Annashab M.K. Patil, Manoj Kumar, Y.G. Mahajan, Pradeep Gandhi, Suresh Chandel, Ramsevak Singh, Lal Chandra Kol, Rajaram Pal and Chandra Pratap Singh was unethical and unbecoming of members of Parliament and their continuance as members of Lok Sabha is untenable and resolves that they may be expelled from the membership of Lok Sabha.”

An amendment to the motion moved by a member that the matter may be referred to the Committee of Privileges, Lok Sabha was negatived by voice vote.

192. Letter No. 126421 Legn. 78, dated 8 September 1978, from the Secretary, Madhya Pradesh Vidhan Sabha to the Secretary, Election Commission of India, is worded as follows—

“I am directed to inform you that consequent on adoption of a motion by the Madhya Pradesh Vidhan Sabha on the 7 September 1978, expelling from the House, Shri Suresh Seth, a member elected from the Indore-5 Constituency No. 274 of Madhya Pradesh Vidhan Sabha, the said constituency has fallen vacant with effect from the 7 September 1978, afternoon. A copy of this Secretariat Notification No. 125131 Legn. dated the 7 September 1978 is enclosed.”

193. A television channel made an expose on 12 December 2005, showing members of Parliament accepting money for tabling notices of Parliamentary questions.

The motion was adopted by the voice vote and consequently the ten members stood expelled from the membership of Lok Sabha.

All the expelled members challenged their expulsion in the High Court of Delhi, other than Rajaram Pal who challenged his expulsion in the Supreme Court. All the writ petitions were transferred to the Supreme Court. A five-Judge bench of Supreme Court in their judgement delivered on 10 January 2007 upheld the expulsion of the members.

In the matter of its own privileges, the House is supreme. It combines in itself all the powers of Legislature, Judiciary and Executive, while dealing with a question of its privilege. The House has the power to declare what its privileges are, subject to its own precedents, name the accused who is alleged to have committed a breach of privilege or contempt of the House, act as a court either itself or through its Committee, to try the accused, to send for persons and records, to lay down its own procedure, commit a person held guilty, award the punishment, and execute the punishment under its own orders. The only limitations are — that the Supreme Court in the final analysis must confirm that the House has the privilege which is claimed, and, once confirmed, the matter is entirely in the hands of the House. The House must function within the framework of the Constitution, more particularly within the ambit of fundamental rights; act bona fide, observe the norms of natural justice and not only do justice but seem to have done justice which will satisfy public opinion<sup>194</sup>.

In the Mudgal case, the Committee of the House gave all opportunities to the accused. He was allowed the services of a counsel, to cross-examine the witnesses, to present his own witnesses and to lead his defence through his counsel. The Committee was also assisted by the Attorney-General throughout the examination of the matter by it.

Power of Expulsion

The Punjab and Haryana High Court, in the Hardwari Lal Case (1977), declared that the Houses in India have no power of expulsion<sup>195</sup>. The Madhya Pradesh High Court in 1966 declared that the House has power of expulsion.<sup>196</sup>

194. Determination of guilt and adjudication in disputes are judicial functions. In many countries, therefore, questions of breach of privilege, contempt of the House, etc. and punishment therefor are decided only by courts of law.

Professor S.S. de Smith, in his Constitutional and Administrative Law, suggests that “the unhappy combination of uncodified contempts, an unsatisfactory procedure for investigating allegations of contempt and the insistence of the House that it must have the first and last word in matters touching the interests of its members, irrespective of the impact of its decisions on the interests of members of the public, strongly suggests that the House should relinquish its jurisdiction over breaches of privilege and contempts to the courts, as it has in effect relinquished its privilege to determine disputed election returns.”

Also, Prof. Harry Street, in his Freedom, the Individual and the Law, holds that “the House of Commons ought not to treat trials of citizens as one of its functions; disciplining its members is one thing, punishing outsiders is another. It may well be difficult for the House of Commons to behave like a Court; the solution then is for it to relinquish these powers of punishing citizens by imprisonment or otherwise just as it has surrendered its jurisdiction over disputed elections to the judges.”

195. I.L.R. (1977) 2, Punjab & Haryana 269.

196. A.I.R. 1967, Madhya Pradesh 95.

These two conflicting decisions were finally resolved by the Supreme Court in 2007 through its decision on petitions filed by members expelled by the House in cash for query case.

A five-Judge Constitution bench of the Supreme Court of India which took up the core issue of power of the Houses of Parliament to expel their members, pronounced their judgement<sup>197</sup> in the matter on 10 January 2007. The Supreme Court in their majority judgement comprising judgements given by the then Chief Justice of India Y.K. Sabharwal, Justices K.G. Balakrishnan and D.K. Jain and a separate judgement given by Justice C.K. Thakkar, upheld the powers of the House to expel members and that every legislative body possesses power to regulate its proceedings – power of self protection, self-preservation and maintenance of discipline in exercise of which it can suspend or expel a member. It was further held that the contempt of authority of Parliament can be tried and punished nowhere except before Parliament though the exercise of the Legislatures' contempt power is subject to judicial review. In his dissenting judgement, Justice R.V. Raveendran held that Parliament did not have the power of expulsion.

The Supreme Court in their majority judgement inter alia observed :

“....the power of expulsion can be claimed by Indian legislatures as one of the privileges inherited from the House of Commons through article 105(3),....contempt of authority of Parliament can be tried and punished nowhere except before it, the judicial review of the manner of exercise of power of contempt or privilege does not mean the said jurisdiction is being usurped by the judiciary. As has been noticed, in the context of article 122(1), mere irregularity of the procedure cannot be a ground of challenge to the proceedings in Parliament or effect thereof, and while the same view can be adopted as to the element of irrationality, but in our constitutional scheme, illegality or unconstitutionality will not save the parliamentary proceedings.”

The Supreme Court while upholding the power of the House to expel its members reserved to themselves the power to exercise judicial review to judge for themselves the question as to whether the principles of natural justice have been followed by the House before expelling a member.

Powers of Parliament within the Parliament House Estate

The Speaker is the authority under whose directions order is maintained in the Parliament House Estate. It is a contempt of the House if any executive authority issues any notifications or orders which are applicable to the Parliament House Estate or causes any inquiry to be made in any matter inside the Parliament House Estate or brings a charge against any one for any crime inside the Estate.

Prior to 4 April 1970, orders issued by the District Magistrate, Delhi, under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code did not expressly exclude the Parliament House Estate. On the issue of a Direction by the Speaker on that day, the orders issued by the District Magistrate thereafter expressly exclude the Parliament House Estate. Even though an executive authority has powers under section 144 to issue an order which can be made applicable to the Parliament House Estate, executive authorities under the law of privilege are prohibited from exercising this power within the Parliament House Estate. The executive authorities cannot also enter the Parliament House Estate or apprehend any person for any cognizable offence within the Parliament House Estate without the permission of the Speaker.

197. Rajaram Pal v. The Hon'ble Speaker, Lok Sabha and others, Supreme Court Reports Vol. 1 (2007), 317.

The Direction issued by the Speaker on 4 April 1970, reads as follows<sup>198</sup>—

- (1) The Joint Secretary, Security of Lok Sabha shall be responsible for maintaining order within the compound of the Parliament House Estate and shall take all necessary steps to ensure that no obstruction or hindrance is caused to members of Parliament in that area, in coming to, or going from, the Parliament House.
- (2) In order to keep the area and passages within the Parliament House Estate free and open for members of Parliament without any obstruction or hindrance, the following activities are prohibited within the area of the Parliament House Estate—
  - (i) holding of any public meeting; (ii) assembly of five or more persons; (iii) carrying of fire-arms, banners, placards, lathies, spears, swords, sticks, brick-bats; (iv) shouting of slogans; (v) making of speeches, etc; (vi) processions or demonstrations; (vii) picketing or dharna; and (viii) any other activity or conduct which may cause or tend to cause any obstruction or hindrance to members of Parliament.
- (3) The Joint Secretary, Security of Lok Sabha may, subject to the instructions or permission of the Speaker, request the police to assist him in, maintaining order in the Parliament House Estate, as and when considered necessary.

The Additional Secretary, Security may apprehend any person for any breach of directions given by the Speaker. He shall then report the matter to the Speaker through the Secretary-General. The Speaker may order an inquiry into the matter and pass such orders as he may deem fit. The Speaker may direct that such a person be taken out of the Parliament House Estate to be let off or to be handed over to the police authorities. The police authorities cannot, however, bring a charge against the person for anything said or done by him inside the Parliament House Estate unless the Speaker has authorised them in this behalf<sup>199</sup>. If the Speaker comes to the conclusion prima facie that the person concerned has grossly violated the direction, he may report the matter to the House and the House may, on a motion moved in this behalf, punish him for contempt of the House.

Inquiry by Courts into Causes of Commitment by the House

The Supreme Court and the High Courts in India are empowered under the Constitution to issue writs of habeas corpus for production before them of persons committed by the House<sup>200</sup>. This power was exercised by the Supreme Court in 1954, in respect of a person who was in custody in pursuance of a warrant issued by the Speaker of the Uttar Pradesh Legislative Assembly in connection with contempt proceedings<sup>201</sup>.

Summing up the position as it existed in the British House of Commons at the commencement of India's Constitution, i.e. on 26 January 1950, Hidayatullah M., C.J. observed:

The House had the right to commit for breach of its privileges or for conduct amounting to contempt of its authority but the Court acting under the Habeas Corpus Acts were bound to entertain the petition for habeas corpus. By resolution, the House of Commons accepted the position that the gaoler must make a return and exhibit the warrant. On their part the Courts respected the warrant which was treated as a conclusive answer to the writ nisi. There was ordinarily no question of bail before the return but if the return was not filed or was defective the prisoner could be admitted to bail and also released. There was ordinarily no question of taking umbrage if a writ nisi issued, as was evident from the debate following Sheridan's Case. If the history of the writ of habeas corpus is studied, it will be found that the House had long ago abandoned the stand that the Courts offend its dignity when they do their duty and that is why the dualism in England is over<sup>202</sup>.

The Courts of Law and Matters of Privilege<sup>203</sup>

The courts of law in India have recognised that a House of Parliament or a State Legislature is the sole authority to judge as to whether or not there has been a breach of privilege in a particular case. It has also been held that the power of the House to commit for contempt is identical with that of the House of Commons and that a court of law would be incompetent to scrutinize the exercise of that power<sup>204</sup>.

(254), the Supreme Court had stated, "there is indication in the language of article 22(1) and (2) that it was designed to give protection against the acts of the executive or other non-judicial authority", but held that the warrant issued by the Speaker of the Uttar Pradesh Legislative Assembly in pursuance of a resolution of the House, fell within the category of judicial warrants and could not therefore "draw the protection afforded by article 22."

In Keshav Singh v. Speaker, Legislative Assembly, U.P., the Allahabad High Court held that the Legislative Assembly has the same power to commit for its contempt as the House of Commons has. A.I.R. 1965, Allahabad 349(354).

As regards exclusive control of either House over its internal proceedings, article 105(2) specifically bars the jurisdiction of courts of law in respect of anything said or any vote given by a member in Parliament or any Committee thereof. The Orissa High Court in 1958, held that “no law court can take action against a member of the Legislature for any speech made by him there” even when a member in a speech in the House casts reflection on a High Court<sup>205</sup>. The courts have also held that they have no jurisdiction to interfere in any way with the control of the House over its internal proceedings<sup>206</sup> or call in question the validity of its proceedings on the ground of any alleged irregularity of procedure<sup>207</sup>.

When some members of the House, including a former Speaker, were given notice to appear before the Supreme Court in a case relating to Jagadguru Shankaracharya, either in person or by an advocate, a question of privilege was raised. The members concerned were directed by the Speaker to ignore the notice and the Attorney-General was asked to bring to the notice of the Court that “what is contained in the case is something which is covered by article 105 of the Constitution”<sup>208</sup>.

On some observations having been made by the Court with regard to the stand taken by the House in as much as the members had not been served with a ‘summons’ but only a ‘notice of lodgement’ had been sent to them, the matter was again discussed in the House. Thereupon, the Speaker ruled:

Whether the Court issues a summons or a notice does not make any difference to us. Ultimately, the privileges of the House are involved when members are asked to defend themselves for what they said in the House<sup>209</sup>.

When one of the members who had been served with the notice of lodgement of appeal by the Supreme Court expressed a desire to go and defend himself in the Court, the Speaker observed:

If he appears before the Court, fully knowing article 105, I think we will have to bring a privilege motion against him<sup>210</sup>.

Summons were received from the Court, requiring the Chairman, Public Accounts Committee, to appear before the Court to answer all material questions relating to certain observations made in the 71 Report of the Committee (5LS). The Speaker, thereupon, observed:

As had been the practice of the House, he was asking the Chairman of the Committee to ignore the summons and not to put in any appearance in the Court. However, he was passing on the relevant papers to the Minister of Law for taking such action as he might deem fit to apprise the Court of the correct constitutional position in this regard<sup>211</sup>.

On 11 April 1979, a notice was received from the Karnataka High Court requiring the appearance of the Secretary, Lok Sabha, in person or through an Advocate, in that Court in connection with a writ petition challenging the validity of a resolution passed by the Lok Sabha expelling a member from the House. The Speaker, Lok Sabha placed the matter before the House on 12 April 1979 and observed that the Secretary, Lok Sabha had been asked by him not to respond to the notice<sup>212</sup>.

Similarly, a notice was received from the Patna High Court requiring the Chairman, Committee on Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes to appear before the Court to show cause why the writ petition praying for the issue of a writ of mandamus for recognition of a community of Bihar as Scheduled Tribe be not allowed. The Speaker observed<sup>213</sup>:

As per past practice of the House, the Chairman, Committee on the Welfare of Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes has been asked not to respond to the notice. The Minister of Law, Justice and Company Affairs is being requested to apprise the Patna High Court of the correct constitutional position in this regard.

On 6 November 1987, the Speaker informed the House that he had received a notice from the Assistant Registrar of the Supreme Court requiring his appearance before that Court in connection with a transfer petition seeking to transfer from the High Court of Delhi to the Supreme Court of India, a civil writ petition. The Speaker observed<sup>214</sup>:

As per well established practice and convention of Lok Sabha, I have decided not to respond to the notice. I have passed on the relevant papers to the Minister of State in the Ministry of Law and Justice for taking such action as he may deem fit to apprise the court of the correct constitutional position and the well established conventions of the House.

On 27 July 1988, the Speaker informed the House that he had received two notices from the Bombay High Court requiring his appearance before that Court for filing of an affidavit by him or by the Secretary-General, Lok Sabha, in connection with two writ petitions alleging that there was 'a variance between the Bill. (The Central Excise Tariff Bill, 1985), as passed and gazetted with regard to the rate of the excise duty on the goods-cranes Chapter sub-heading No. 8426-00'. The Speaker observed that as per well established practice and convention of the House, he had decided not to respond to the notices and passed on the relevant papers to the Minister of Law and Justice for taking such action as he may deem fit to apprise the Court of the correct constitutional position and the well established conventions of the House<sup>215</sup>.

On 27 December 1990, the Speaker informed the House that on 7 December 1990, he had received a notice from the Registrar of the High Court of Delhi requiring him to arrange to show cause in connection with Civil Writ Petition No. 3871 of 1990. The Writ Petition, inter alia, sought to challenge the validity and constitutionality of paragraphs 6 and 7 of the Tenth Schedule added by the Constitution (Fifty-second Amendment Act), 1985. The Speaker observed that as per well-established practice and convention of the House, he had decided not to respond to the notice and passed on the relevant papers to the Minister of Law and Justice for taking such action as he may deem fit to apprise the High Court of the correct constitutional position and the well-established conventions of the House<sup>216</sup>.

On 4 March 1992, a notice was received by Rabi Ray, member and former Speaker of the Lok Sabha, from the Assistant Registrar of the Supreme Court of India in the matter of Writ Petition No. 149 of 1992 requiring him to appear before the Supreme Court in person or through counsel on 10 March 1992 to show cause to the Court as to why rule nisi in terms of the prayer of the Writ Petition be not issued. On the same day, the said notice, in original, was forwarded to the Speaker, Lok Sabha, by Rabi Ray for his advice in the matter. On 9 March 1992, the Speaker (Shivraj V. Patil) placed the matter before the House and observed inter alia as follows:

...we had organised a meeting of the Presiding Officers of India and in that meeting nearly unanimously it was decided that the judgment given by the Supreme Court should be respected until the law is amended. We had also said in that meeting that the hon. Presiding Officers may not subject themselves to the jurisdiction of the Judiciary. We, as a very responsible institution, like to protect the prestige and dignity of Judiciary as well as the prestige and dignity of the Legislature. Now, here we have to strike a balance and that is very very important.

...I had expressed this point of view to the hon. leaders and to Rabi Ray ji also. And I have said that the Speaker may not appear in the Court. The papers may be given to the Court and Court can decide in whatever fashion they want to. This matter can be brought to the notice of the Law Ministry also and the point of view of the Legislature can be presented to the Judiciary through the Law Ministry if it is necessary.

But on the one hand, we will give the papers and we would accept and respect the decision, but on the other hand, we would not expect the Presiding Officers to go to the Court and subject themselves to the jurisdiction of the Court. That was the view I had expressed. And at the same time, I had said that I would bring this matter to the notice of this august House and with their agreement only we would come to a conclusion. So, I have brought this view to your notice. And, I think, if it is agreeable to us, we will follow this<sup>217</sup>.

During the Fourteenth Lok Sabha, the Speaker gave three separate decisions on the petitions given by Rajesh Verma, MP against Mohd. Shahid Aklaque, Ramakant Yadav and Bhalchandra Yadav, MPs under the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution and the Members of Lok Sabha (Disqualification on Ground of Defection) Rules, 1985 disqualifying the said three members from the membership of the House.

217. L.S. Deb., 9-3-1992, c. 483.

Mohd. Shahid Aklaque filed a writ petition challenging the decision of the speaker disqualifying him from the membership of the House. Allahabad High Court, passed an order on 20 February 2008 directing that notices be issued, inter alia to the Speaker, Lok Sabha, Secretary-General, Lok Sabha and Joint Secretary, Lok Sabha Secretariat who had been named as respondent Nos. 2, 3 & 4 respectively in the petition. After examination of the matter, a view was taken that the Speaker, Lok Sabha, acts as a Tribunal, when he decides a case under the Tenth Schedule. When his decision is challenged in a Court of Law the same would amount to challenging Tribunal's decision. When a Tribunal's decision is reviewed, it is either upheld or overruled. A Tribunal cannot be placed in the position of a respondent as in the case of an ordinary litigation. It was accordingly decided not to enter appearance before the Court in the matter. The Allahabad High Court vide their order dated 31.7.2007 dismissed the petition.

As regards privileges of Parliament vis-a-vis fundamental rights guaranteed to the citizen under the Constitution, the Supreme Court, in 1959, in a case involving freedom of speech and expression, held:

The provisions of cl. (2) of article 194 indicate that the freedom of speech referred to in cl. (1), is different from the freedom of speech and expression guaranteed under article 19 (1) (a) and cannot be cut down in any way by any law contemplated by cl. (2) of article 19.

The Supreme Court also held that the provisions of articles 105(3) and 194(3) are constitutional laws and not ordinary laws made by Parliament or State Legislatures and that, therefore, they are as supreme as the provisions of articles relating to fundamental rights<sup>218</sup>.

In 1964, however, there arose a case<sup>219</sup> giving rise to "important and complicated questions of law regarding the powers and jurisdiction of the High Court and its Judges in relation to the State Legislature and its officers and regarding the powers, privileges and immunities of the State Legislature and its members in relation to the High Court and its Judges in the discharge of their duties." The questions of law involved were of such public importance and constitutional significance that the President considered it expedient to refer the matter to the Supreme Court for its opinion. The main point of contention was the power claimed by the Legislatures under article 194(3) of the Constitution to commit a citizen for contempt by a general warrant with the consequent deprivation of the jurisdiction of the courts of law in respect of that committal.

218. See M.S.M. Sharma v. Sri Krishna Sinha (Searchlight Case), A.I.R. 1959, S.C. 395.

219. The matter arose out of a conflict between the Legislative Assembly of Uttar Pradesh and the Allahabad High Court following the committal to prison of Keshav Singh by the Legislative Assembly of Uttar Pradesh for committing a breach of privilege and contempt of the House and his subsequent release on bail by the Lucknow Bench of the Allahabad High Court on a writ petition under article 226 of the Constitution and section 49J of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

The Allahabad High Court, however, dismissed the writ petition of Keshav Singh and ordered him to surrender to custody and serve out the remaining portion of the sentence of imprisonment imposed upon him by the Legislative Assembly of Uttar Pradesh, A.I.R. 1965, Allahabad 349.

The Supreme Court, in its majority opinion<sup>220</sup>, held that the powers and privileges conferred on State Legislatures by article 194(3) were subject to the fundamental rights and that the Legislatures did not have the privilege or power to the effect that their general warrants should be held to be conclusive. The Supreme Court held that in the Case of Sharma the general issue as to the relevance and applicability of all the fundamental rights guaranteed by Part III was not raised at all. Hence, it would not be correct “to read the majority decision as laying down a general proposition that whenever there is a conflict between the provisions of the latter part of article 194(3) and any of the provisions of the fundamental rights guaranteed by Part III, the latter must yield to the former. The majority decision, therefore, must be taken to have settled that art. 19(1) (a) would not apply, and art. 21 would.” The Court further held:

In dealing with the effect of the provisions contained in clause (3) of art. 194, whenever it appears that there is a conflict between the said provisions and the provisions pertaining to fundamental rights, an attempt will have to be made to resolve the said conflict by the adoption of the rule of harmonious construction.

The opinion of the Supreme Court was discussed by the Conference of Presiding Officers of Legislative Bodies in India held at Bombay on 11 and 12 January 1965. The Conference unanimously adopted a resolution expressing its view that suitable amendments to articles 105 and 194 should be made in order to make the intention of the Constitution makers clear beyond doubt so that the powers, privileges and immunities of Legislatures, their members and Committees could not, in any case, be construed as being subject or subordinate to any other articles of the Constitution.

In the meantime, the Allahabad High Court upheld the power of the Legislative Assembly to commit for its contempt. The Government, therefore, decided that an amendment of the Constitution was not necessary. It was of the opinion that the Legislatures and the Judiciary would develop their own conventions in the light of the opinion given by the Supreme Court and the judgment pronounced by the Allahabad High Court<sup>221</sup>.

In 1984, an Emergent Conference of the Presiding Officers of the Legislative Bodies was called to consider the issues arising and likely to arise out of two writ petitions filed before the Supreme Court in connection with two privilege cases before two State Legislatures, viz., the Kerala Legislative Assembly and the Andhra Pradesh Legislative Council.

In the Kerala Legislative Assembly case, the Press Gallery pass of a press correspondent was cancelled by the Speaker, Kerala Legislative Assembly, for casting reflections on the Speaker. The press correspondent filed a writ petition in the Kerala High Court challenging the cancellation of his pass which issued notices to the Speaker and Secretary, Kerala Legislature. The Kerala Government filed an appeal against this order of the High Court. The full Bench of the Kerala High Court considered the matter and upheld the order of the single judge observing that no interference was called for in appeal. The Full Bench also observed that the immunity envisaged in article 212(1) of the Constitution is restricted to a case where the complaint is no more than that the procedure was irregular. If the impugned proceedings are challenged as illegal or unconstitutional such proceedings would be open to scrutiny in a court of law<sup>222</sup>.

Subsequently, the Kerala Government filed a special leave petition in the Supreme Court against the order and judgement of the Full Bench. On 7 February 1984, the Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court admitted the appeal and stayed all further proceedings in the High Court.

In the Andhra Pradesh Legislative Council case, the Editor of Eenadu allegedly cast reflections on the House and its proceedings in his newspaper dated 10 March 1983. The Chairman referred the matter to the Committee of Privileges who, in their report presented to the House on 27 February 1984, reported that the Editor had committed serious breach of privilege and contempt of the House. The Committee recommended that the Editor be summoned to the Bar of the House and admonished. The Report of the Committee was adopted by the House without any discussion on 6 March 1984. Before the House could take any action against the Editor, he filed a writ petition before the Supreme Court challenging the finding of the Committee.

On 25 April 1984, an Emergent Conference of Presiding Officers of the Legislative Bodies in India was held at New Delhi to consider the issues arising out of the said cases pending in the Supreme Court. Addressing the Conference, the Chairman (Dr. Bal Ram Jakhar) stated inter alia as follows:

It was only in January this year that we had met in Bombay for our annual deliberations. Since then important developments of considerable constitutional importance involving the Legislature, the Press and the Judiciary have taken place. Two privilege cases relating to the Andhra Pradesh Legislative Council and Kerala Legislative Assembly are now pending before the Supreme Court. We have specially assembled here today to consider the issues arising out of these privilege cases which are likely to vitally affect the effective functioning of our Legislatures ... We discussed this matter ... at our recent Conference of Presiding Officers in Bombay and, after a thorough consideration of all the aspects of the matter, adopted a resolution on 3 January 1984, affirming that 'the Legislatures are supreme in their affairs in the conduct of the Business of the House and their powers, privileges and immunities granted by the Constitution of India, and no other authority shall have jurisdiction or power to interfere in that respect'.

After discussing the matter at great length, the Conference adopted the following Resolution unanimously:

“The Presiding Officers of Legislative Bodies in India assembled in their Emergent Conference in New Delhi on 25th April 1984, while reiterating the supremacy of the Legislature under the Constitution and faith in the independence of the Judiciary and the freedom of the Press, hereby unanimously resolve:

- (a) that under article 105/194 of the Constitution, the Legislatures in India had, and were intended by the founders of the Constitution to have, exclusive jurisdiction to decide all matters relating to the privileges of the House, their members and Committees without any interference from the courts of law or any other authority;

- (b) that rules framed under article 118/208 are not subject to scrutiny by any court of law and the provision regarding their being subject to constitutional provisions refers to only the provisions regarding rules of procedure enshrined in the Constitution and not to all other provisions;
- (c) that mutual trust and respect must exist between the Legislatures and courts, each recognizing the independence, dignity and jurisdiction of the other inasmuch as their roles are complementary to each other;
- (d) that, if necessary, an amendment might be made in the Constitution so as to place the position beyond all shadow of doubt; and
- (e) that the Committee of the Presiding Officers appointed at their Conference in Bombay in January 1984 may continuously monitor further progress in the matter and from time to time make suitable recommendations to the Chairman of the Conference and finally to the Conference itself at its Calcutta meeting in October 1984.

This Conference authorises the Chairman to take such other steps as he deems fit to achieve the above objectives.”

Before, however, the writ petitions could come up for hearing before the Supreme Court, the Kerala Legislative Assembly was dissolved. The Andhra Pradesh Legislative Council was abolished on 1 June 1985, by the Andhra Pradesh Legislative Council (Abolition) Act, 1985<sup>223</sup>.

Jharkhand Case

The elections to the Jharkhand Legislative Assembly were held in February, 2005. The electorate gave a fractured mandate. The Governor of Jharkhand after consulting various political parties invited Jharkhand Mukti Morcha and its allies led by Shibu Soren, to form the Government on 2 March 2005. The Soren Government was required to prove its majority on the floor of the House by 21 March 2005 which was subsequently preponed by the Governor to 15 March 2005. The Leader of National Democratic Alliance who claimed to have the support of majority in the 81 member Jharkhand Legislative Assembly, filed a writ petition in the Supreme Court of India challenging the appointment of Shibu Soren as the Chief Minister of Jharkhand.

On 9 March 2005 a three-Judge bench of the Supreme Court of India presided over by the Hon’ble Chief Justice passed an interim order on the Writ Petition (Civil) No. 123/2005, Arjun Munda v. Governor of Jharkhand and Others and another Writ Petition (Civil) No. 120/2005, Anil Kumar Jha v. Union of India and others inter alia directing that (i) the session of the Jharkhand State Assembly convened for 10 March 2005 may continue on 11 March, 2005 i.e., the next day and on that day the vote of confidence be put to test; (ii) the only agenda in the Assembly on 11 March 2005 would be to have a floor test between the contending political alliances; (iii) the proceedings in the Assembly shall be totally peaceful, and disturbance, if any, caused therein shall be viewed seriously; (iv) the result of the floor test be announced by the Pro tem Speaker faithfully and truthfully.

223. Act No. 35 of 1985.

The interim order of the Supreme Court thus contained directions about fixing of agenda of the House, maintenance of order in the House, and video recording of the proceedings of the House etc., which relate to matters, decision on which, under the rules and by convention fall within the exclusive domain of the Presiding Officer of the House or the House itself.

The matter was discussed at the Emergency Conference of Presiding Officers of Legislative Bodies held at New Delhi on 20 March 2005.

The Speaker, (Fourteenth) Lok Sabha and Chairman of the Conference in his concluding remarks inter alia observed as follows:

“As envisioned by our founding fathers, it is the Constitution, which is the supreme law of the land and all branches of governance are subject to the overriding authority and control of the Constitution. If there is any difference of perception, it is always the spirit of the Constitution, which has to ultimately prevail. The Presiding Officers have also emphasized that the Legislature is the sole guardian and judge in all matters relating to its proceedings and privileges. They have also stressed that as provided for in Articles 122 and 212, no officer or member of Parliament or State Legislature in whom powers are vested for regulating procedure or conduct of business or for maintaining order, shall be subject to the jurisdiction of any court in respect of the exercise of those powers. Some hon. Presiding Officers have been referred to the question whether any Constitutional Amendment may be made.

I am indeed happy that the hon. Presiding Officers have enhanced the prestige of our fraternity by their dignified expostulations on a highly sensitive theme. While stressing the imperative of upholding the constitutional mandate for harmonious relations between the Legislature and the Judiciary, they have also referred to various rulings and judgements of the different courts delivered over the years, particularly by the Apex Court, on the matter of Legislature-Judiciary relations. At the same time, they have also reiterated that the Legislature is the sole guardian and judge in all matters relating to its proceedings and privileges, which has been recognized by the Supreme Court as well along with the reiteration of the supremacy of the Hon. Supreme Court in its own sphere as per the provisions of the Constitution.”

The Conference in their unanimous resolution inter alia resolved that :

- There must exist mutual trust and respect between the Legislature and the Judiciary and also an understanding that they are not acting at cross purposes but striving together to achieve the same goal that is to serve the common man of this country and to make this country strong.
- That the success of democratic governance would be greatly facilitated if these two important institutions respect each other's role in the national endeavour and do not transgress into areas assigned to them by the Constitution....
- That it is imperative to maintain harmonious relations between the Legislatures and the Judiciary.

Typical Cases of Breach of Privilege and Contempt of the House

The power possessed by each House of Parliament and a House of the Legislature of a State to punish for contempt or breach of privilege is a general power of committing for contempt analogous to that possessed by the superior courts, and is in its nature discretionary. It is not possible to enumerate every act which might constitute a contempt of the House. However, some typical cases of breach of privilege and contempt are described below.

Misconduct in the Presence of the House or Committees thereof

Disrespect to the House collectively is the original and fundamental form of breach of privilege, and almost all breaches can be reduced to it. Any misconduct in the presence of the House or a Committee thereof, whether by members of Parliament or by members of the public who have been admitted to the galleries of the House or to sittings of Committees as witnesses, will constitute a contempt of the House. Such misconduct may be defined as a disorderly, contumacious, disrespectful or contemptuous behaviour in the presence of the House.

Some typical instances of misconduct on the part of strangers and witnesses in the presence of the House or Committees thereof, which have been treated as constituting contempt of the House, are—interrupting or disturbing the proceedings of the House or of Committees thereof; impersonating as a member of the House and taking the oath<sup>224</sup>;

serving or executing a civil or criminal process within the precincts of the House while the House or a Committee thereof is sitting, without obtaining the leave of the House;

refusal by a witness to make an oath or affirmation before a Committee<sup>225</sup>; refusal by a witness to answer questions put by a Committee and refusal to produce documents in his possession; prevaricating, giving false evidence<sup>226</sup>, or wilfully suppressing truth or persistently misleading a Committee; and trifling with a Committee<sup>227</sup>, returning insulting answers to a Committee, or appearing in a state of intoxication before a Committee.

Disobedience of Orders of the House or its Committees

Disobedience to the orders of the House, whether such orders are of general application or require a particular individual to do or abstain from doing a particular act is a contempt of the House. Disobedience to the orders of a Committee of the House is treated as a contempt of the House itself, provided the order disobeyed is within the scope of the Committee's authority. To prevent, delay, obstruct or interfere with the execution of the orders of the House or a Committee thereof is also a contempt of the House. Examples of contempt are—refusal or neglect of a witness or any other person, summoned to attend the House or a Committee thereof, to attend; neglecting or refusing to withdraw from the House when directed to do so;

any stranger who does not withdraw when strangers are directed to withdraw by the Speaker while the House is sitting, may be removed from the precincts of the House or be taken into custody<sup>228</sup>; disclosure of proceedings or decisions of a secret sitting of the House in any manner<sup>229</sup>; disobedience to orders for the production before Committee, of papers or other documents;

absconding, in order to avoid being served with a summons to attend the House or a Committee thereof; offering to give money or a situation of profit to a person for him to procure a letter in the possession of another person which the latter had been required to produce before a Committee; and endeavouring to persuade or induce a person to procure from another person a letter which such person had been required to produce before a Committee.

Presenting False, Forged or Fabricated Documents to the House or its Committees

It is a breach of privilege and contempt of the House to present false, forged or fabricated documents to either House or to a Committee thereof with a view to deceiving them. The necessity of preventing the production before the House of false or fabricated documents was emphasised by Speaker Mavalankar in the Sinha Case<sup>230</sup> when he stated in Lok Sabha:

...it is necessary, in the first instance, to examine the genuineness or otherwise of the documents laid on the Table of the House by Dr. Sinha; such an examination is necessary to prevent the production before the House of any documents which are not genuine or are fabricated, and to see that no member misleads intentionally or unintentionally any section of the House by referring to or placing on the Table of the House documents which are not genuine and are ultimately found to be forged or fabricated.

Tampering with Documents Presented to the House or its Committees

It is a contempt of the House to abstract any document from the custody of the Secretary-General<sup>231</sup> or to tamper with documents presented to the House or Committees thereof<sup>232</sup>.

Speeches or Writings Reflecting on the House, its Committees or Members

It is a breach of privilege and contempt of the House to make speeches, or to print or publish any libels, reflecting on the character or proceedings of the House or its Committees, or any member of the House for or relating to his character or conduct as a member of Parliament<sup>233</sup>.

Approaching an outsider against any decision of the House is tantamount to a reflection on the decision of the House and consequently a contempt of the House. If a member is not satisfied with a decision of the House, the proper course for him is to move the House itself to rescind its decision<sup>234</sup>.

Speeches and writings reflecting on the House or its Committees or members are punished by the House as a contempt on the principle that such acts “tend to obstruct the Houses in the performance of their functions by diminishing the respect due to them.” The House may punish not only contempts arising out of facts of which the ordinary courts will take cognizance, but those of which they cannot. Thus a libel on a member of Parliament may amount to a breach of privilege without being a libel under the civil or criminal law.

In order to constitute a breach of privilege, however, a libel upon a member of Parliament must concern his character or conduct in his capacity as a member of the House and must be “based on matters arising in the actual transaction of the business of the House”. Reflections upon members otherwise than in their capacity as members do not, therefore, involve any breach of privilege or contempt of the House. Similarly, speeches or writings containing vague charges against members or criticising their parliamentary conduct in a strong language, particularly in the heat of a public controversy, without, however, imputing any mala fides are not treated by the House as a contempt or breach of privilege<sup>235</sup>.

On a similar consideration, defamatory words against a particular section of the House or against a particular party in the House are not treated as constituting a contempt of the House, since the whole House is not affected. Thus, in a case in the Lok Sabha, where one political leader was reported in a newspaper to have said in a public speech that the representatives of a political party in the Legislatures were “people whom any first class magistrate would round up” and were “men without any appreciable means of livelihood”, Speaker Ayyangar disallowed the question of privilege<sup>236</sup>.

It is considered inconsistent with the dignity of the House to take any serious notice or action in the case of every defamatory statement which may technically constitute a breach of privilege or contempt of the House<sup>237</sup>.

Similarly, the House may not necessarily take serious notice of defamatory statements made by irresponsible persons. In deciding such cases of libel, it is recognized that the extent and circumstances of the publication of a libellous statement as also the standing of the person making such a statement should be taken into account in considering whether privilege should be asserted in a particular case.

Examples of speeches and writings which have been held to constitute breach of privilege and contempt of the House may be categorized as under—Reflections on the House<sup>238</sup>.

Reflections on members in the execution of their duties<sup>239</sup>.

Reflections on members serving on a Committee of the House<sup>240</sup>.

Reflections on the conduct of the Chairman of a Committee of the House<sup>241</sup>.

Statements made in Courts or in writ petitions or affidavits filed in Courts are not immune from action for breach of privilege or contempt of the House<sup>242</sup>.

Reflections on Speaker in Discharge of his Duties

Office of the Speaker, Lok Sabha, is a constitutional office and enjoys exalted status in our democratic set up. Though it is not necessary for the Speaker under the Constitution or the Rules of Procedure to sever his connections with the political party to which he belongs, once he is elected to the Office, he, while conducting the House nevertheless acts in totally impartial manner. Impartiality is, therefore, an integral attribute vis-à-vis the Office of the Speaker. Hence, reflections on the character or impartiality of the Speaker in discharge of his duties as the Speaker of the House had been held to constitute a breach of privilege and contempt of the House.<sup>243</sup>

Publication of False or Distorted Report of Debates

Each House has the power to control and, if necessary, to prohibit the publication of its debates and proceedings<sup>244</sup>. Normally, no restrictions are imposed on reporting the proceedings of the House. But when the debates are reported mala fide, that is, when a wilful misrepresentation of the debates arises, the offender is liable to punishment for committing a breach of privilege and contempt of the House.

The publication of false or distorted, partial or injurious report of debates or proceedings of the House or its Committees or wilful misrepresentation or suppression of speeches of particular members, is an offence of the same character as the publication of libels upon the House, its Committees or members; and the persons who are responsible for such publication are liable to be punished for a breach of privilege or contempt of the House<sup>245</sup>.

On 27 March 1967, the Speaker informed the House that he had received notice of a question of privilege from two members against the Hindustan Times on the ground that the report published in its issue of 24 March 1967, was a misrepresentation of the proceedings of the House of the previous day insofar as a statement attributed by the Special Correspondent of the paper to one member cast reflections on one of the signatories to the notice. The Speaker observed that according to the practice he would ask the Editor of the paper to state what he had to say before taking up the matter further<sup>246</sup>.

On 29 March 1967, the Speaker read out to the House the letter of apology received from the Editor of the Hindustan Times to the effect that the publication of the news-item "was a genuine error". The House accepted the apology and directed that the letter of apology, together with the actual statement made by the member concerned in the House on 23 March 1967, should be published on the front page of the newspaper in its next issue<sup>247</sup>. This was done by the newspaper.

However, the House may decide to refer the matter forthwith to the Committee of Privilege instead of the matter being first referred to the Editor of the newspaper concerned<sup>248</sup>.

Thus, the breach of privilege or contempt of the House in this connection would be: (i) wilful misrepresentation of the proceedings in the House, or of the speeches of particular members; and (ii) wilful suppression of speeches of particular members.

It is not consistent with the dignity of the House to take too serious a view of every case of inaccurate reporting or misreporting. In most of the cases when an apology is tendered, investigation into the matter is not pursued but the matter is dropped by accepting the apology and asking the editor concerned to publish the apology in the subsequent issue of the newspaper<sup>249</sup>.

Publication of Expunged Proceedings

It is a breach of privilege and contempt of the House to punish expunged proceedings of the House<sup>250</sup>. In this regard, the Supreme Court has held:

The effect in law of the order of the Speaker to expunge a portion of the speech of a member may be as if that portion had not been spoken. A report of the whole speech in such circumstances though factually correct, may, in law, be regarded as perverted and unfaithful report and the publication of such a perverted and unfaithful report of a speech, i.e. including the expunged portion in derogation to the orders of the Speaker passed in the House may, prima facie, be regarded as constituting a breach of the privilege of the House arising out of the publication of the offending news-item<sup>251</sup>.

The Editor, publisher, printer or correspondent of a paper, in which the proceedings of the House, which had been expunged by the Speaker, have appeared may tender an unconditional apology and the House, if it accepts the apology, may agree to drop the matter.

The House may require the Editor of the paper in question to publish the correction and the apology in the next issue of the paper and, when he has done so, report the fact to the House through the Speaker<sup>252</sup>.

Publication of Proceedings of Secret Sessions

Disclosures of the proceedings of decisions arrived at in a secret sitting of the House by any person in any manner, until the ban of secrecy is lifted by the House, is treated as a gross breach of privilege of the House<sup>253</sup> since the person concerned is purporting to disclose that which the House has ordered not to be disclosed. In such cases, the question whether the report or account is accurate or inaccurate is irrelevant.

Premature Publication of Proceedings, Evidence or Report of a Parliamentary Committee

It is a breach of privilege and contempt of the House to publish any part of the proceedings or evidence given before, or any document presented to a Parliamentary Committee before such proceedings or evidence or documents have been reported to the House<sup>254</sup>.

250. See Rules 380 and 381 for the powers of the Speaker to order expunction of words from debates.

Deb.*, 2-8-1966, cc. 1941-72, 5-8-1966, cc. 2962-80, and 12-8-1966, cc. 4517-27; Rule and Dir. 55; 23R CPR (14 L.S.).

The position was stated thus by the Committee of Privileges of Lok Sabha in the Sundarayya Case—

It is in accordance with the law and practice of the privileges of Parliament that while a Committee of Parliament is holding its sittings from day to day, its proceedings should not be published nor any documents or papers which may have been presented to the Committee or the conclusions to which it may have arrived at referred to in the Press...It is highly desirable that no person, including a member of Parliament or Press, should, without proper verification, make or publish a statement or comment about any matter which is under consideration or investigation by a Committee of Parliament<sup>255</sup>.

Similarly, any publication of a draft or approved report of a Parliamentary Committee, before such report has been presented to the House, is treated as a breach of privilege of the House.

Reflection on the Report of a Parliamentary Committee

No reflection can be made by anybody on the recommendations of a Parliamentary Committee. The Committees are entitled to the same respect as Parliament. Therefore, if anybody casts reflection on the decisions or conduct of the Committee, it is a breach of privilege of the House<sup>256</sup>.

Any person who is affected by the recommendation of a Parliamentary Committee can make a representation to the Committee and submit the true facts, according to him, to the Committee but he cannot ventilate them outside. Similarly, if the Government wishes to say anything and contest any finding or conclusion or recommendation of the Committee, it has a right to put up its own case to the Committee direct, or to the Speaker who forwards it to the Chairman of the Committee for reconsideration of the matter. In a case, where a difference of opinion persists, both the statements are laid on the Table in a further report from the Committee<sup>257</sup>.

Circulation of Petitions before Presentation

Circulation of a document purported to be a petition to Parliament before its presentation to the House may be treated as a breach of privilege of the House.

On 2 August 1966, a question of privilege was raised in the House inter alia on the ground that a person had got printed and circulated a pamphlet purporting to be a petition to Lok Sabha before its presentation to the House. It was also mentioned that the printed matter bore no printer's line<sup>258</sup>. On 23 August 1966, the matter was referred to the Committee of Privileges for consideration and report.

The Committee concluded that there was no evidence in support of the allegation that the purported petition had been published and circulated by the person concerned except to the three members whom he had approached in connection with the presentation of the purported petition to Parliament. Though the circumstances of the case were very suspicious, particularly in view of the fact that the name of the printing press was not published in the pamphlet in question, the Committee recommended that in the absence of any proof of actual distribution and also in view of the apology tendered by the person concerned no further action need be taken in the matter<sup>259</sup>.

Premature Publication of various other Matters connected with the Business of the House

According to the parliamentary practice, usage and convention, it is improper, although technically not a breach of privilege or contempt of the House, to give for any reason premature publicity in the Press to notices of questions, adjournment motions, resolutions, answers to questions and other similar matters connected with the business of the House. If this takes place, the Speaker may express his displeasure against the person responsible for it. The following are instances of such improprieties and breaches of conventions—

Publication of questions before they are admitted by the Speaker and before their answers are given in the House or laid on the Table<sup>260</sup>.

Publication of answers to questions before they are given in the House or laid on the Table<sup>261</sup>.

Publication of notices of adjournment motions or resolutions before they are admitted by the Speaker or mentioned in the House<sup>262</sup>.

Premature publicity of notice of motion of no-confidence against the Speaker<sup>263</sup>.

Premature publicity of resolution regarding removal of the Speaker<sup>264</sup>.

Obstructing Members in the Discharge of their Duties

Arrest of Members

Members of Parliament “should not be prevented by trifling interruptions from their attendance” on their parliamentary work. As already noted, except on a criminal charge or under Preventive Detention Act or under Defence of India Act in the interest of public safety, it is a breach of privilege and contempt of the House to arrest or to cause the arrest of a member of Parliament, during the Session of the Parliament, or during the forty days preceding, or the forty days following, a Session.

Molestation of Members

It is a breach of privilege and contempt of the House to obstruct or molest a member while in the execution of his duties, that is while he is attending the House or when he is coming to, or going from, the House. Thus, insults offered to members on their way to or from the House have always been deemed high breaches of privilege<sup>267</sup>. Similarly, to molest a member on account of his conduct in Parliament is a breach of Privilege.

In the following instances members and others have been punished for molesting members—

Harassment and ill-treatment of a member while coming to or returning after attending the session of the House or a Committee meeting<sup>268</sup>.

Assaulting members within the precincts of the House;

Using insulting or abusive language against members within the precincts of the House;

Challenging members to fight on account of their behaviour in the House or any Committee thereof;

Sending insulting letters to members in reference to their conduct in Parliament;

Threatening to inflict pecuniary loss upon a member on account of his conduct in Parliament;

Intimidating and causing obstruction to a member in the discharge of his duties as a member by an outsider in the precincts of the House<sup>269</sup>.

The privilege against assault or molestation is available to a member only when he is obstructed or in any way molested while discharging his duties as member of Parliament. In cases when members were assaulted while they were not performing any parliamentary duty it was held that no breach of privilege or contempt of the House had been committed<sup>270</sup>.

Attempts by Improper Means to influence Members in their Parliamentary Conduct

Bribery

Any attempt to influence members by improper means in their parliamentary conduct is a breach of privilege. Thus, the offering to a member of a bribe or payment to influence him in his conduct as a member, or of any fee or reward in connection with the promotion of, or opposition to, any Bill, resolution, matter or thing, submitted or intended to be submitted to the House or any Committee thereof, has been treated as a breach of privilege. Further, it may be a contempt to offer any fee or reward to any member or officer of the House for drafting, advising upon or revising any Bill, resolution, matter or thing, intended to be submitted to the House or any Committee thereof. The offence, it may be emphasized, lies in making an offer of bribe and it has always been considered a breach of privilege even though no money has actually changed hands. Further, any offer of money, whether for payment to an association to which a member belongs or to a chanty, conditional on the member taking up a case or bringing it to a successful conclusion, is objectionable<sup>271</sup>.

An offer of money or other advantage to a member in order to induce him to take up a question with a Minister may also constitute a breach of privilege, since it is mainly because a member has the power to put down a question or raise the matter in other ways in the House that such cases are put to him.

It will, however, not constitute a breach of privilege or contempt of the House if the offer or payment of bribe is related to a business other than that of the House. For instance, in the Import Licences case it was alleged that a member of Lok Sabha had taken bribe and forged signatures of the members for furthering the cause of certain applicants. The question of privilege was disallowed since it was considered that the conduct of the member, although improper, was not related to the business of the House. But, at the same time, it was held that as the allegations of bribery and forgery were very serious and unbecoming of a member of Parliament, he could be held guilty of lowering the dignity of the House<sup>272</sup>.

Intimidation of Members

Any attempt to influence a member otherwise than by way of argument which has, as its motive, the intention to deter him from performing his duty, constitutes a breach of privilege. Thus, an attempt to intimidate members by threats with a view to influence them in their parliamentary conduct is a breach of privilege.

Officers of Government can see, approach or write to members with a view to explaining to them the Government policies and administrative matters. But bringing pressure on members, obstructing them, impeding them, or using means which might restrict their freedom to work in the House is objectionable and would lead to contempt of the House, depending upon the facts in each case.

In case, the members in their capacity as journalists, editors or practising lawyers are approached for professional work, that would not amount to influencing them in their work as members of Parliament<sup>273</sup>.

While there was no evidence to show that the then Chairman of the State Trading Corporation had attempted to influence the conduct of a member as a member of Parliament, by threats or any other improper means which might constitute a breach of privilege and contempt of the House, the Committee of Privileges felt, however, that the conduct of the Chairman in approaching the member and another with a view to influencing the member to stop writing articles or speaking in Parliament about the alleged irregularities and suspected malpractices of the State Trading Corporation was not proper. While the Committee were satisfied that the Chairman did not employ any improper means which might technically constitute a breach of privilege, they were of the view that as a public servant in a responsible position, he should have acted with more discretion<sup>274</sup>.

Obstructing Officers of the House

The freedom from arrest and molestation in coming to, staying in and returning from the House is also extended to officers of the House in personal attendance upon the service of the House. It is consequently a breach of privilege and contempt of the House to arrest or to cause the arrest, except on a criminal charge, of any such person.

Similarly, it is a contempt of the House to obstruct any officer of the House or any other person employed by the House, or entrusted with the execution of the orders of the House, while in the execution of his duty. Following are the examples of this kind of contempt:

Insulting or abusing or assaulting or resisting an officer of the House, or any other person entrusted with or acting in the execution of his duty<sup>275</sup>.

Refusal of Civil Officers of the Government to assist Officers of the House when called upon to do so

In 1977, an important question arose as to whether a civil servant who is engaged in collecting information for answering a question in the House is protected by parliamentary privileges and whether any punishment given to him by a Minister will amount to contempt of the House. This question came up for consideration before the Committee of Privileges, Sixth Lok Sabha, pursuant to the adoption by the House on 18 November 1977, of a motion referring to the Committee, a question of privilege against Indira Gandhi, former Prime Minister, for allegedly causing obstruction, intimidation, harassment and institution of false cases against certain officials who were collecting information for answer to a certain question in the House.

The Attorney-General, whose opinion was sought by the Committee was of the view that it was the responsibility of the Minister concerned to collect the required information to answer questions put to him in the House. Any agency employed by the Minister or public servants or persons entrusted with the work could not be regarded as servants or officers of the Lok Sabha. Therefore, the persons who suffered harassment were neither officers and servants of the House nor were they employed by, or entrusted with execution of the orders of either House. There were no orders given by the Lok Sabha; it was the Minister who had asked for material and no execution of any order of either House was involved. However, the question would remain whether the orders made by certain persons to carry out raids or arrests obstructed or impeded the Lok Sabha in the performance of its functions.

The Committee of Privileges, in their Third Report presented to the House on 21 November 1978, were of the opinion that although, technically it was the responsibility of a Minister to furnish information to the House, any obstruction or harassment to officials through whom he collects the required information either to deter them from doing their duty or to impair the will or efficiency of others in similar situations, would impede and stifle the functioning of Parliament.

“Such officials should, therefore, be deemed to be in the service of the House, and entrusted with the execution of the orders or the performance of the functions of the House, and any obstruction or harassment caused to them while doing their legitimate duties in collecting such information asked for by Parliament can be treated as a contempt of the House.” In a broad sense, “all persons who serve or advance the purpose and functions of Parliament are deemed to be its officers for the limited purpose of the law of contempt”.

275. Case of Raj Narain and other members of U.P. Vidhan Sabha (1959), P.D.

The Sixth Lok Sabha adopted a motion on 19 December 1978 agreeing with the recommendation and findings of the Committee of Privileges contained in their Third Report.

The Seventh Lok Sabha, however, rescinded<sup>276</sup> the above motion of the Sixth Lok Sabha by a motion on 7 May 1981, holding that the findings contained in the Third Report of the Committee of Privileges of Sixth Lok Sabha were in total contravention of parliamentary rules, precedents and conventions and they unduly extended the immunity enjoyed only by the officers of Parliament in the discharge of their duties to an indeterminate number of persons totally unconnected with Parliament. The House resolved that the findings of the Committee and the decision of the House were inconsistent with and violative of the well-accepted principles of the law of parliamentary privilege and the basic safeguards assured to all and enshrined in the Constitution.

Molestation of Officers of the House

Besides, acts directly tending to obstruct officers of the House in the execution of their duty, any conduct which may have a tendency indirectly to deter them from doing their duty in the future may also be treated by the House as a breach of privilege or contempt. Thus, it is a breach of privilege and contempt of the House to molest an officer of the House for executing its orders or the orders of its Committees or on account of anything done by him in the course of his duty. Similarly, vexation of officers of the House by proceeding against them in the courts for their conduct in obedience to the orders of the House or in conformity with its practice, is a breach of privilege.

The present practice is, however, that when an action is brought by a person in a court of law against an officer or servant of the House for his conduct in obedience to the orders of the House or in conformity with its practice, the House instructs the Attorney-General to arrange for appearance and representation in the court on behalf of the officer concerned<sup>277</sup>.

Obstructing and Molestation of Witnesses

It is a contempt of the House to arrest a witness summoned to attend before the House or its Committees. Similarly, it is a contempt of the House to molest any witness during his attendance in the House or any Committee thereof, or later on account of his attendance or evidence as such witness<sup>278</sup>. Examples of this kind of contempt are—

Assaulting a witness in the precincts of the House;

Using threatening, insulting or abusive language to a witness in the precincts of the House;

Calling any person to account or censuring him for evidence given by him before the House or any Committee thereof;

Assaulting persons for having given evidence before Committee or on account of the evidence which they have given before Committees; and Bringing of legal proceedings against any person on account of any evidence which he may have given in the course of any proceedings in the House or before any Committee thereof.

Tampering with Witnesses

It is a breach of privilege and contempt of the House to tamper with a witness in regard to the evidence to be given before the House or any Committee thereof, or to attempt, directly or indirectly, to deter or hinder any person from appearing or giving evidence before the House or any Committee thereof.

No Protection to Constituents and others from Consequences of Disclosure of Information to Members of Parliament

Unlike witnesses who are protected by the House from the consequences of evidence given by them before the House or any Committee thereof, persons, including constituents, who provide information voluntarily to members of Parliament in their personal capacity, do not enjoy any protection, apart from the qualified privilege available under the ordinary law of the land.

Cases not Amounting to a Breach of Privilege or Contempt of the House

As already stated, giving of premature publicity to various matters connected with the business of the House is an act of impropriety but not a breach of privilege or contempt of the House<sup>279</sup>. There are certain other actions which may be improper but they do not, technically speaking, constitute a breach of privilege or contempt of the House. Some typical cases in this category are described below—

If any statement is made on the floor of the House by a member or Minister which another member believes to be untrue, incomplete or incorrect, it does not constitute a breach of privilege. If an incorrect statement is made, there are other remedies by which the issue can be decided<sup>280</sup>. In order to constitute a breach of privilege or contempt of the House, it has to be proved that the statement was not only wrong or misleading but it was made deliberately to mislead the House. A breach of privilege can arise only when the member or the Minister makes a false statement or an incorrect statement wilfully, deliberately and knowingly<sup>281</sup>.

When two members sought to raise a question of privilege against the Minister of Food or Agriculture on the ground that he had suppressed the truth and misled the Public Accounts Committee, when he appeared before them, the Speaker inter-alia ruled:

Incorrect statements made by a Minister cannot make any basis for a breach of privilege. It is only a deliberate lie, if it can be substantiated, that would certainly bring the offence within the meaning of breach of privilege. Other lapses, other mistakes do not come under this category, because every day we find that Ministers make their statements in which they make mistakes and which they correct afterwards<sup>282</sup>.

Leakage of budget proposals or official secrets does not form any basis for a breach of privilege.

On 3 March 1956, when notices of adjournment motions were given by two members in connection with an alleged leakage of budget proposals, another member contended that it constituted an express breach of privilege of the House. In this connection, the Speaker gave the following ruling:

The precedents of the United Kingdom should guide us in determining whether any breach of privilege was in fact committed in the present case. So far as I can gather, only two cases occurred in which the House of Commons took notice of the leakage of the budget proposals. They are known as the Thomas case and the Dalton case. In neither of these cases was the leakage treated as a breach of privilege of the House nor were the cases sent to the Committee of Privileges for inquiry. The prevailing view in the House of Commons is that until the financial proposals are placed before the House of Commons, they are an official secret. A reference of the present leakage to the Committee of Privileges does not, therefore, arise<sup>283</sup>.

Statements made by Ministers at party meetings are not privileged<sup>284</sup>.

No privilege of Parliament is involved if statements on matter of public interest are not first made in the House and are made outside. Such actions are against conventions and propriety but do not constitute any basis on which breaches of privilege can be founded<sup>285</sup>.

It is not a breach of privilege if documents intended for members are circulated to the Press and non-members first, but such acts are deprecated.

A summary of the Bank Award Commission Report was laid on the Table. A question of breach of privilege was raised in the House on 22 August 1955. Thereupon, the Speaker observed:

Whenever a report is to be presented to Parliament, Government have to be very particular to see that a summary of it or information therefrom is not published in the Press before the report is presented to Parliament. What has happened now is a very irregular practice and I do not know who is responsible for it. The Minister has promised to inquire and let us await the results of his inquiry<sup>286</sup>.

On 5 September 1955, the Minister expressed his inability in locating how the leakage had occurred. The member who had raised the question of privilege was not satisfied with the statement of the Minister and there was demand for reference of the case to the Committee of Privileges. The Speaker ruled inter-alia as follows:

...It is equally the duty of the Press to help observance of parliamentary conventions; it is a wrong practice to obtain information in that manner and give publicity to it before a particular matter is placed before Parliament. It was undoubtedly improper for that paper to do so<sup>287</sup>.

When the findings and conclusions of the Ganganath Committee which had been appointed by the Government to inquire into the allegations regarding the import of sugar in pursuance of the assurance given by the Prime Minister on the floor of the House on 17 November 1950, were released to the Press before the report was laid on the Table, a question of privilege was raised. On 5 April 1951, the Deputy Speaker ruled:

...this was not a Committee appointed by the House and it had no obligation to submit its report to the House...No doubt, if any Committee is appointed by Government in pursuance of any resolution or wishes of the House and not independently, while the House is sitting, naturally the House would expect that such Committee's proceedings should be disclosed to itself first. Subject to this observation, there is absolutely no breach of privilege in the present case<sup>288</sup>.

Where the report of a Committee has been presented to the House, its publication by the Press before copies of the report have been made available to members is undesirable, but it is not a breach of privilege of the House<sup>289</sup>.

Breaches of rules, conventions and practices are not regarded as breaches of privilege. If breaches of rules, etc., take place, they may invite the displeasure of the Speaker or censure of the House on a proper motion<sup>290</sup>.

No breach of privilege is involved if a member's speech has not been covered in full or has been covered in a summary form in the Press or over the Radio or T.V. It is also not a breach of privilege if a particular speech is not covered as adequately as other speeches, or is not given prominence.

Seizure of a petition form addressed to the House and intended to be presented to it through a member from a person arrested by the Police on a criminal charge has not been considered a breach of privilege or contempt of the House<sup>291</sup>.

Undesirable, undignified and unbecoming behaviour on the part of a member at the time of President's Address to both the Houses of Parliament assembled together under article 85 is not a matter involving a breach of privilege or contempt of the House, but is one of conduct of members and maintaining decorum and dignity by them<sup>292</sup>.

Removal of offending members from the House under orders of the Governor at the time of his Address to members of the Legislature under article 176 is not a breach of privilege of the House or its members<sup>293</sup>.

A statement reported to have been made by a Chief Minister that appointment of a parliamentary committee to study the situation in a part of his State would amount to interference in the affairs of that State has not been held to constitute a breach of privilege and contempt of Parliament<sup>294</sup>. Similarly, a statement reported to have been made by a Chief Minister opposing a suggestion made in the Lok Sabha for sending a parliamentary delegation to study the situation in his State has been held not to constitute a breach of privilege or contempt of the House<sup>295</sup>.

Non-implementation of an assurance given by a Minister on the floor of the House is neither a breach of privilege nor a contempt of the House, for the process of implementation of a policy matter is conditional on a number of factors contributing to such policy<sup>296</sup>. In the Import Licenses Case, the Speaker inter-alia ruled that the House has various remedies available to it to call the Government to account and secure compliance with its directions, but inadequate compliance of an assurance or delay in its fulfilment will not constitute a breach of privilege<sup>297</sup>.

If the Appropriation Accounts are laid on the Table of the Legislative Council before they are so laid on the Table of the Legislative Assembly, there is no breach of privilege, though it would be more appropriate if they were first laid before the Assembly which votes or grants moneys to the Governments<sup>298</sup>.

No question of privilege arises when a Minister decides not to make a statement in the House giving reasons for his resignation. However, if he releases such a statement to the Press without first making it in the House, it would amount to contempt<sup>303</sup>.

Alleged use of forged signatures of certain members on a telegram or by a news agency, not being a reflection on Parliament as a whole, is not a breach of privilege. Though it is a serious matter, the remedy lies not with the House but outside it<sup>304</sup>.

Procedure for Dealing with Questions of Privilege

The procedure for dealing with questions of privilege is broadly laid down in the Rules<sup>309</sup>. A question of privilege may be raised in the House only after obtaining the consent of the Speaker<sup>310</sup>; this has been made obligatory so that the time of the House is not taken up by raising a matter which, on the face of it, is not admissible<sup>311</sup>. A member who wishes to raise a question of privilege is, therefore, required to give notice in writing to the Secretary-General by 10.00 hrs. on the day the question is proposed to be raised<sup>312</sup>. If the question of privilege is based on a document, the notice must be accompanied by that document<sup>313</sup>. On receipt of the notice, the matter is considered by the Speaker who may either give or withhold his consent to the raising of the question of privilege in the House. The member concerned is then informed of the Speaker's decision. Where the matter is of an immediate nature and there is no time for a notice being given, the Speaker has permitted a member to raise a question of privilege without previous notice in writing<sup>314</sup>.

The question whether a matter complained of is actually a breach of privilege or contempt of the House is entirely for the House to decide, as the House alone is the master of its privileges. The Speaker, in giving his consent to the raising of a matter in the House as a question of privilege, considers only whether the matter is fit for further inquiry and whether it should be brought before the House. In giving his consent, the Speaker is guided by the following conditions prescribed for the admissibility of questions of privilege<sup>315</sup>:

Not more than one question shall be raised at the same sitting; the question shall be restricted to a specific matter of recent occurrence; and the matter requires the intervention of the House.

A question of privilege should thus be raised by a member at the earliest opportunity and should require the interposition of the House<sup>316</sup>. Even a delay of one day might prove fatal to the notice of privilege, provided the specific matter sought to be raised was of urgent importance at a particular time<sup>317</sup>.

A matter which is postponed to suit the convenience of the House or to give the Speaker an opportunity to consider it fully does not lose priority when it is eventually allowed to be raised. It is for the Speaker to decide whether the subject matter of a question of privilege is a specific matter of recent occurrence<sup>318</sup>.

The Speaker, before deciding whether the matter proposed to be raised as a question of privilege requires the intervention of the House and whether he should give his consent to the raising of the matter in the House, may give an opportunity to the person incriminated to explain his case to the Speaker<sup>319</sup>. The Speaker may, if he thinks fit, also hear views of members before deciding admissibility of a question of privilege<sup>320</sup>. When a member seeks to raise a question of privilege against another member, the Speaker, before giving his consent to the raising of the matter in the House, always gives an opportunity to the member complained against to place before the Speaker or the House such facts as may be pertinent to the matter<sup>321</sup>.

While seeking to raise a question of privilege, a member should lay before the House all the necessary evidence in support of his contention. Production of further evidence at a subsequent date is not admissible. No privilege issue can, therefore, be raised on a matter that has previously been decided on a question of privilege even though the member might have in his possession fresh material to support his contention. In such a case, the member has recourse to other remedies; he may raise an appropriate debate on the matter.

There has been, however, an occasion where although the Speaker had withheld his consent to the raising of a question of privilege, the members again sought to raise the matter in the House on the next day. The Speaker, thereupon, observed that if there were any documents or evidence, the members were free to adduce the same by way of further notices and he would examine those notices<sup>322</sup>.

If a newspaper reports incorrectly the proceedings of the House or comments casting reflection on the House or its members, the Speaker may, in the first instance, give an opportunity to the editor of the newspaper to present his case before giving his consent to the raising of a question of privilege in the House<sup>323</sup>. The Speaker normally withholds his consent to the raising of a question of privilege after the editor or press correspondent of the newspaper concerned has expressed regret or published a correction<sup>324</sup>.

Occasionally, members have raised as questions of privilege, matters affecting them personally at the hands of the police, i.e. for alleged abuses, ill-treatment or obstruction by the police authorities.

When the Speaker receives any complaint or notice thereof from a member regarding an assault on or misbehaviour with him by the police authorities, the Speaker might, if he is satisfied, permit the member to make a statement in the House under the Rule 377<sup>325</sup>. In such case, the member may be asked to submit to the Speaker in advance a copy of the statement that he would make in the House in this connection. Thereafter, the Speaker might get the Government version on the facts. In the light of the facts given by the two sides, the Speaker might decide whether he should allow the matter to be raised in the House as a question of privilege.

Successive Speakers have, however, held that an assault on or misbehaviour with a member unconnected with his parliamentary work or mere discourtesy by the police or officers of the Government are not matters of privilege, and such complaints should be referred by members to the Ministers directly.

Leave of the House for Raising a Question of Privilege

After the Speaker has given his consent to the raising of a matter in the House as a question of privilege, the member who tabled the notice has, when called by the Speaker, to ask for leave of the House to raise the question of privilege<sup>326</sup>. While asking for such leave, the member concerned is permitted to make only a short statement relevant to the question of privilege<sup>327</sup>. The Speaker has, in his discretion, sometimes permitted other members also to make short statements relevant to the question of privilege<sup>328</sup>. If objection to leave being granted is taken, the Speaker requests those members who are in favour of leave being granted to rise in their places<sup>329</sup>. If twenty-five or more members rise accordingly, the House is deemed to have granted leave to raise the matter and the Speaker declares that leave is granted; otherwise the Speaker informs the member that he does not have leave of the House to raise the matter.

Leave to raise a question of privilege in the House can be asked for only by the member who has given notice of the question of privilege. He cannot authorise another member to do so on his behalf<sup>330</sup>.

A question of privilege is accorded priority over other items in the List of Business. Accordingly, leave to raise a question of privilege is asked for after the question and before other items in the List are taken up<sup>331</sup>.

325. The Rule deals with raising a matter which is not a point of order. See Bhogendra Jha Case, L.S. Deb., 6-4-1981, cc. 306-08; Satyanarayan Jatiya Case, L.S. Deb., 22-12-1981, cc. 359-64; Dr. Golam Yuzdam Case, L.S. Deb., 5-11-1982, cc. 354-56.

Urgent matters requiring immediate intervention of the House may, however, be allowed by the Speaker to be raised at any time during the course of a sitting after the disposal of questions but such occasions are rare<sup>332</sup>.

Consideration of a Question of Privilege

After leave is granted by the House for raising a question of privilege, the matter may either be considered and decided by the House itself, or it may be referred by the House, on a motion made by any member, to the Committee of Privileges for examination, investigation and report<sup>333</sup>. The usual practice is to refer the matter of complaint to the Committee of Privileges, and the House defers its judgment until the report of the Committee has been presented<sup>334</sup>. However, in cases where the House finds that the matter is too trivial or that the offender has already tendered an adequate apology, the House itself disposes of the matter by deciding to proceed no further in the matter<sup>335</sup>. Further, in case there is difference of opinion in the House about the alleged breach of privilege, the House may decide the issue on the floor instead of referring the matter to the Committee of Privileges.

On 5 April 1967, a question of privilege was raised in the House alleging that the Ministers of External Affairs and Commerce and the Prime Minister had misled the House by making misleading and untruthful statements in the House<sup>336</sup>. A motion was moved to refer the matter to the Privileges Committee. The Minister of Parliamentary Affairs moved a counter motion to the effect that Ministers concerned had not committed any breach of privilege of the House.

Thereupon, a point of order was raised that the second motion which had merely the effect of a negative vote, was out of order under Rule 344. Citing Rule 226, the Speaker observed that either one of the two motions or both the motions could be made thereunder, and ruled<sup>337</sup>:

The original motion states that a prima facie case of breach of privilege has been made out and the matter should be referred to the Committee of Privileges for investigation. If this motion is voted down, it only means that the matter is not referred to the Committee of Privileges, and the substantive part of the question of privilege, namely, whether a breach of privilege or contempt of the House has been committed remains, and the House has to give a decision on the merits of the case.

Therefore, the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs is within his right to invite the House to come to a decision whether any breach of privilege or contempt of the House has been committed.

I rule that both the motions are in order and they should be put to the vote of the House one after the other.

After a lengthy debate in which the Ministers of External Affairs and Commerce explained the facts of the matter, the original motion was put to vote first and negatived. Thereafter, the second motion was put to vote and adopted by the House.

Complaints against Members

When a complaint of an alleged breach of privilege or contempt of the House is made by a member, the proceedings in the House dealing with that complaint differ depending upon whether the person implicated is a member or a stranger. The main point of difference in the two cases is that before making a complaint against a member, a notice is given to him beforehand as a matter of courtesy. Further, when a member seeks to raise question of privilege against another member, the Speaker, as already stated, before giving his consent to the raising of the matter in the House, gives an opportunity to the member complained against, to place before the Speaker or the House such facts as he may have on the question. Where a complaint of an alleged breach of privilege or contempt of the House was based on a newspaper report of an alleged statement made by a member outside the House, which the member concerned denied having made, the Speaker accepted the statement of that member in preference to what had appeared in the newspaper and withheld his consent to the raising of the question of privilege<sup>338</sup>.

Where a question of alleged breach of privilege was raised against a member for having cast aspersions on another member in a press interview, the Speaker allowed the member on whom aspersions were cast and the member who was alleged to have cast aspersions, to make personal explanations and thereafter, treated the matter as closed<sup>339</sup>.

When a complaint against a member is brought before the House, it is essential that the member concerned should be present in the House; in case he is not present, the making of the complaint is deferred until the following sitting. Where the member complained against is present in the House when the complaint is made, he is heard in explanation and then directed to withdraw from the House by the Speaker.

In other respects, the procedure for dealing with a complaint of alleged breach of privilege or contempt of the House against a member is the same as that for dealing with a complaint against a stranger.

Complaints against Members or Officers of the Other House

Neither House of Parliament can claim or exercise any authority over a member of the other House. Consequently, neither House can take upon itself to punish any breach of privilege or contempt offered to it by a member or officer of the other House.

No case of a breach of privilege or contempt of the House can be founded on a speech made by a member in the other House or in any State Legislature in India, because the proceedings of each House of Parliament and all Legislatures are privileged and no action can be taken in one House for anything that is said in another House.

On 26 March 1959, a member drew the attention of the House to a news-item appearing in Samaj, an Oriya daily of Bhubaneshwar in its issue of 18 March 1959, wherein the Chief Minister of Orissa was alleged to have cast sweeping and general remarks against members of Parliament. The member said that the Chief Minister of Orissa and the Editor of Samaj might be called to the bar of the House to explain their conduct or, in the alternative, the matter might be referred to the Committee of Privileges for investigation and report.

While refusing his consent for the reason that each House is supreme as far as its own proceedings are concerned, the Speaker ruled:

If really the hon. Chief Minister has said what he is alleged to have said, it is regrettable... if it is really true, this ought not to be continued. I hope and trust that this wholesome principle will be followed everywhere—no House will cast any aspersion and no member will cast any aspersion on any member of the other House or any other House in this way<sup>340</sup>.

On 30 March 1970, during the course of a debate in Rajya Sabha, a member of that House made certain allegations against a member of Lok Sabha. After some discussion in the House, the Speaker addressed a letter to the Chairman, Rajya Sabha inviting his attention to the matter and observing, inter alia, as follows:

“You will agree that it is not desirable for members of one House to make allegations or cast reflections on the floor of the House on the members of the other House.”

In his reply, the Chairman, Rajya Sabha, expressing his agreement with the Speaker, stated that the Deputy Chairman, Rajya Sabha had already expressed his disapproval of the member’s speech<sup>341</sup>.

However, notice of the breach of privilege or contempt of the House can be taken if the member of the other House or any other State Legislature has committed it outside the House to which he belongs.

On 11 May 1954, a member raised a question of privilege in Rajya Sabha alleging that a member of Lok Sabha had, at the Thirty-first Session of the All India Hindu Mahasabha, cast reflection on the proceedings of Rajya Sabha and requested that steps might be taken to investigate the matter.

On the following day, the member incriminated against, raised a question of privilege in Lok Sabha that on the previous night he was served with a notice issued by the Secretary of Rajya Sabha. The Prime Minister argued that there was nothing objectionable in the letter and pointed out that in the Sundarayya's Case in 1952, a member of Rajya Sabha had helped an investigation being conducted by Lok Sabha.

On 15 May 1954, the Chairman informed Rajya Sabha that he had received a communication from the Speaker enclosing a statement by the member concerned. In his covering note, the Speaker referred to the suggestion which he had made in the House that the Privileges Committees of both the Houses should evolve an agreed common procedure for such matters. This was agreed to by the Rajya Sabha.

The Report of the Joint Sitting of the Committees of Privileges of Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha was presented to both the Houses on 23 August 1954, in which a procedure was laid down for cases where a member of one House committed a breach of privilege of the other. The Report was adopted by Lok Sabha on 2 December 1954<sup>342</sup>.

Accordingly, when a question of breach of privilege or contempt of the House is raised in either House in which a member, officer or servant of the other House is involved, the procedure followed is that the Presiding Officer of the House in which the question of privilege is raised, refers the case to the Presiding Officer of the other House, only if he is satisfied on hearing the member who raises the question or on perusing any document where the complaint is based on document that a breach of privilege has been committed<sup>343</sup>. Upon the case being so referred, it is the duty of the Presiding Officer of the other House to deal with the matter in the same way as if it were a case of breach of privilege of that House or of a member thereof. Thereafter, that Presiding Officer communicates to the Presiding Officer of the House where the question of privilege was originally raised, a report about the inquiry, if any, and the action taken on the reference.

If the offending member, officer or servant tenders an apology to the Presiding Officer of the House in which the question of privilege is raised or to the Presiding Officer of the other House to which the reference is made, usually no further action in the matter is taken after such apology has been tendered<sup>344</sup>.

At a meeting of the Congress Parliamentary Party, a member had made some allegation against two Ministers. On 20 June 1967, the Prime Minister made a statement in the House that the allegations had not been substantiated on the basis of the material furnished by the member<sup>345</sup>.

On 21 June 1967, a question of privilege was raised in the House that since the allegations against the two Ministers who were members of the House had not been substantiated, the entire House had been brought into disrepute. A motion was moved that the question of privilege be referred to the Chairman, Rajya Sabha, for action in accordance with the procedure evolved by the Joint Report of the Privileges Committees of both Houses.

The Minister of Law, participating in the debate, observed that “the statement was not made in public but at a party meeting and made to the leader of the party...by a person who is a member of the party, and, therefore, subject to the party discipline by the leader of the party, Prime Minister.” He opposed the motion for two reasons: “first, because this is an internal matter of the Congress Party, and secondly, because if (such matters) are treated as breaches of privilege, party functioning will become impossible in the country.”

After a lengthy debate, the motion was put to vote and negatived by the House<sup>346</sup>.

On 17 August 1987, the Speaker informed the House that he had received a notice of question of privilege against the Minister of State in the Department of Defence Research and Development (who was a member of the other House) for allegedly deliberately and knowingly misleading the House by making a statement in the House on 15 April 1987. The Speaker also informed the House that after going through the comments received from the Minister and a further notice of question of privilege received from the member to whom a copy of the Minister’s comments was given, he proposed to refer the matter to the Deputy Chairman, Rajya Sabha, for such action as she may consider necessary and proper in view of the fact that the Minister was a member of the other House and a question of privilege can, therefore, be dealt with only by that House in accordance with the procedure laid down in the Report of the Joint Sitzings of the Committees of Privileges of Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha. On 25 March 1988, the Chairman, Rajya Sabha, disallowed the question of privilege and forwarded a copy of the ruling to the Speaker, Lok Sabha<sup>347</sup>.

Where a contempt or a breach of privilege has been committed by a member of Parliament against a State Legislature or by a member of a State Legislature against Parliament or the Legislature of another State, a convention is being developed to the effect that when a question of breach of privilege is raised in any Legislature in which a member of another Legislature is involved, the Presiding Officer refers the case to the Presiding Officer of the Legislature to which that member belongs and the latter deals with the matter in the same way as if it were a breach of privilege of that House, unless on hearing the member who raises the question or perusing any document, where the complaint is based on a document, the Presiding Officer is satisfied that no breach of privilege has been committed or the matter is too trivial to be taken notice of, in which case he may disallow the motion for breach of privilege. This procedure is being followed by those Legislatures which have adopted a resolution to this effect.

On 4 October 1982, a question of privilege was sought to be raised in the House regarding reported proposed summoning of a member before a Legislative Assembly in connection with a question of alleged breach of privilege and contempt of that House by the member for alleging in a press statement that the candidate belonging to his party for election to Rajya Sabha had been defeated because 'some Opposition MLAs had been purchased'.

Similarly, on 22 August 1984, the Speaker informed the House that a question of privilege was sought to be raised regarding reference of a question of privilege against a member of the House (who was also the Union Law Minister) by a Legislative Assembly to their Committee of Privileges for allegedly turning down the resolution passed by the Assembly, proposing abolition of the Legislative Council of that State.

The Speaker, while informing the House that he had not received any communication in that regard either from the Legislative Assembly or the member concerned, observed that it was a well established convention that if a prima facie case of breach of privilege or contempt of the House was made out against a member who belonged to another Legislature, the matter was reported to the Presiding Officer of that Legislature for taking such action as he considered necessary.

The Speaker hoped that all concerned would take the relevant facts into account while dealing with this sensitive and important issue<sup>348</sup>.

Reference of Questions of Privilege to Committee of Privileges by Speaker

The Speaker is empowered to refer, suo motu, any question of privilege or contempt to the Committee of Privileges for examination, investigation and report<sup>349</sup>. In doing so, the Speaker need not bring the matter before the House for consideration and decision as to whether the matter be so referred to the Committee.

As stated earlier, in as much as the House alone is the master of its privileges, normally all questions of privilege should be considered by the House. Speaker's power basically is to see whether, on the face of it, a matter is such as deserves to be allowed to be raised as a matter of privilege, giving it priority over other business. Once the Speaker has given his consent for the raising of a matter as a privilege issue, it is entirely for the House to decide whether the matter actually involves a breach of privilege or contempt of the House and whether the House should itself take a decision in that regard or refer it to the Committee of Privileges. Although, in some cases, the Speaker has permitted the matter to be raised in the House by a member 348. Ibid., 22-8-1984; P.O. Vol. XXIX, 2, pp. 6-7.

349. Rule 227.

and then declared that he was referring the matter to the Committee in exercise of his discretionary power<sup>350</sup>, successive Speakers have interpreted this discretionary power to mean that the Speaker may on his own refer only such a matter to the Committee on which there is substantial agreement in the House, that the Speaker's power is not concurrent with or a substitute for the power of the House itself and that the only purpose of the rule is to save the time of the House and cut short the formal procedure in cases where discussion reveals that there is general agreement, on referring the matter to the Committee.

In a number of cases, however, the Speaker referred the matter direct to the Committee without first bringing the same before the House<sup>351</sup>.

When a question of privileges is referred to the Committee of Privileges by the Speaker in exercise of his discretionary powers, the Committee usually present their report to the Speaker<sup>352</sup>. The Speaker may, thereafter, either close the matter or direct that the report of the Committee be laid on the Table<sup>353</sup>. Further action in the matter is then taken in accordance with the decision of the House.

Power of Speaker to give Directions

The Speaker may issue such directions as may be necessary for regulating the procedure in connection with all matters connected with the consideration of the question of privilege either in the Committee of Privileges or in the House<sup>354</sup>.

Attendance of a Member as Witness Before the Other House or a House of State Legislature or Committee thereof

Neither House of Parliament has any authority whatever, on any occasion, to summon, much less to compel, the attendance of a member of the other House. If the attendance of a member of one House to give evidence before the other House or a Committee thereof is desired, it is necessary not only to obtain the leave of the House to which such member belongs but also the consent of that member. In other words, a member of one House is not bound to attend the other House or its Committees to give evidence, and even if he is willing to give evidence, he cannot do so without the leave of the House of which he is a member<sup>355</sup>. This position would hold good, irrespective of whether the House is or is not in session<sup>356</sup>.

This principle would be applicable between a House of Parliament and a House of State Legislature or between Houses of different State Legislatures and their members inter se in the same way as it is applicable between the two Houses of Parliament and their members<sup>357</sup>.

In accordance with this principle, Lok Sabha would not permit any of its members to give evidence before the other House of Parliament or a Committee thereof or before a House of State Legislature or a Committee thereof without a request desiring his attendance and without the consent of the member whose attendance is required. It is essential that such requests from the other House of Parliament or a Committee thereof or from a House of State Legislature or a Committee thereof should express clearly the cause and purpose for which the attendance of the member is desired<sup>358</sup>.

It is also the duty of a member that he should not give evidence before the other House or a Committee thereof or before a House of State Legislature or a Committee thereof, without the leave of the House being first obtained. Any neglect or breach of this duty by a member would be regarded by the House as a contempt of the House<sup>359</sup>.

When a request is received, seeking leave of the House to a member to give evidence before the other House or a Committee thereof or before a House, of State Legislature or a Committee thereof, the matter is referred by the Speaker to the Committee of Privileges<sup>360</sup>. On a report from the Committee, a motion is moved in the House by the Chairman or a member of the Committee to the effect that the House agrees with the report and further action is then taken in accordance with the decision of the House<sup>361</sup>.

Declaration of Assets and Liabilities by Members of Lok Sabha

In a civil appeal<sup>362</sup>, the important question put before the Supreme Court was whether before casting votes, the voters have a right to know relevant particulars of their candidates. Reliance was placed upon the recommendations made by the Law Commission of India in its 170th Report which inter alia called for true and correct disclosure of a statement of assets owned by the candidate, his spouse and dependant relations. The Supreme Court inter alia placing reliance on the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights observed that the right to get information in democracy is recognized all throughout and it is a natural right flowing from the concept of democracy. Accordingly, the Court directed the Election Commission to call for information inter alia on affidavit by issuing necessary order in exercise of its power under article 324 of the Constitution from each candidate seeking election to Parliament or the State Legislature, to furnish information about his assets (immovable, moveable, bank balances, etc.) and of spouse and that of dependants along with the liabilities if any, particularly whether there are any overdues of any public financial institutions or Government dues.

In pursuance thereto, the Government held a meeting of the political parties on the 8 July 2012 with a view to evolving consensus regarding amendments required in the Representation of the People Act, 1951. The representatives of the various political parties unanimously expressed the view that there was a need to curb criminalization of politics and suggested that a draft Bill be circulated. Accordingly, a draft bill was prepared and discussed in the meeting of political parties held on 2 August 2002. In furtherance thereto, Representation of People (Amendment) Bill, 2002 was passed by the Parliament which inserted Section 75A in the Representation of People Act, 1951 providing for furnishing of information regarding assets and liabilities by members.

In exercise of the powers conferred upon the Speaker, Lok Sabha by sub-section (3) of Section 75 (A) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, Members of Lok Sabha (Declaration of Assets and Liabilities) Rules, 2004 was enacted in 2004. As per Rule 3 of Assets and Liabilities Rules, every elected candidate for the House of the People shall, within ninety days from the date on which he makes and subscribes an oath or affirmation for taking his seat, furnish as in Form I the following information as required to be furnished by him to the Speaker in pursuance of sub-section (1) of section 75A, namely:-

- (i) the movable and immovable property of which he, his spouse and his dependent children are jointly or severally owners or beneficiaries;
- (ii) his liabilities to any public financial institution; and
- (iii) his liabilities to the Central Government or to the State Governments.

Any wilful contravention of the Assets and Liabilities Rules, 2004 including suppression of information about the assets and liabilities by any member will amount to breach of privilege of the House. Any citizen of India or any other member may make a complaint in writing to the Speaker accompanied by an affidavit and copies of documentary evidence, if any, on which the complainant relies upon, that a member has willfully contravened the provision(s) of Assets and Liabilities Rules. Such a complaint shall also have to be signed and verified in the manner laid down in Code of Civil Procedure 1908. If the complaint complies with the procedural requirements of Rules, then the complaint along with annexures are forwarded to such member seeking his comments in writing thereon to the Speaker. After receiving and considering the comments, the Speaker may reject the complaint on being satisfied that there has not been any wilful contravention of the Rules. If, however, the Speaker is satisfied that it is necessary or expedient so to do, having regard to the nature, and circumstances of the case, may refer the complaint to the Committee of Privileges for making an inquiry and submitting a report.

Committee on Violation of Protocol Norms and Contemptuous Behaviour of Government Officers with Members of Lok Sabha

On 2 August 2012, Speaker constituted<sup>363</sup> an ad-hoc ‘Committee on Violation of Protocol Norms and Contemptuous Behaviour of Government officers with members of Lok Sabha’ to deal with complaints of protocol violation which may not amount to breach of privilege.

The terms of reference of the Committee shall be to –

- (a) examine every complaint referred to by the Speaker relating to -
  - (i) violation of protocol norms laid down from time to time regarding official dealings with members of Parliament;
  - (ii) violation of instructions or guidelines issued by the Government regarding official dealings between Administration and members of Parliament; and
  - (iii) discourteous behaviour by Government servants with a member during official dealings; and
- (b) make such recommendations as it may deem fit.

CHAPTER XII

Conduct of Members

In order to maintain the highest traditions in parliamentary life, members of Parliament are expected to observe a certain standard of conduct, both inside the House as well as outside it. Their behaviour should be such as to enhance the dignity of Parliament and its members in general. The conduct of members should not be contrary to the usage, or derogatory to the dignity of the House or in any way inconsistent with the standards which Parliament is entitled to expect of its members<sup>1</sup>.

Apart from the Committee of Privileges which is there to inquire into cases of breaches of privilege of the House and its members, ad hoc committees of the House may also be appointed from time to time to consider and investigate the conduct of a member of the House and to find out whether such conduct was derogatory to the

1. Some illustrations which bear on the conduct of members and the standard that Parliament expects of them are given below—

Information given to members in confidence, or by virtue of their being members of Committees of Parliament, should not be divulged to anyone nor used by them directly or indirectly in the profession in which they are engaged, such as in their capacity as editors or correspondents of newspapers or proprietors of business firms and so on.

A member should not try to secure business from Government for a firm, company or organization with which he is directly or indirectly concerned.

A member should not give certificates which are not based on facts.

A member should not make profit out of a Government residence allotted to him by sub-letting the premises.

A member should not unduly influence Government officials or Ministers in a case in which he is interested financially, either directly or indirectly.

A member should not receive hospitality of any kind for any work that he desires or proposes to do from a person or organization on whose behalf the work is to be done by him.

A member should not in his capacity as a lawyer or a legal adviser or a counsel or a solicitor appear before a Minister or an executive officer exercising quasi-judicial powers.

A member should not proceed to take action on behalf of his constituents on some insufficient or baseless facts.

A member should not permit himself to be used as a ready supporter of anybody's grievances or complaints.

A member should not endorse incorrect certificates on bills claiming amounts due to him.

A member should not elicit information from Government in an unauthorized manner by inducing an official to give information, which in the course of his normal functions the official should not do, nor encourage any such person to speak to him against his senior officials on matters of public importance and policy.

A member should not write recommendatory letters or speak to Government officials for employment or business contacts for any of his relations or other persons in whom he is directly or indirectly interested. Bn.(II), 17-5-1952, para 57.

dignity of the House and inconsistent with the standards expected of members<sup>2</sup>.

In 1951, when the question of appointment of a committee to inquire into the conduct of H.G. Mudgal, a member of the Provisional Parliament, was before the House, members expressed doubt as to the need for appointment of a special committee to go into this question when there already was in existence a Committee of Privileges of the House. Speaker Mavalankar then observed:

(Even though) there is a Committee of Privileges constituted under the rules, yet it is within the powers of the House to constitute other special committees if there are any special circumstances and inquiries to be made. There is nothing inconsistent in that. Moreover, it is a moot question to be considered whether any such conduct as alleged is really in a sense a breach of privilege of the House or something different. A member may behave in a manner in which the House would not like him to behave and yet it may be argued that it is not a breach of privilege. In all such circumstances, the practice in the House of Commons has been to constitute a special committee and the procedure of making a motion is the procedure that is usually adopted in the House of Commons even though there is a Committee of Privileges<sup>3</sup>.

The extent and amplitude of the words “conduct of a member” have not been defined exhaustively, and it is within the powers of the House in each case to determine whether a member has acted in an unbecoming manner or has acted in a manner unworthy of a member of Parliament. Thus, even though the facts of a particular case do not come within any of the recognized heads of breach of privilege or contempt of the House, the conduct of a member may be considered by the House as unbecoming and derogatory to the dignity of the House<sup>4</sup>.

The House has the right to punish its members for their misconduct. It exercises its jurisdiction of scrutiny over its members for their conduct whether it takes place inside or outside the House. It also has the power to punish its members for disorderly conduct and other contempts, whether committed within the House or beyond its walls<sup>5</sup>.

2.(i) For instance, a Committee on the Conduct of a Member (The Mudgal Case) was appointed in 1951 and two Committees on the Conduct of Certain Members during President's Address were appointed in 1963 and 1971. (ii) On the report of a Committee to enquire into the allegations of improper conduct on the part of some members constituted on 12 December 2005, Lok Sabha passed a resolution accepting the findings of the Committee that the conduct of ten members was unethical and unbecoming of members of Parliament and expelled them from the membership of Lok Sabha on 23 December 2005. (iii) Jaya Bachchan, MP (RS) was disqualified from the membership of Rajya Sabha for holding office of profit vide order of the President dated 16 March 2006. Similarly, Krishna Murari Moghe, MP (LS), was disqualified from the membership of Lok Sabha for holding office of profit by the President on 10 July 2007. (iv) Based on the recommendations made by the Committee to Inquire into Misconduct of Members of Lok Sabha (constituted on 16 May 2007), in their Third Report, Lok Sabha adopted a motion on 20 August 2008 expelling a member (Babubhai K. Katara) from the membership of the House. (v) On 18 May 2007 a case relating to allegations against Rajesh Kumar Majhi was referred to the Committee to inquire into the Misconduct of Members. In their First Report recommended that he be suspended for 30 sittings of the House. (vi) On 22 July 2008, a Committee was appointed to inquire into the complaint made by some members regarding alleged offer of money to them in connection with voting on the motion of Confidence (Fourteen Lok Sabha, December 2008).

4. See Report of the Committee on the Conduct of Certain Members, op. cit., 1963, pp. 7-8.

5. Ibid.

In the case of misconduct or contempts committed by its members, the House can impose these punishments: admonition, reprimand, withdrawal from the House, suspension from the service of the House, imprisonment, and expulsion from the House<sup>6</sup>.

If at any stage, the Chair is of the opinion that the conduct of a member is grossly disorderly, the member may be directed to withdraw immediately from the House<sup>7</sup>. A member, who disregards the authority of the Chair or abuses the rules of the House by persistent and wilful obstruction of the business before the House, may be named by the Chair and later suspended from the service of the House on a motion moved by a member and adopted by the House. Further, in the event of grave disorder occasioned by a member coming into the well of the House or abusing the Rules of the House, persistently and wilfully obstructing its business by shouting slogans or otherwise, such member shall, on being named by the Speaker, stand automatically suspended from the service of the House for five consecutive sittings or the remainder of the session, whichever is less<sup>8</sup>. The purpose of 'expulsion' is to rid the House of persons who are unfit for its membership.

The various aspects of Standards/Code of Conduct were gone into in detail by the Committee of Privileges (Eleventh Lok Sabha) in their Report on 'Ethics, Standards in Public Life, Privileges, Facilities to Members and Other Related Matters'<sup>9</sup>.

6. In a judgment delivered on 29 August 1966, the Madhya Pradesh High Court upheld the expulsion of Yeshwant Rao Meghawale and Pandhari Rao Kridutta from the membership of the Madhya Pradesh Legislative Assembly and observed that since the Legislative Assembly had the power and privilege of expelling a member resulting in the vacation of his seat, the correctness, legality or propriety of the two resolutions adopted by the Legislative Assembly on 17 March 1966, expelling the aforesaid two members could not be challenged in courts of law—Yeshwant Rao Meghawale v. Madhya Pradesh Legislative Assembly, A.I.R. 1967, Madhya Pradesh 95.

However, in a judgment delivered on 18 April 1977, the Punjab and Haryana High Court, by a 3-2 majority, held that a State Legislature is not clothed with any power to expel duly elected members as a measure of punishment for contempt of the House. The judgment inter alia said that the punishment for contempt of the House was "known and well-settled as being reprimand, suspension from the House for the duration of the session, fine and lastly, the keystone in this context being the power to commit the contemtor to prison"—Hardwari Lal Case, Hindustan Times, 9-4-1977.

V. Kishore Chandra S. Deo was suspended from the service of the House for one day on a motion moved by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs on 15 April 1987 and adopted by the House; Ajay Biswas was suspended from the service of the House for the remaining part of the Eighth Session of Eighth Lok Sabha on a motion moved by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs on 29 July 1987 and adopted by the House. The suspension was revoked with immediate effect on 30 July 1987 on a motion moved by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs and adopted by the House.

Dr. Datta Samant was directed to withdraw from the House on 11 May 1988, for persistently interrupting the proceedings.

7. Rule 373.
8. Rules 374 and 374A.
9. The Report was presented to Speaker (11 LS) on 27 November 1997. On 4 December 1997, the House was dissolved. Later, the Report was laid on the Table of the House by the Secretary-General on 28 March 1998, during the Twelfth Lok Sabha. See this Chapter under the sub-heading 'Ethical Principles'.

Rules to be Observed by Members while Present in the House

While the House is sitting, members are expected to observe certain rules which are technically known as the rules of parliamentary etiquette. These are based on the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha and the rulings given by the Speaker from time to time. The following are some of the important rules of parliamentary etiquette, which have to be generally observed by the members in Lok Sabha while the House is sitting:

When the Speaker enters the Chamber, members are to stop all conversation, repair to their seats and rise in their places. Members who enter the House at that time are required to stand silently in the gangway, till the Speaker takes the Chair<sup>10</sup>.

A member is not to read in the House any book, newspaper or letter except in connection with, or necessary for, the business of the House<sup>11</sup>.

A member is not to interrupt any member who is speaking, by disorderly expression, hissing, making running commentaries, or other interruptions or noises or in any other disorderly manner<sup>12</sup>. Occasional interruptions are allowed to clear a point or seek information to follow the tenor of a speech or to challenge mildly a statement, but frequent interruptions have been deprecated by the Chair<sup>13</sup>. Continuous interruptions mar the proceedings and dignity of the House as a whole<sup>14</sup>.

While the House is sitting, every member should enter and leave the Chamber with decorum<sup>15</sup>.

A member is to bow to the Chair while entering or leaving the Chamber, and also when taking or leaving his seat<sup>16</sup>. This respect is for the whole House, not for an individual occupying the Chair<sup>17</sup>.

A member is not to pass between the Chair and any member who is speaking. Breach of this rule has been strongly taken notice of by the Chair<sup>18</sup>.

Every member has to resume his seat as soon as the Speaker rises to speak, or calls out 'order' and addresses the House. Members are not to cross the floor, walk, stand, enter or leave the Chamber when the Speaker is on his feet<sup>19</sup>.

A member addressing the House has to resume his seat when any other member has interposed in the course of the debate to raise a point of order, or to offer a personal explanation with the permission of the Chair.

A member is always to address the Chair<sup>20</sup>. The practice of exchanging arguments by members between themselves has been deprecated by the Speaker.

A member is to keep to his place while addressing the House. Whenever a member, not occupying his usual seat, rises to ask a supplementary question or to make a speech, the Speaker does not call him<sup>21</sup>. However, if a member speaking from his place is inaudible to the reporters or the interpreters, he may be asked to speak from a seat near the microphone.

A member is to maintain silence when not speaking in the House. Members should not converse between themselves in the Chamber but, if it becomes absolutely necessary, they may do so in a very low voice, so as not to disturb the proceedings. Members are also not to talk or crack jokes with each other<sup>22</sup>.

A member is not to applaud when a distinguished visitor enters any of the Galleries, or the Special Box<sup>23</sup>.

But, in appropriate cases, the Speaker might make references to the presence of distinguished foreign visitors in the Special Box of the House and on such occasions, members can cheer those visitors by thumping their desks<sup>24</sup>.

No member should speak to the gallery from inside the House nor should he make any reference or appeal to it. However, in certain cases, where, for instance, a Minister while making a statement in the House appeals to the striking persons to resume duty or call off agitation, this is not regarded as speaking to the gallery or making any appeal to outsiders<sup>25</sup>.

References to the presence of strangers in the Visitor's Gallery have been held to be out of order<sup>26</sup>.

A member is not to resort to hunger-strike, dharna or any demonstration or perform any religious function in the precincts of the Parliament House and the Parliament House Estate<sup>27</sup>.

A member can remain within the precincts of the House only for an hour after the House is adjourned for the day. After that he cannot remain in any part of the Parliament House Estate unless specific permission of the Speaker has been obtained<sup>28</sup>.

A member is not to take shelter within the precincts of Parliament House if he knows that he is wanted by the police authorities in connection with some case against him. To do so, is against his dignity. Parliament House is not to be made a sanctuary or place of protection<sup>29</sup>.

Besides, in keeping with parliamentary conventions and etiquettes, members are forbidden:

- to enter the Chamber with a coat hanging on the arm<sup>30</sup>.
- to place their hats on the desk in the House<sup>31</sup>.
- to carry walking sticks into the Chamber unless permitted by the Speaker under such exceptional circumstances as old age or physical infirmity<sup>32</sup>.
- to smoke in the Chamber<sup>33</sup>.
- to say 'Jai Hind' or 'Vande Mataram' or anything of the kind in the House<sup>34</sup>.
- to raise slogans in the House<sup>35</sup>.
- to display flags or emblems on their seats in the House<sup>36</sup>.
- to bring a tape recorder into the House or play it there<sup>37</sup>.
- to stand in the gangway and talk to other members<sup>38</sup>.
- to produce exhibits during debate or make demonstrations in the House<sup>39</sup>.

Questions to be asked through the Chair

If a member desires to make an observation on a matter before the House or to ask a question of another member who is speaking, either to obtain clarification or for the purpose of any explanation about a matter which is under consideration of the House, he has to address the question through the Chair<sup>44</sup>. When speaking, members are to speak from their seats and rise while speaking. A member disabled by sickness or infirmity is, however, permitted to speak while sitting.

A member must not address individual members of the House while speaking, but he is always to address the Chair and make all remarks to other members through the Chair. It has been ruled that members should address each other in third person<sup>45</sup>. Similarly, Ministers have to be referred to by their official designation and not by name<sup>46</sup>.

Irrelevance or Repetition

If the Speaker feels that a member while speaking is persistently irrelevant or is indulging in tedious repetition of his own arguments or those advanced by other members who had preceded him, he directs that member to discontinue his speech<sup>47</sup>. If a member continues to speak in defiance of the Speaker's observation, his remarks would not form part of record<sup>48</sup>. It has been ruled quite often that while speaking members should not repeat arguments<sup>49</sup>. Repetition of the arguments is to be avoided, except when it is absolutely necessary to give emphasis to a point.

Rules to be Observed While Speaking

In their speeches, members cannot refer to any matters which are sub judice<sup>50</sup>. Where a member insists on referring to a matter which is sub judice in spite of the Chair asking him not to do so, the Chair may ask him to discontinue his speech forthwith. The Chair may also observe that the member should not have referred to a matter which was sub judice. Both statements are recorded and the Chair does not order expunction of the words already spoken by the member<sup>51</sup>.

The rule of sub judice, however, does not apply to matters of privilege or where disciplinary jurisdiction of the House with respect to its own members is concerned. In such cases, the Chair and the House consider each case on its merits<sup>52</sup>.

Members are not allowed to make personal charges against other members<sup>53</sup>.

No member is expected to use offensive expressions about the conduct or proceedings of Parliament or any State Legislature. They are not expected to cast reflections on any decision of the House except on a motion for rescinding such decision<sup>54</sup>.

Members are also not expected to make allegations against or cast aspersions on persons in high authority<sup>55</sup>. They are barred from bringing in the name of the President during a debate for the purpose of influencing it<sup>56</sup>. The language which the members may use should be parliamentary. The words and expressions must not be treasonable, seditious or defamatory. Although there is no bar to criticism of the Government, yet the members are expected not to use this right for the purpose of obstructing the business of the House<sup>57</sup>.

Members should not make use of expressions which are offensive, or attribute motives to the Chair<sup>58</sup>.

52. In Import Licence Case, it was complained that a member had allegedly received bribe for furthering the cause of some import licence applicants with the Government and had also allegedly forged the signatures of some members of Parliament. The member concerned wrote to the Speaker pleading that since the matter had become sub judice, it should not be discussed in the House. The Speaker giving his ruling inter alia observed that in the present case, the allegations of bribery and forgery, which had been prima facie established against the member by the CBI enquiry, were very serious and unbecoming of a member of Parliament and the member might be held guilty of lowering the dignity of the House. The House was, therefore, free to discuss any motion relating to the conduct of the member and the rule of sub judice would not come in the way—L.S. Deb., 2-12-1974, cc. 228-29.

Members are not allowed to make allegations of a defamatory or incriminatory nature against any person unless previous intimation has been given to the Speaker and also the Minister concerned<sup>59</sup>.

If a member wants to level charges against another member, he should give it in writing to the Speaker in advance<sup>60</sup>.

If a member makes an allegation against a Minister by name without giving any notice, name so mentioned may be expunged<sup>61</sup>.

Files or papers in the custody of a member cannot be demanded for inspection, unless the member concerned has quoted from them<sup>62</sup>.

If a Minister gives in his own words a summary or gist of a document or State paper, it is not necessary for him to lay relevant papers on the Table<sup>63</sup>. However, the Speaker may, on demand in the House, require the Minister to produce the original document or paper for his perusal, so that he may satisfy himself that the summary or gist given was in fact fair and adequate.

A member can point out any mistake or inaccuracy in a statement made by a Minister or any other member after seeking Speaker's permission and make a statement in reply thereto<sup>64</sup>.

Before referring to the matter in the House, the member should write to the Speaker pointing out the particulars of the mistake or inaccuracy. He should also place before the Speaker such evidence as he might be having in his possession in support of his allegation. The Speaker may, if he thinks fit, bring the matter to the notice of the Minister or the member concerned for the purpose of ascertaining the factual position in regard thereto. The Speaker may then, if he thinks it necessary, permit the member who made the allegation to raise the matter in the House.

In granting permission to a member to raise the matter in the House, a distinction is made between: (i) statements which are prima facie inaccurate in the light of the evidence produced by the member; and (ii) statements which according to member's own interpretation or argument are incorrect. In the latter case, permission to raise the matter is not accorded. The item regarding statement to be made by the member and the statement to be made by the Minister in reply thereto, is not put down in the list of business unless copies thereof have been submitted in writing to the Speaker sufficiently in advance and the Speaker has approved them. Words, phrases and expressions which are not in the statements, as approved by the Speaker, if spoken, do not form part of proceedings of the House. After the two statements have been made on the floor of the House, the matter is normally treated as closed. However, if the member wants to pursue the matter further, he may table notice of a motion for discussion of the matter. Members are not allowed to raise matters pertaining to Lok Sabha Secretariat and the functions of the Speaker on the Floor of the House<sup>65</sup>.

A member should not read the speech of another member<sup>66</sup>.

A member is not allowed to raise in the House subject matter of a notice or a communication sent by him to the Speaker or Lok Sabha Secretariat, unless he is specifically permitted by the Speaker. He should not read a written speech though notes may be referred to<sup>67</sup>.

Procedure when Speaker Rises

Whenever the Speaker rises to address the House, members are enjoined to hear him in silence and any member who is then speaking or offering to speak is required to sit down<sup>68</sup>. Members are also not to leave their seats when the Speaker is addressing the House<sup>69</sup>.

It is a well-recognized parliamentary convention that every member should resume his seat as soon as the Speaker enters the Chamber to preside or rises to speak or calls out 'order'<sup>70</sup>. Members should not rise on a point of order when the Speaker is addressing the House<sup>71</sup>.

Code of Conduct

While there is no definitive code of conduct for members of Lok Sabha, there are various provisions in the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha for ensuring decorous and dignified conduct of members. Over the years, certain norms established in respect of Code of Conduct for Legislators.

The issue of maintenance of discipline and decorum has, however, been coming up, now and then, for discussion at the Annual Conference of Presiding Officers of Legislative Bodies in India. The Presiding Officers' Conference, held at Gandhinagar in Gujarat in May 1992, suggested the convening of an All-India Conference where all those concerned with the business of the House should be invited to deliberate on the issue of discipline and decorum in the Legislatures.

As a sequel to this, a two-day All-India Conference of Presiding Officers, Leaders of Parties, Ministers of Parliamentary Affairs, Whips, Parliamentarians, Legislators and senior officers of Parliament and State Legislatures was held in the Central Hall of Parliament House on 23 and 24 September 1992. Conference, the delegates deliberated on many related aspects of the functioning of parliamentary institutions.

Based on the well established norms and the provisions in the Rules, a Code of Conduct was drafted and included in a paper entitled ‘Discipline and Decorum in Parliament and State Legislatures’ which was brought out by the Lok Sabha Secretariat for reference and use of delegates at this special Conference.

After detailed deliberations, the Conference adopted unanimously a Resolution inter alia reiterating the responsibilities and duties of Legislators and suggesting that the political parties should evolve a Code of Conduct for their Legislators and ensure its observance by them.

The matter also came up for deliberation during the Golden Jubilee Commemorative Session of Lok Sabha held from 26 August to 1 September 1997.

During the Session, the House unanimously adopted a Resolution which inter alia provided:

“That the prestige of the Parliament be preserved and enhanced, also by conscious and dignified conformity to the entire regime of Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business of the House and Directions of the Presiding Officers relating to orderly conduct of business, more especially by—

- maintaining the inviolability of the Question Hour,
- refraining from transgressing into the official areas of the House, or from shouting of any slogans, and
- invariably desisting from any efforts at interruptions or interference with the Address of the President of the Republic.”

The Report of the Committee of Privileges (Eleventh Lok Sabha) on “Ethics, Standards in Public Life, Privileges, Facilities to Members and Other Related Matters” dwelt in detail upon the various aspects of parliamentary privileges, obligation of members to the electorate and need for laying down Code of Conduct and standards for members. Broadly speaking, this Report contained recommendations regarding disclosure of interest by members, Code of Conduct for members<sup>72</sup>, Anti-Defection Law, Criminalisation of Politics and broad parameters of procedure for dealing with these complaints.

During the Sixty-Fourth Conference of Presiding officers of Legislative Bodies in India held in Chandigarh in June 2001, it was unanimously decided to convene a high level Conference of Presiding Officers, Chief Ministers, Ministers of Parliamentary Affairs, Leaders of the Opposition, other Leaders and Whips of Parties to discuss measures to effectively ensure discipline and decorum in the Legislatures. Accordingly, an All India Conference of Presiding Officers, Chief Ministers, Ministers of Parliamentary Affairs, Leaders and Whips of Parties on “Discipline and Decorum in Parliament and Legislatures of States and Union Territories” was convened on 25 November 2001 in the Central Hall of the Parliament House.

72. Report of CPR (11 LS) on Ethics, Standards in Public Life, Privileges, Facilities to Members and other Related Matters, pp. 66-67.

The Conference unanimously resolved that a Code of Conduct be adopted for Legislators, necessary changes be incorporated in the Rules of Procedure of all the Legislatures for its implementation and punishment be provided for its violations or breaches. It also called for constitution of Ethics Committees in all the Legislatures for enforcing the Code of Conduct. The Resolution urged that immediate steps be taken to ensure a minimum of 110 days of sittings of the Parliament and 90 and 50 days of sittings of the Legislatures for the big and small States, respectively. It also resolved that earnest endeavours be made by all the political parties to lay down parameters with emphasis on proven standards in public life for selection of the candidates for elections; a more responsible and effective role in maintaining decorum in the House be played by the Leader of the House, the Leader of the Opposition and Leaders of political and legislature parties by ensuring disciplined behaviour on the part of their members; the Treasury and the Opposition benches in the House should be more tolerant, accommodative and understanding towards each other; and Presiding Officers and leadership of political and legislature parties should ensure that the members, especially the new members are given proper training and orientation in parliamentary procedure, processes, discipline and decorum.

Automatic Suspension of Members who come to the well of the House and Create Disorder

To ensure orderly conduct in the House, Rule 374A was incorporated in the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha with effect from 5 December 2001. The rule provides that in the event of grave disorder occasioned by a member coming into the well of the House or abusing the Rules of the House persistently and wilfully obstructing its business by shouting slogans or otherwise, such member shall, on being named by the Speaker, stand automatically suspended from the service of the House for five consecutive sittings or the remainder of the Session, whichever is less. The House may, however, at any time, on a motion being made, resolve that such suspension be terminated. On the Speaker announcing the suspension under this rule, the member shall forthwith withdraw from the precincts of the House.

This rule primarily aims at doing away with the requirement of moving a motion and its adoption for securing suspension of a member from the service of the House. Under this rule, merely naming the member by the Speaker is enough to secure his suspension for five consecutive sittings or remainder of the session, whichever is less.

Constitution of Ethics Committee in Lok Sabha

During the Thirteenth Lok Sabha, on 16 May 2000, the Speaker constituted a fifteen-member Committee on Ethics in Lok Sabha.

The functions of the Committee were to (a) oversee the moral and ethical conduct of members; (b) examine every complaint relating to unethical conduct of a member or connected with his parliamentary conduct referred to it and make such recommendations as it may deem fit; and (c) frame rules specifying acts which constitute unethical conduct. The Committee could also suo motu take up for consideration and investigation matters relating to ethics, including matters relating to unethical conduct by members wherever felt necessary and make such recommendations as deemed fit.

The Committee, in their First Report presented to the Speaker, on 31 August 2001, laid on the Table of the House on 22 November 2001 and adopted by the House on 16 May 2002, inter alia noted that the norms of ethical behaviour for members have been adequately provided for in the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha, Directions by the Speaker and in the conventions, which have evolved over the years on the basis of recommendations made by various Committees in their reports. The Committee recommended inter alia that members should abide by the following general ethical principles, which are not based on any provisions in Rules/Directions/Conventions—

- Members must utilize their position to advance general well-being of the people.
- In case of conflict between their personal interest and public interest, they must resolve the conflict so that personal interests are subordinate to the duty of their public office.
- Conflict between private financial/family interest should be resolved in a manner that the public interest is not jeopardized.
- Members holding public offices should use public resources in such a manner as may lead to public good.
- Members should keep uppermost in their mind the fundamental duties listed in Part-IV A of the Constitution.
- Members should maintain high standards of morality, dignity, decency and values in public life.

The Committee recommended that it may be made mandatory for each member of Lok Sabha to disclose his income, assets and liabilities. For this purpose, members may be required to file a financial disclosure statement immediately after their election to the Lok Sabha. A “Register of Members’ Interests” may be maintained in the Lok Sabha Secretariat on the basis of information furnished by members. The Register should be made available to any complainant only with the permission of the Speaker, Lok Sabha.

In their Second Report presented to Lok Sabha on 20 November 2002, the Committee felt that there was no necessity for any further action on the recommendations made by them in their First Report with regard to financial disclosures and declaration of interests by members as that requirement had been fully met with the promulgation of the Representation of the People (Amendment) Ordinance, 2002<sup>73</sup>.

The Committee recommended that the Code of Conduct for Legislators which was unanimously adopted by the All India Conference of Presiding Officers, Chief Ministers, Leaders etc. on 25 November 2001 at New Delhi may be suitably incorporated in the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha.

73. Later enacted as the Representation of the People (Third amendment) Act, 2002.

The Committee also recommended that appropriate rules may be incorporated in the Rules of Procedure, laying down the procedure for making complaints relating to unethical conduct of a member.

The Committee to inquire into Misconduct of Members of Lok Sabha, in their Second Report, recommended a broad framework of a code of conduct. The Committee, however, recommended that before adopting the Code, opinion of leaders of political and legislature parties and also others, if considered necessary, might be obtained.

The subject of indiscipline, including disregard of Presiding Officers, disturbances, disruptions and other serious acts of misconduct in Legislatures and future strategies to improve the situation was again discussed in the 72nd Presiding Officers' Conference held at Thiruvananthapuram from 25 to 26 May 2007. The delegates were of the view that the tendency to show disrespect to the Chair and to violate the rules and conventions, indulging in undignified behaviour, forcing adjournments of the House and not permitting the Question Hour and debates and discussions, were matters of serious concern warranting deep introspection. It was also emphasized that orderly and dignified conduct of the Legislators, both inside and outside the Chambers is a pre-requisite for the smooth and effective functioning of parliamentary system. The Conference adopted a Resolution expressing its deep anguish and grave concern over the disturbing trend of disorderly conduct by Legislators, which is systematically undermining the credibility of the Legislative Bodies.

Members having Personal, Pecuniary or Direct Interest in Matters before the House or a Committee

A member having a personal, pecuniary or direct interest in a matter before the House is required, while taking part in the proceedings on that matter, to declare the nature of that interest<sup>74</sup>. It is expected of him, as a matter of propriety, to decide for himself whether by casting his vote in a division in the House on that matter, his judgement is likely to be deflected from the straight line of public policy by that interest<sup>75</sup>. The vote of such a member can be challenged immediately after the division is over and before the result is announced by the Speaker, and when it is so challenged, the Speaker may, if he considers it necessary, call upon the member making the challenge to state precisely the grounds of his objection and the member whose vote has been challenged to state his case. Thereafter, the Speaker decides whether the vote of the member should be disallowed or not, and his decision is final<sup>76</sup>.

Objection can also be taken to the inclusion of a member in a Parliamentary Committee on the ground that the member has a personal, pecuniary or direct interest of such an intimate character that it may prejudicially affect the consideration of any matters to be considered by the Committee<sup>77</sup>.

76. Rule 371. For the purposes of this Rule the interest of the member should be direct, personal or pecuniary and separately belong to the person whose vote is questioned and not in common with the public in general or with any class or section thereof or on a matter of State Policy.

77. Rule 255.

When the objection is so taken, the member taking objection precisely states the ground of his objection and the nature of the alleged interest. The member against whom objection has been taken is given by the Speaker an opportunity to state his position. In case there is dispute on facts, the Speaker asks both of them to produce documentary or other evidence in support of their respective cases. Having considered the evidence produced before him, the Speaker gives his decision, which is final<sup>78</sup>.

During the pendency of the dispute, the member against whose appointment on the Committee objection has been taken continues to be a member thereof, if elected or nominated. He can take part in discussion at the sittings of the Committee but is not entitled to vote<sup>79</sup>.

If the Speaker holds that the member in question has a personal, pecuniary or direct interest in the matter before the Committee, he ceases to be a member thereof forthwith, provided the proceedings of the sitting of the Committee at which such member was present are not in any way affected by the decision of the Speaker<sup>80</sup>.

Hence, where a member of a Committee has a personal, pecuniary or direct interest in any matter which is to be considered by the Committee, it is required of him to state his interest therein to the Speaker through the Chairman of the Committee. Having considered the matter, the Speaker gives his decision, which is binding<sup>81</sup>.

Besides the present stipulation in the Rules, the Committee of Privileges (Eleventh Lok Sabha) in their Report on Ethics related matters made certain recommendations<sup>82</sup> on financial disclosures and declaration of interests by members.

In 1978, a member of the Committee on Public Undertakings wrote to the Speaker that he was the Chairman and Managing Director of a private company that had dealings from time to time with some public undertakings that were under examination by the Committee. The Speaker directed that the member should be asked to keep out of the deliberations of the Committee at all stages of examination of those public undertakings. He also directed that papers and material relating to those undertakings should not be circulated to the member.

During the Seventh Lok Sabha, a question of privilege regarding alleged assault on a member was referred to the Committee of Privileges of which he himself was a member. When this fact was pointed out at a sitting of the Committee, the Speaker directed that the member should be kept out of the deliberations of the Committee at all stages of the examination of the matter and that papers and material relating to the matter should not be circulated to him.

82. The Committee took a view that transparency in respect of members' assets, private holdings, interests and acceptance of gift and hospitality by members could go a long way in enhancing members' dignity and dispelling false public perceptions, and hence, the imperativeness of financial for members of Lok Sabha also dwelt upon the issue of 'Registrable interest', 'conflict of interest' and 'private interest' of members.

During the Fifteenth Lok Sabha, the Committee of Ethics in their Second Report on Maintenance of Register of Interests of Members of Lok Sabha and Declaration of Interests in the House or a Committee thereof, presented to the Speaker on 13 December, 2012 and laid on the Table on 18 December 2012, recommended for a Register of Members' Interest wherein every member of the House shall, within ninety days from the date on which he makes and subscribes an oath or affirmation for taking his seat, furnish information regarding his interests in a form prescribed for the purpose. Further, the Committee recommended that five pecuniary interests, namely, Remunerative Directorship, Regular Remunerated Activity, Shareholding of Controlling Nature, Paid Consultancy and Professional Engagement along with the components of each of these interests as specified may be furnished by the members of Lok Sabha for registration in the Register of Interest. The declaration of these interests,, as recommended by the Ethics Committee, are in line with declaration of such interests already being done by members of the Rajya Sabha in terms of provisions made in this regard in the Rules of Procedure of Rajya Sabha.

Involvement in Cases of Corruption

Conduct of members involving corruption in the execution of their office as members is treated by the House as a breach of privilege. Thus, the acceptance by any member of a bribe to influence him in his conduct as such member or of any fee, compensation or reward in connection with the promotion of, or opposition to any Bill, resolution, matter or thing submitted or intended to be submitted to the House or any Committee thereof is a breach of privilege. It would also be a breach of privilege or misconduct on the part of a member to enter into an agreement with another person, for a sum of money, to advocate and prosecute in the House the claims of such person<sup>83</sup>.

An ad hoc Committee of the House was appointed by the Provisional Parliament in 1951, to investigate the conduct and activities of a member, H.G. Mudgal, in connection with some of his dealings with a business association which included canvassing support and making propaganda in Parliament on certain problems on behalf of that association in return for alleged financial and other business advantages. The Committee was directed by the House to consider whether the conduct of the member concerned was derogatory to the dignity of the House and inconsistent with the standards which Parliament is entitled to expect from members<sup>84</sup>.

A motion for the appointment of the Committee was adopted<sup>85</sup> in the House on 8 June 1951. The motion was moved by the Prime Minister (Leader of the House). It was drawn up in comprehensive terms and provided for the whole apparatus of the working of the Committee. The residuary powers were delegated to the Speaker so that the work of the Committee might not be delayed for any technical, nevertheless, important requirements.

The Committee consisted of five members<sup>86</sup>. The quorum of the Committee was fixed at three. The Committee was empowered to hear and/or to receive evidence, oral or documentary, connected with the matters referred to it, or relevant to the subject-matter of the inquiry. The Committee was further empowered to hear or receive evidence in Bombay or any other place in India as the Speaker might decide. The Committee was given the discretion to treat any evidence tendered before it as secret or confidential. The member concerned was given leave to be heard before the Committee by himself or by counsel, if he thought fit, and the Committee could hear a counsel to such extent as thought fit, on behalf of any other person.

The Speaker was authorised to issue, from time to time, such directions to the Chairman of the Committee, as he thought necessary, for regulating the procedure and organisation of the work of the Committee. (Several directives were issued by the Speaker to the Chairman in this connection.)

All these matters were provided for in the motion itself.

The case before the Committee was opened by the Attorney-General. He summarised the material which had already been presented to the Committee. The Attorney-General gave an impartial picture of the whole case. He formulated finally the question to which the Committee might address itself.

After the evidence was completed, a draft report of the Committee was prepared by the Secretariat of the Committee on the basis of the evidence and the decisions arrived at. After approval by the Chairman, the draft report was considered and adopted by the Committee. The report was then submitted to the Speaker by the Chairman and thereafter presented to the House on the scheduled date mentioned in the motion appointing the Committee. The Committee found the member guilty of receiving monetary benefits for 'putting of Question in Parliament, moving amendments to the Forward Contracts (Regulation) Bill and arranging interviews with Ministers, etc<sup>87</sup>'. In its report, the Committee held that the conduct of H.G. Mudgal was derogatory to the dignity of the House and inconsistent with the standards which Parliament was entitled to expect of its members.

The report was then considered by the House on a motion moved by the Prime Minister on 24 September 1951. The Committee had recommended the expulsion of the member from the House. The member, after participating in the debate, submitted his resignation from the membership of the House. In a resolution, the House accepted the findings of the Committee and deprecated the attempt of the member to circumvent the effects of the motion expelling him from the House, by his resignation, which constituted contempt of the House and aggravated his offence<sup>88</sup>.

In another case, a question was raised in the House about the alleged sale, by some members, of cars allotted to them from the Union Government quota in contravention of the statutory orders governing such allotment, with a demand that a committee of inquiry be set up to investigate the matter. The Prime Minister made a statement in the House to the effect that one member had pleaded guilty before the court which imposed a fine on him. The member did not file any appeal against his conviction and also apologised to the House for his departure from standards of rectitude expected of him as a member of Parliament. He was exonerated by the House. As the matter in the other cases was pending decision in the court, the House decided to await the verdict of the Court<sup>89</sup>.

In this case, since the member had admitted his guilt, no need was felt to go into the matter further. In the Mudgal Case, the member had pleaded not guilty to the alleged charge and a Committee of the House was appointed to investigate the matter.

The acceptance by a member of a fee, compensation, gift or reward for drafting, advising upon any Bill, petition or other document submitted or intended to be submitted to the House or any Committee thereof would also be a breach of privilege.

The acceptance of payment by members for the disclosure of confidential information relating to proceedings of private party meetings, while not held to be a breach of privilege or contempt, has been held to be a dishonourable conduct deserving to be severely punished, as tending to lower the dignity of the House in the estimation of the people.

Any undesirable, undignified and unbecoming conduct on the part of the member, and neglect or breaches of duty by members in the execution of their office as members, and cognate offences may also be treated by the House as misconduct.

On 18 February 1963, five members of Parliament created disorder at the time of the President's Address to both Houses of Parliament assembled together under article 87. The same day, when Lok Sabha met separately, it was decided to appoint an ad hoc Committee to investigate the conduct of these five members "in connection with the disorder created by them" and "to consider and report whether such conduct of the said members was contrary to the usage or derogatory to the dignity of the occasion or inconsistent with the standards which Parliament is entitled to expect from its members and to make such recommendations as the Committee may deem fit." The Committee was appointed by the Speaker in terms of an announcement made by him in the House on 19 February 1963<sup>90</sup>.

See in this connection Chapter X—President's Address, Messages and Communications to the House.

The Committee consisted of 15 members nominated by the Speaker. The Deputy Speaker, who was a member of the Committee, was appointed the Chairman of the Committee. The Committee was required to make a report to the House by a fixed date<sup>91</sup>. In other respects, the Rules of Procedure of the House relating to Parliamentary Committees were made applicable to the Committee with such variations and modifications as the Speaker might make.

The Committee desired that the correspondence between the members involved in the incident and the President and the Prime Minister be made available for its perusal. Copies of the relevant correspondence were accordingly furnished by the President's Secretariat and the Prime Minister's Secretariat and perused by the Committee.

The Committee provided an opportunity to the members involved in the incident to appear before it to explain their position. Written statements were also submitted by three of the members involved. A verbatim record of the evidence taken before the Committee was kept and appended to the report of the Committee.

A memorandum setting out the facts of the case, the constitutional position and the practice and precedents, including those relating to the House of Commons, U.K., was prepared and circulated to the members of the Committee for consideration.

After the evidence was completed and the Committee had arrived at their conclusions, a draft report of the Committee was prepared by the Secretariat of the Committee and considered and adopted by the Committee.

The report was considered by the House on a motion moved by the Chairman of the Committee for agreeing with the recommendations of the Committee in regard to the action to be taken against the members involved in the incident. The motion was adopted by the House after the members involved in the incident had made statements before the House in their defence. The Speaker then reprimanded three of the members involved in the incident, as recommended by the Committee<sup>92</sup>.

During the Fourteenth Lok Sabha in the wake of some incidents of misconduct by members, even though Committee on Ethics was in existence, the Speaker constituted separate ad hoc Inquiry Committees to inquire into the matters and submit their Reports to the Speaker within a stipulated timeframe.

91. The time for the presentation of the report was extended by the Speaker on a request made by the Committee.—L.S. Deb., 2-3-1963.

92. L.S. Deb., 19-3-1964, cc. 4701-90. The Committee had taken a lenient view about the action of the other two members and had only expressed disapproval of their conduct.

On 28 February 1968, two members were reprimanded by the Speaker for having created obstruction and shown disrespect to the President at the time of his address to both the Houses of Parliament assembled together under article 87 on 12 February 1968 — L.S. Deb., 28-2-1968, cc. 482-88.

On 12 December 2005, a private television channel in its news bulletin carried video footage showing some members of Parliament allegedly accepting money for tabling questions and raising other matters in the House.

On the same day, the Speaker made an observation requesting the members whose names had appeared in the video footage not to attend the session of the House until the matter was looked into and a decision was taken and appointed a five member Inquiry Committee with the direction to give its report by 21 December 2005. The Committee was authorized to follow its own procedure.

After taking the evidence of all the ten members and considering their written statements and also viewing the video footage, the Committee in their Report<sup>93</sup> recommended that the House might consider expulsion of all ten members from the membership of the Fourteenth Lok Sabha. A motion moved by the Leader of the House was adopted by the House on 23 December 2005 expelling the ten members from the membership of Lok Sabha.

On 19 December 2005, another private channel, in a programme showed some members of Lok Sabha allegedly indulging in improper conduct in the matter of implementation of Members of Parliament Local Area Development Scheme. On 20 December 2005, when the House met, the Speaker made an observation in the House requesting the members who were alleged to be involved in the matter not to attend the sittings of the House until the matter was looked into and a decision taken. On the same day, the Speaker made another observation in the House constituting an Inquiry Committee to probe the matter. A seven member Committee was accordingly constituted by the Speaker. The Committee was required to give its report by 31 January 2006.

After taking the evidence of all the five concerned members and considering their written statements and also viewing the video footage, the Committee in their Report<sup>94</sup> observed that improper conduct, on the part of four members (one of the five members already having been expelled from the House) did not strictly speaking relate to their parliamentary duties and none of them was actually shown as accepting money. The Committee recommended that the members be reprimanded and that the period of abstention from the sittings of the House and the Committees by all the four members from 20 December 2005 till 22 March 2006 may be deemed to be their

On 2 April 1971, the House decided to constitute a Committee to go into the matter of alleged creation of obstruction and showing disrespect to the President by a member of the House, on the occasion of the President's Address to both the Houses of Parliament assembled together under article 87—L.S. Deb., 2-4-1971, cc. 188-233, 239-46 and 271-72. The Committee constituted by the Speaker on 5 April 1971, in pursuance of the aforesaid decision, presented its first report to the House on 15 November 1971.

On 14 April 1972, the Committee presented its second report on the guidelines for maintenance of order, dignity and decorum on the occasion of the President's Address to members of Parliament under articles 86 and 87 of the Constitution.

93. Report of Committee to Inquire into Allegations of Improper Conduct on the Part of Some Members of Lok Sabha.

suspension from the membership of the House. The Report was adopted by the House on a motion moved by the leader of the House on 20 March 2006.

In a matter pertaining to a complaint against a member for unethical behaviour involving misuse of Car Parking Label issued to him, the Committee on Ethics in their Second Report which was laid on the Table of the House on 25 August 2006, recommended that in view of the fact that there was no mala-fide intent on the part of the member and considering the clarification given by him and apology tendered by him, the matter may be treated as closed.

In yet another instance in the wake of arrest of a member for trying to illegally take two persons (one woman and a boy) abroad on the passport of his wife and his son, Speaker Lok Sabha on 16 May 2007 constituted a Committee to Inquire into Misconduct of Members of Lok Sabha. The Committee had a broad remit to look into all aspects of the misconduct of the members.

On 21 May 2007, the Speaker, Lok Sabha, while referring the matter of the Committee to Inquire into Misconduct of Members of Lok Sabha, passed the following order—

“The matter arising out of the arrest of Shri Babulal K. Katara, MP for alleged offences under the provisions of the Indian Penal Code and the Passport Act is referred to the Committee, subject to the result of the pending investigation and proceedings, if any, arising thereon in any competent Court of Law and the decision given by such Court. The Committee is requested to please take note of the fact that the Lok Sabha cannot interfere with the pending investigations and proceedings and may not take a decision which will impinge on the pending investigation and proceedings, if any. Further, it may be taken note of that the concerned MP is now in custody and obviously cannot take part in any proceedings before the Committee. In view of the above, the Committee may please take such decision as it may think fit and proper, subject to the observations made in the House on 16 May 2007 regarding the procedure to be adopted.”

The Inquiry Committee accordingly decided to take up the matter if and when the member is released on bail.

The Inquiry Committee took up the matter after the member was released on bail in May 2008. The Committee after due consideration in their Third Report, which was presented to the Speaker on 10 September 2008 and Laid on the Table of the House on 20 October 2008, held that the member had committed a grave act of misconduct as well as contempt of the Committee and of the House which had threatened to erode the creditability of Parliament as an institution. The Committee accordingly recommended that he be expelled from the membership of the House. On 21 October 2008, the House adopted a motion expelling the member.

In between, a case relating to allegations against another member (Rajesh Kumar Manjhi) was referred to the Inquiry Committee on 18 May 2007. The Committee in their First Report<sup>95</sup>, which was presented to the House on 23 August 2007, found that a member had taken another woman on official tour by personating her as his wife. The Committee recommended that the member may be reprimanded by the House and also be suspended for thirty sittings of the House. The Committee also recommended that the said member might be restrained from taking his spouse or companion on official tours till the conclusion of Fourteenth Lok Sabha. The Report of the Committee was adopted by the House on 30 August 2007.

In yet another incident, on 22 July 2008, during the debate on the Motion of Confidence in the Council of Ministers, three members (Ashok Argal, Faggan Singh Kulaste and Mahavir Bhagora) came to the well of the House with two bags. The members took out wads of currency notes from the bags with them and started placing the same on the Table of the House. Amidst pandemonium, the Deputy Speaker, who was in the Chair, adjourned the House. In a meeting of Leaders of Political Parties held immediately thereafter in the Speaker's Chamber, the Speaker directed the three members to give a written statement, so that, appropriate action could be initiated. Thereafter, when the House met at 18:00 hours, Speaker made the following observation—

“Hon. Members..... some time back, when my distinguished colleague, hon. Deputy Speaker was presiding over the proceedings of the House, certain incidents have taken place, which according to me, are most unfortunate. It is a very sad day in the history of Parliament that such a situation has happened. Thereafter, I called a meeting of the hon. Leaders. I am grateful to the hon. Leader of Opposition. He was very kindly present also.

We have heard the three hon. members of the House. They had some complaints to make. I had requested them to put their complaints in writing to me. I assured them, I assured the leader and I assure the House that all possible steps that are required in that connection will be taken by me as a custodian of this House. It is my duty to do that and I seek the cooperation of all section of the House.

Please allow me to apply my judgement, look into the matter, and I can assure you, nobody will be spared if found guilty.”

On 25 July 2008, the members gave their joint written complaint in the matter. On 26 July 2008, the Speaker, Lok Sabha appointed an Inquiry Committee to inquire into the matter. Accordingly, on 26 July 2008, the Speaker constituted a seven member Inquiry Committee viz. the Committee to Inquire into the Complaint Made by Some Members Regarding Alleged Offer of Money to them in Connection with Voting on the Motion of Confidence. The Committee presented their report to the Speaker on 12 November 2008. The report of the Committee was laid on the Table of the House on 15 December 2008. The Committee in their report after taking into account their findings and conclusions, particularly the roles of three witnesses, recommended<sup>96</sup> that the matter may be probed further by an appropriate investigating agency<sup>97</sup>. The Committee further recommended that the procedure for requiring appearance of member of one House before other House or Committee thereof, as recommended by the Committee of Privileges (Second Lok Sabha) in their Sixth Report in 1958, needs to be reviewed to bring at par with the position as is obtaining now in Parliament of United Kingdom.

Other instances of this type of misconduct are: (i) giving of evidence by a member in a court of law in relation to any debates or proceedings in the House or any Committee thereof, without the leave of the House of which he is a member<sup>98</sup>; and (ii) attending as a witness before the other House or any Committee thereof without the leave of the House of which he is a member<sup>99</sup>.

96. On 16 December 2008, Speaker, Lok Sabha, made an observation in the House referring the matter to the Minister of Home Affairs for initiating appropriate action in the light of recommendation made by the Committee. He inter alia observed "the currency notes which were brought to and displayed in the House by the three members are presently kept in the custody of the Secretary-General.... As this money may be required for the purpose of investigation, if any, as suggested by the Committee, it will be retained by the Secretary-General for one month, after which if no request is received for the purpose of investigation, it will be deposited with the Government as unclaimed money." (L.S. Deb., 16.12.2008.). On 17 December 2008, A D.O. letter from Secretary-General, Lok Sabha was sent to Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs with the request that the matter may be placed before the Minister of Home Affairs for such action as might be appropriate in the matter. A copy each of draft report and relevant extracts from Lok Sabha Debates dated 16 December 2008, comprising observations made by the Speaker were enclosed with the D.O. Letter. Subsequently, a communication dated 20 January 2009 addressed to Secretary-General by the Home Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs was received wherein it was intimated that it had been decided with the approval of Minister of Home Affairs that the matter may be entrusted to Delhi Police for further probe. As regards the currency notes, a request had been made that the same may be retained for some more time and that the Commissioner of Police, Delhi would get in touch with Lok Sabha Secretariat in this regard. Eventually the currency notes and relevant material were handed over to concerned ACP/Inter-State Cell, Crime Branch, Delhi Police on 29 January 2009.

97. A Public Interest Litigation (PIL) was filed before the Supreme Court by J.M. Lyngdoh and 13 others in 2011 alleging tardy investigation in the matter. The Supreme Court after going through the status report filed by Delhi Police observed that the matter shall proceed in accordance with law and disposed of the PIL.

To speed up the investigation, the Delhi Police sought permission of the Speaker, Lok Sabha to access original documents pertaining to the report of the Committee to Inquire into the Complaint Made by Some Members Regarding Alleged Offer of Money To Them In Connection With Voting On The Motion of Confidence' for the purpose of filing of charge sheet in the Court. The Speaker, in terms of the recommendations made by the Committee of Privileges, Fourteenth Lok Sabha, in their Twelfth Report, laid on the Table of the House on 30 April, 2008 and adopted by the House on 23 October 2008, permitted Delhi Police to have the photographs of the requisite documents in connection with the filing of the charge-sheet, without parting with the original documents. Further, one of the accused was also sought to be prosecuted inter alia for violation of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1998. The Speaker, Lok Sabha, granted sanction to prosecute the member in accordance with the law laid down by the Supreme Court in Jharkhand Mukti Morcha case.

Complaints made by a person against members of Parliament in regard to their conduct as private individuals or complaints which allege professional misconduct are looked into and disposed of by the Speaker<sup>100</sup>.

Procedure for Inquiry into Conduct of a Member

Anyone who has a reasonable belief that a member has acted in a manner which, in his opinion, is inconsistent with the dignity of the House or the standard expected of a member of Parliament, may inform the Speaker or the Leader of the House about it. The person making such an allegation is required first to make sure of his facts and base them on such authentic evidence, documentary or circumstantial, as he may have. He has to be careful in sifting and arranging facts because, if the allegations are proved to be frivolous, worthless or based on personal jealousy or animosity, directly or indirectly, he will himself be liable to a charge of breach of privilege of the House. Therefore, it is of the utmost importance that allegations are based on solid, tested and checked facts.

When information regarding the alleged misconduct on the part of a member is received, the usual practice is that the Prime Minister examines the statement of charges and such further information as the Prime Minister may call for and if he is satisfied that the matter should be proceeded with, he gives a full and fair opportunity to the member to state his own version of the case to disprove the allegations against him and to place before the Prime Minister such information as may assist him to come to a conclusion. After the member's explanation, oral or written, is received by the Prime Minister, he sifts the evidence critically. If the member has given adequate explanation and it is found that there is nothing improper in his conduct and he has cleared all the doubts, the matter may be dropped and the member exonerated. If the Prime Minister considers that a statement to that effect should be made in the House, he may do so. If, however, on the basis of the explanation given by the member and the evidence, it is proposed by the Prime Minister and held by the Speaker that there is a prima facie case for further investigation, the matter is brought before the House on a motion for the appointment of a Parliamentary Committee to investigate the specific matter and to report to the House by the specified date.

However, if in the course of preliminary investigation it is found that the person making the allegations has supplied incorrect facts or tried to bring discredit to the name of the member willfully or through carelessness, he is deemed to be guilty of a breach of privilege of the House<sup>101</sup>.

Ethical Principles

The Committee of Privileges (Eleventh Lok Sabha), in their Report on ethics related matters, took a considered view<sup>102</sup> that ethical principles are well applicable to elections to Legislatures which are pivotal in any democracy.

The Committee, in their Report, also made various recommendations on matters pertaining to members' involvement in the Members of Parliament Local Area Development Scheme and other welfare schemes and official dealings between the members and the administration and the guidelines issued in this respect.

102. The Committee were of the view that as stakes are high at all elections to Legislatures, the determination or rather the desperation of the candidates as well as the political parties sponsoring their candidature, has, of late, led to electoral malpractices, as for instance, misuse of money power during elections and criminalisation of politics. Such a state of affairs tends to negate the very credibility of democratic institutions which hinges by and large upon free and fair elections to the Legislatures. The Committee, therefore, accordingly touched upon these aspects and came up with certain recommendations on electoral expenses, criminalisation of politics and the Anti-Defection Law.

CHAPTER XIII

Salaries, Allowances, other Entitlements, Amenities and Facilities

I. Salaries and Allowances of Officers of Parliament

The salaries and allowances of the Chairman and the Deputy Chairman of the Rajya Sabha and the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker of the Lok Sabha are governed by the Salaries and Allowances of Officers of Parliament Act, 1953. The Chairman of the Rajya Sabha is paid a salary of one lakh twenty five thousand rupees per mensem<sup>1</sup>. The Speaker, the Deputy Speaker, Lok Sabha and the Deputy Chairman, Rajya Sabha each receive a salary of fifty thousand rupees per mensem<sup>2</sup> and constituency allowance at the rate of forty five thousand rupees per mensem<sup>3</sup>. In addition, they are each entitled to Daily Allowance at the rate of two thousand rupees for each day during the whole of their term as such officers per day<sup>4</sup>. The Chairman, Rajya Sabha and the Speaker, Lok Sabha get a sumptuary allowance of two thousand rupees per mensem, and the Deputy Chairman, Rajya Sabha and the Deputy Speaker, Lok Sabha, a sumptuary allowance of one thousand rupees per mensem<sup>5</sup>.

The elected Speaker of the Central Legislative Assembly was paid a salary calculated at the rate of four thousand rupees per mensem<sup>6</sup>. He was not permitted during the tenure of his office to practice any profession or engage himself in any employment other than his duties as Speaker of the Legislative Assembly<sup>7</sup>. From January 1948 to April 1953, the Speaker was paid a salary of three thousand rupees per mensem and a sumptuary allowance of five hundred rupees per mensem<sup>8</sup>.

In addition to all the usual allowances admissible to the members of the Assembly under the Travelling and Daily Allowances Rules applicable to them, the Deputy Speaker of the Central Legislative Assembly was paid, in respect of any period during which he was engaged in work connected with the business of the Assembly, salary calculated at the rate of one thousand rupees per mensem; the salary of the Deputy Speaker of the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) was for identical purposes fixed at one thousand five hundred rupees per mensem<sup>9</sup>.

If any question arose whether during any period the Deputy Speaker was engaged in work connected with the business of the Legislative Assembly, or the Constituent Assembly (Legislative), the question was referred for decision to the Speaker and his decision was final.

On assumption and relinquishment of Office, the Speaker is entitled to such travelling allowances for himself and the members of his family and for the transport of his and his family's effects as are admissible to a Cabinet Minister on the assumption and relinquishment of his Office<sup>10</sup>.

In respect of tours undertaken by him in India in the discharge of his official duties, the Speaker is entitled to such travelling and daily allowances as are admissible to a Cabinet Minister, and when he undertakes similar tours outside India, to such travelling and daily allowances as the Government may, in each case, determine<sup>11</sup>. Usually the Speaker is allowed the same travelling allowance and daily allowances for tours outside India as are given to a Cabinet Minister.

In respect of the journey undertaken by him from Delhi to his constituency at the end of each Session and for the return journey to Delhi at the beginning of the following Session, he is entitled to the travelling allowances admissible to a Cabinet Minister, actual charges for the haulage of his motor car, and to actual railway fare by the lowest class for his chauffeur<sup>12</sup>.

The Speaker is treated as State guest throughout the country. A copy of the programme is sent to the Speaker and the Secretary of the State Legislature concerned who move the State machinery for according normal courtesy extended to a visiting dignitary. The facilities extended to him include free board, lodging and transport.

The Deputy Speaker is entitled to travelling and daily allowances for similar purposes at rates which are admissible to a Minister of State. He is, however, not entitled to any haulage charges for motor car, etc.<sup>13</sup>.

In addition, the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker are provided, like any other member of Parliament, with a free non-transferable pass for first class air-conditioned or executive class on any train which entitles them to travel at any time by any railway in India<sup>14</sup>. This does not, however, preclude them from claiming allowances under the rules applicable to them.

In respect of travelling and other allowances, the Speaker of the Central Legislative Assembly was entitled—to engage a reserved first class compartment for the journeys performed by him on duty between the headquarters of his constituency and Simla or Delhi, or between Simla and Delhi, and to recover his actual travelling expenses up to a maximum of one first class fare for each journey; to the haulage of a motor car at owner's risk from the headquarters of his constituency to Delhi and back and a single third class fare each way for a chauffeur, as many times as there were sessions in a year; to a halting allowance of fifteen rupees per day whenever he proceeded to a place other than Simla or Delhi or the headquarters of his constituency.

The Deputy Speaker was entitled to the travelling and daily allowances admissible to members of the Legislative Assembly under the travelling and daily allowances rules applicable to them.

The Speaker and the Deputy Speaker determine themselves as to when they should travel and they certify their own Bills. In case of travels abroad, consultation takes place between the Prime Minister and the Speaker and, thereafter, the concurrence of the Prime Minister is obtained for the purpose.

Other Facilities

The Speaker and the Deputy Speaker are each entitled, without payment of rent, to the use of a furnished residence throughout their term of office and for a period of one month immediately thereafter, and no charge falls on them personally in respect of the maintenance of such residence<sup>15</sup>. In the event of the death of an Officer of Parliament, his family is entitled to the use of furnished residence occupied by the Officer of Parliament for a period of one month immediately after his death, without payment of rent, and no charge would fall on his family in respect of the maintenance of such residence; his family could retain the residence for a further period of one month on payment of a prescribed rent and also charges in respect of electricity and water consumed in that residence during such further period.

'Maintenance' in relation to a residence includes the payment of local rates and taxes and the provision of electricity and water and 'residence' includes the staff quarters and other buildings appurtenant thereto and the garden thereof<sup>16</sup>.

The Speaker and the Deputy Speaker and the members of their families are entitled, free of charge, to accommodation in hospitals maintained by the Government and also to medical treatment.

Both the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker are entitled to draw a repayable motor-car advance not exceeding four lakh rupees<sup>17</sup> or the actual price of the motor-car intended to be purchased, whichever is less, subject to such conditions as have been laid down in this behalf.

The Speaker or the Deputy Speaker vacates his Office if he ceases to be a member of the Lok Sabha<sup>18</sup>. Whenever the Lok Sabha is dissolved, the Speaker does not vacate his Office until immediately before the first meeting of the Lok Sabha after the dissolution<sup>19</sup>. In view of this, the Speaker continues to draw the salary and allowances of his Office until the date of vacation of his Office. The Deputy Speaker, however, ceases to draw his salary and allowances of his Office on the dissolution of the Lok Sabha.

When both the Offices of Speaker and Deputy Speaker fall vacant, a Speaker pro tem is appointed by the President, and he continues in Office till the election of the Speaker<sup>20</sup>, but the Speaker pro tem does not receive, for the period he performs the duties of the Office of the Speaker, the salary and allowances admissible to the Speaker.

The Speaker and the Deputy Speaker, who receive their salaries and allowances under the Salaries and Allowances of Officers of Parliament Act, 1953, as amended, are not entitled to receive, by virtue of their membership of the Lok Sabha, any sum out of funds provided for by Parliament by way of salary and allowances of members.

All expenditure incurred on the salaries and allowances, etc., of the Chairman and the Deputy Chairman, Rajya Sabha and the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker, Lok Sabha is charged on the Consolidated Fund of India<sup>21</sup>.

II. Salaries, Allowances and other Entitlements of Members

Salary and Daily Allowances

Each member of the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha, other than a Minister or Officer of the House, is entitled to receive a salary at the rate of fifty thousand rupees per mensem during the whole of his term of office<sup>22</sup>. The term of office of a member begins with the date of publication of the notification of the Election Commission and ends with the date on which his seat becomes vacant. The salary is subject to income-tax.

In addition to the salary, an allowance is paid to each member of the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha at the rate of two thousand rupees<sup>23</sup>, only for each day during any period of residence on duty<sup>24</sup>, irrespective of the time of arrival or departure.

Provided that no member shall be entitled to the aforesaid allowance unless he signs the register maintained for this purpose by the Secretariat of the House of the People or, as the case may be, the Council of States, on all the days (except intervening holidays for which no such signing is required) of the session of the House for which the allowance is claimed<sup>25</sup>.

A member is also entitled to receive constituency allowance at the rate of forty five thousand rupees per mensem<sup>26</sup> and office expense allowance at the rate of forty five thousand rupees per mensem<sup>27</sup> out of which, fifteen thousand rupees for meeting expense on stationery items and postage, and the Lok Sabha/Rajya Sabha Secretariat may pay upto thirty thousand rupees to the person(s) as may be engaged by a member of Parliament for obtaining secretarial assistance, provided that, one such person must be computer literate as certified by the member.

In the pre-Independence period, the expense of maintaining members during their attendance upon the Legislature was regulated by orders issued by the Government of India from time to time in the form of notifications or rules which generally provided for the regulation of daily and travelling allowances, etc. of members.

The main provisions regarding salaries, etc. of members are now made by the Parliament but details are worked out by a Joint Committee on Salaries and Allowances of Members of Parliament<sup>28</sup> whose decisions are subject to the approval of the Speaker of the Lok Sabha and the Chairman of the Rajya Sabha after consulting the Union Government.

Members of the Central Legislative Assembly were entitled to an allowance of fifteen rupees per diem for each day of residence at the place where the Assembly met<sup>29</sup>, and in March 1921, this allowance was raised to 24. The Salary, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament Act., 1954, s. 3, as amended.

The term 'Period of residence on duty' means the period during which a member resides at a place where a session of a House of Parliament or a sitting of a Committee is held or where any other business connected with his duties as such member, is transacted, for the purpose of attending such session or sitting or for the purpose of attending to such other business, and includes:
- (i) in the case of a session of the House, a period of such residence, not exceeding three days, immediately preceding the commencement of the Session and a period of such residence, not exceeding three days immediately succeeding the date on which the House of Parliament is adjourned sine die or for a period exceeding seven days; and
  - (ii) in the case of a sitting of a Committee or any other business, a period of such residence, not exceeding two days, immediately preceding the commencement of the sitting of the Committee or other business and a period of such residence, not exceeding two days immediately succeeding the conclusion of the business of the Committee or other business.

twenty rupees per diem<sup>30</sup>. In October 1928, the provision of the daily allowance was extended to cover any period of residence on duty<sup>31</sup>.

A proposal for the payment of salary to the non-official members of the Assembly was made for the first time in 1933 by the Speaker Shanmukham Chetty which was considered by a Special Committee. The proposal was, however, given up in view of the difficulties in the matter of income-tax.

With effect from the beginning of the Budget Session, 1945, the non-official members became entitled to draw daily allowance and conveyance allowance at the rate of thirty and fifteen rupees per diem, respectively, for the duration of the War. These enhanced rates remained in force up to the end of the Budget Session, 1946-47.

When the Constituent Assembly met to discharge its legislative functions, members became entitled to draw allowances at such rates and upon such conditions as were in force immediately before the date of establishment of the Dominion.<sup>32</sup> In April 1948, it was decided that the two allowances, viz. daily allowance and conveyance allowance, be merged into a consolidated daily allowance of forty-five rupees per diem, free of income-tax, applicable to all members, irrespective of the fact whether the Assembly met as a constitution-making body or legislative body.

In 1949, the Constituent Assembly passed a resolution<sup>33</sup> imposing a voluntary cut of five rupees per diem, thus reducing the consolidated daily allowance to forty rupees per diem, with effect from October 1949. This rate continued to be in force for members of the Provisional Parliament and the First Lok Sabha.

Pursuant to the provision in the Constitution for providing salaries and allowances to the members,<sup>34</sup> Speaker Mavalankar announced on 6 June 1952, the appointment of a Joint Committee of the two Houses to consider whether payment to the members of Parliament should be wholly by salaries or partly by salaries and partly by allowances<sup>35</sup>.

The Committee submitted its report on 4 August 1952, recommending that members be paid thirty-five rupees as daily allowance. The report was discussed in the House on 27 March 1954, when the House passed a resolution referring the question back to the Joint Committee<sup>36</sup>. In its second report submitted on 20 April 1954, the Committee recommended that either a salary of three hundred rupees per mensem plus a daily allowance of twenty rupees or in the alternative, a daily allowance of forty rupees be paid. Acting in pursuance of the constitutional provision, Parliament passed the Salaries and Allowances of Members of Parliament Act, 1954, under which the salary of a member was fixed at four hundred rupees per mensem plus a daily allowance of twenty-one rupees, in place of the daily allowance of forty rupees<sup>37</sup>.

In the face of the high cost of living and considerable expenses which the members had to incur on account of the various demands of public life, their emoluments were considered to be inadequate and accordingly, daily allowance was raised to thirty-one rupees per day in 1964; fifty-one rupees in 1969; seventy-five rupees per day in 1983; one hundred and fifty rupees per day in 1988; and two hundred rupees per day in 1993, subject to signing of Attendance Register; to four hundred rupees per day from 20 August 1998; to one thousand rupees per day from 14 September 2006; and now to two thousand rupees per day from 1 October 2010.

No daily allowance is admissible to a member who is granted leave of absence from the House under the Constitution<sup>38</sup>. A member suspended from the service of the House for a specific period during a session is entitled to daily allowance for each day of his 'residence on duty' whereas a member suspended from the service of the House for the remainder of the session is not entitled to daily allowance<sup>39</sup>.

A member is also not entitled to daily allowance during the period of his detention as his residence during detention at the place of session cannot be regarded as residence for the purpose of attending the session.

The salary of members of Parliament was increased from time to time – vide amendments to the Salary, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament Act, 1954. It was first increased to five hundred rupees per month from 1 June 1964; to seven hundred and fifty rupees per month from 30 August 1983; to one thousand rupees from 26 December 1985; to one thousand five hundred rupees per month from 1 April 1988; to four thousand rupees per month from 20 August 1998; to twelve thousand rupees per month from September 2001 to sixteen thousand rupees per month from 16 September 2006; and now to fifty thousand rupees from 18 May 2009<sup>40</sup>.

attending to any other business connected with his duties as a member, from his usual place of residence to the place where the session or the meeting is held or the other business is transacted and for the return journey from such place to his usual place of residence—

- (a) if the journey is performed by rail, amount equal to one first class fare plus one second class fare for each such journey, irrespective of the class in which the member actually travels;
- (b) if the journey is performed by air, an amount equal to one and one-fourth of the air fare for each such journey;
- (c) if the journey or any part thereof cannot be performed by rail or air—
  - (i) where the journey or any part thereof is performed by steamer, an amount equal to one and three-fifths of the fare (without diet) for the highest class in the steamer for each such journey or part thereof;
  - (ii) where the journey or any part thereof is performed by road, a road mileage at the rate of sixteen rupees per kilometre<sup>41</sup> for each such journey or part thereof. The member is paid a minimum amount of three hundred and twenty rupees for the journey he performs by road in Delhi from and to an aerodrome.
- (d) A member is entitled to road mileage allowance when performing a journey by road between places connected by rail or steamer either wholly or in parts.

Where a member absents himself for less than fifteen days during the session of the House or a sitting of a Committee for visiting any place in India, he is entitled to receive travelling allowances in respect of such journeys to such a place and for the return journey—

- (a) if the journey is performed by rail, equal to one first class fare for each such journey, irrespective of the class in which the member actually travels;
- (b) if the journey, being a journey during a sitting of the Committee, is performed by air, equal to one fare by air for each such journey:

Provided that such travelling allowance does not exceed the total amount of daily allowance admissible to such member for the days of absence if he had not remained absent.

Provided further that nothing in the first proviso shall apply, if the member performs the journey by air for visiting any place in India not more than once during a sitting of the Committee.

A special provision was made from 31 March 1995 to enable members to attend the sittings of the Departmentally Related Standing Committees during the consideration of Demands for Grants. A member shall be entitled for travelling allowances in respect of every journey performed by air for visiting any place in India during the interval, not exceeding five<sup>42</sup> days between two sittings of a Departmentally Related Standing Committee when a House of Parliament is adjourned for a fixed period during the Budget Session.

41. The Salary, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament Act, 1954, s. 4, effective from 1 October 2010.

Provided that such travelling allowances, excluding air fare, shall not exceed the total amount of daily allowances which would have been admissible to such member for the days of absence if he had not remained absent.<sup>43</sup>

Every member has been given the facility of thirty-four single air journeys to visit any place in India throughout the year either alone or along with spouse or any number of companions or relatives. The journeys performed by the spouse, companion or relatives shall be taken into account of 34 air journeys. Further, where the number of journeys performed by any member by air in a year is less than thirty-four, the balance number of journeys, not performed by him, shall be carried over to the following year<sup>44</sup>.

Provided that no member shall be entitled to any payment in respect of any journeys in excess of thirty-four performed by him during the year. The ceiling imposed restricting the claim to the amount of daily allowance which would have been admissible for the days of absence if the member had not so remained absent would not apply in this case.

For the purposes of air journeys, the year shall be counted beginning with the commencement of the Salary, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament (Amendment) Act, 1985, i.e. 26 December 1985 and each of the subsequent years. In the case of a person who becomes a member after such commencement, the year beginning with the date on which his term of office as such member commences and each of the subsequent years<sup>45</sup>.

Every member who has his ordinary place of residence in the Ladakh area of the State of Jammu and Kashmir is entitled to an amount equal to the fare by air for each single journey by air performed by him along with spouse or one person who accompanied such member from any airport in Ladakh to the airport in Delhi and back at any time<sup>46</sup>.

Where the interval between the adjournment of one session of the House, or as the case may be, one sitting of a Committee and the re-assembly of the House or the next sitting of the Committee at the same place does not exceed five<sup>47</sup> days and the member concerned elects to remain at such place during the interval, he is entitled to draw for each day of residence at such place the prescribed daily allowance.

Free Transit by Railway

Every member is provided with one free non-transferable first class air-conditioned or executive class<sup>48</sup> railway pass which entitles him to travel at any time by any railway in India. In the case of a member until he is provided with a free rail pass or who on ceasing to be a member surrenders his pass, he shall be entitled to receive one first class air-conditioned or executive class rail fare for the journeys performed by rail as referred under the relevant Act<sup>49</sup>. Each member is also entitled to one free 'air-conditioned two-tier'<sup>50</sup> railway pass for one person to accompany the member when he travels by rail. The spouse of the member, if any, is entitled to free travel by any railway in India in first class air-conditioned or executive class in all trains from any place in India to any other place in India, with the member<sup>51</sup>.

In the case of members representing the Union territory of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands or the Union territory of Lakshadweep, each member is provided with one free non-transferable pass which entitles him to travel at any time by the highest class by steamer to and fro any part of his constituency and any other part of his constituency or the nearest port in the mainland of India. Each member of Parliament representing Islands as such is also entitled to an amount equal to the fare by air from his usual place of residence to the nearest airport in the mainland of India<sup>52</sup> and back.

Besides, the member representing the Union territory of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands or the Union territory of Lakshadweep is entitled to a free pass for one person to accompany the member and travel by the highest class (without diet) by steamer to and fro any part of his constituency or the nearest port in the mainland of India or one free non-transferable pass for the spouse, if any, of the member to travel by the highest class (without diet) by steamer to and fro the usual place of the residence of the member in his constituency and the nearest port in the mainland of India. Each such member is also entitled to an amount equal to the fare by air for the spouse, if any, of the member, or for one person to accompany him from the usual place of residence in the island to the nearest airport in the mainland of India<sup>53</sup> and back.

Facilities to Blind and Physically Incapacitated Members<sup>54</sup>

class in which the member travels in lieu of one free air-conditioned and two tier class railway pass; and where the member cannot perform the journey by rail or air he is entitled to an amount equal to one road mileage<sup>55</sup>.

Allowances in respect of Journeys Abroad

Where a member performs a journey outside India in discharge of his duties as such member, he is entitled to free return air-cum-rail-cum-sea passage and daily allowance as admissible to a Grade I Officer of the Government of India<sup>56</sup>.

Members are also entitled to the reimbursement of expenses incurred on boarding and lodging at enforced halts en route where the air companies do not provide the same, subject to the maximum daily allowance admissible at the place of halt, actual expenses incurred on passport fees and vaccination and inoculation and incidental expenses such as tips, taxi hires and cab fare incurred on duty, on production of necessary vouchers. Where vouchers are not available, the expenditure is reimbursable on the basis of the certificate that it was actually incurred.

If any question arises whether a journey performed by a member outside India was for parliamentary business or not, the question is referred in the case of a member belonging to the Lok Sabha, to the Speaker and in the case of a member belonging to the Rajya Sabha, to the Chairman, and their decision in the matter is final.

A member is eligible to a quota of foreign exchange amounting to one lakh rupees during the term of his membership.

Besides, a member and the spouse of the member is eligible for the issue of Diplomatic Passport for going abroad on study tour on his own.

Mode of Payment to the Members

The payment of salary and allowances to the members is made by the Pay and Accounts Offices, Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha, as the case may be. For the facility of members, there is a Pay Office of the State Bank of India in the Parliament House, where members can cash their cheques throughout the year<sup>57</sup>.

Pension

(a) Pension to Ex-members of Parliament

There shall be paid a pension of twenty thousand rupees<sup>58</sup> per mensem to every person who has served for any period<sup>59</sup> as a member of Provisional Parliament or either House of Parliament.

59. Ibid.

Provided that where a person has served as a member of the Provisional Parliament or either House of Parliament for a period exceeding five years, there shall be paid to him an additional pension of fifteen hundred rupees per mensem for every year served in excess of five years.

In computing the number of years, for the purposes of sub-section (1), the period during which a person has served as a Minister as defined in Salaries and Allowances of Ministers Act, 1952 or as an Officer of Parliament as defined in the Salaries and Allowances of Officers of Parliament Act, 1953, (other than the Chairman of the Council of States), or as a Leader of the Opposition as defined in the Salary and Allowances of Leader of Opposition in Parliament Act, 1977, or has served in all or any two of such capacities by virtue of his membership in the House of the People or in the Council of States shall also be taken into account.

Where the period for which the pension is payable contains a part of a year, then, if such part is nine months or more, it shall be reckoned equivalent to complete one year for the purpose of payment of additional pension and if such part is less than nine months, it shall be ignored<sup>60</sup>.

Where any person entitled to ex-MP pension –

- (i) is elected to the Office of the President or Vice-President or is appointed to the Office of the Governor of any State or the Administrator of any Union territory; or
- (ii) becomes a member of the Council of States or the House of the People or any Legislative Assembly of a State or Union territory or any Legislative Council of a State; or
- (iii) is employed on a salary under the Central Government or any State Government or any corporation owned or controlled by the Central Government or any State Government, or any local authority or becomes otherwise entitled to any remuneration from such Government, corporation or local authority;

such person shall not be entitled to ex-MP pension for the period during which he continues to hold such office or as such member, or is so employed or continued to be entitled to such remuneration:

Provided that where the salary payable to such person for holding such office or being such member or so employed, or where the remuneration referred to in clause (iii) payable to such person, is, in either case, less than the pension payable to him, such person shall be entitled only to receive the balance as pension.

Where any person entitled to ex-MP pension is also entitled<sup>61</sup> to any other pension, such person shall be entitled to receive the ex-MP pension in addition to such other pension. The grant of pension to an ex-Member of Parliament shall, however, be governed by the conditions laid down in Section 8A and Section 8AB of the Salary, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament Act.

(b) Family Pension to Spouse/Eligible Dependant of Deceased Members/Ex-members of Parliament

The spouse or dependant of a deceased member is entitled<sup>62</sup> to receive family pension equal to 50 per cent of the pension otherwise admissible to the deceased member at the time of his death for the remainder period of life of the spouse. The dependant will get family pension subject to fulfilment of conditions as stipulated in section 2(aa) of the Salary, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament Act. The spouse/dependant of those deceased ex-MPs who had served either House of Parliament prior to 15 September 2006 shall also be entitled to family pension on the same terms and conditions as are applicable to the spouse/dependant of a deceased member of Parliament.

If the spouse/dependant is entitled to any pension under the Salary, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament Act, he will not be entitled to receive family pension.

No person shall be entitled to claim arrears of family pension for the period prior to 15 September 2006.

The grant of family pension to spouse/eligible dependant of an ex-member of Parliament shall, however, be governed by the conditions laid down in Section 8AC of the Salary, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament Act, 1954.

Allowances, etc. given to Members serving on Government Committees

Members are appointed or nominated on Committees, Commissions, etc. set up by the Government from time to time. The terms of salary, honorarium, allowances, sitting fee, etc. payable and perquisites or facilities provided to the members serving on a non-statutory body are usually laid down in the Government notification or resolution constituting it, and in the case of statutory body, the information in respect of the same is provided in the rules framed under the provisions of the relevant Act. The payment of allowances, etc. is made to the members by the concerned Ministries of the Government of India or the Departments of the State Governments.

It was recommended by the Joint Committee on Offices of Profit that in order to obviate the danger of members incurring disqualification, the Government should issue instructions to all the public undertakings, whether fully or partially owned by them, to provide in their rules that members serving on them should not be entitled to any sum of money other than 'compensatory allowance' as defined in section 2(a) of the Parliament (Prevention of Disqualification) Act, 1959<sup>63</sup>. Similar recommendation was also made in the case of non-statutory bodies set up by the Government<sup>64</sup>.

62. The Salary, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament Act, 1954, s.8AC, as amended on 15 September 2006.

The Government of India accordingly issued comprehensive instructions<sup>65</sup> regarding payment of remuneration such as travelling allowance, daily allowance, etc. to members serving on Committees, Commissions, Boards of Inquiry, etc., set up by the Government.

According to these instructions, members of Parliament are usually entitled to the following allowances—

(a) Travelling Allowance

A member of Parliament is entitled to travelling allowance in respect of journeys performed by rail, road, air and steamer in connection with the work of Committees/Commissions, etc. set up by the Union Government on the same scale as is admissible to him under section 4 of the Salary, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament Act, 1954, as amended<sup>66</sup>.

(b) Daily Allowance

A member of Parliament is entitled to daily allowance at the same scale as is admissible to him under section 3 of the Salary, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament Act, 1954, i.e. two thousand rupees per day. He will also be entitled to daily allowance for two days preceding and two days following the meeting if the member of Parliament actually stays at the place of meeting<sup>67</sup>.

During a session of Parliament or during the period when a Parliamentary Committee of which he is a member, is in session, the member is not entitled to draw any daily allowance in connection with his assignment on the Government Committee, Commission, etc. as he will be drawing his daily allowance from the Secretariat. However, if he certifies that he was prevented from attending the session of Parliament or the concerned Parliamentary Committee, because of his work connected with the Government Committee, etc., and did not draw any daily allowance from the Secretariat, he will be entitled to draw daily allowance as indicated above.

63. See 1R(JCOP-2LS), para 17.

‘Compensatory Allowances’ has been defined as follows—

Compensatory allowance means any sum of money payable to the holder of any office by way of daily allowance (such allowance not exceeding the amount of daily amount to which a member of Parliament is entitled under the Salaries and Allowances of Members of Parliament Act, 1954), any conveyance allowance, house rent allowance or travelling allowance for the purpose of enabling him to recoup any expenditure incurred by him in performing the function of that office.

Medical Facilities

Members of Parliament are entitled to same medical facilities as are available to the Officers of Central Civil Service, Class-I under Central Government Health Scheme (CGHS)<sup>68</sup>.

There was no regular arrangement for providing medical facilities to members prior to 16 November 1959, when the Contributory Health Service Scheme (since renamed Central Government Health Scheme) was extended to them in pursuance of the Medical Facilities (Members of Parliament) Rules, 1959. Wellness Centres cater mainly to the medical needs of members and their families.

In addition, an Ayurvedic, Unani and a Homoeopathic Dispensary are also functioning for the benefit of the members. These facilities are admissible upto a month after a member ceases to be a member of Parliament.

A First Aid Post under a senior medical officer functions throughout the year to attend to emergent cases arising within the precincts of the Parliament House and in Vithalbhai Patel House at fixed hours for the convenience of members.

A medical examination centre has also been set up in Parliament House Annexe with a medical specialist, and with X-ray, Ultrasound, E.C.G., Physiotherapy, Cardiac and laboratory testing facilities. The other specialists such as Dental, Eye, ENT, Surgeon, Orthopaedic Surgeon, Gynaecologist, Skin Specialist, Paediatrician, Psychiatrist besides a dietician also visit the centre on specified days in a week for consultation by members.

The medical facilities under the Central Government Health Scheme have been extended to ex-members of Parliament with effect from 6 July 1976 by the Ministry of Health and Family Welfare.

The facility of C.G.H.S. is now available to its beneficiaries in many important cities of the country.

Housing Facilities

Members of Parliament are entitled without payment of license fee<sup>69</sup> to housing accommodation<sup>70</sup> in the form of flat (including hostel accommodation). Throughout his term of office. Members are also allotted housing accommodation in the form of bungalow as per criteria laid down by the House Committee<sup>71</sup>, keeping in view the status of the member, for which they are required to pay normal licence fee.

68. See the Medical Facilities (Members of Parliament) Rules, 1959. A compulsory monthly contribution is levied on every member on the basis of his salary at the same rate as would be payable by a Government servant drawing pay equal to the salary of the member and such contribution is recoverable from the monthly salary bill of the member.

69. After every General Election for Lok Sabha, arrangements are made for stay of members' temporarily in New Delhi. Such accommodation is treated as transit accommodation. During their stay in transit accommodation, members are provided single suite free of licence fee till such time as regular accommodation is made available. However, members will be liable to pay charges for food and other additional services during their stay in transit accommodation.

A member, who is provided any accommodation as per his entitlement under the Housing and Telephone Facilities (Members of Parliament) Rules, 1956, as amended<sup>72</sup>, is liable to pay licence fee on account of any improvement or addition made to it or any additional services provided thereto; it shall be twenty-five per cent less than the normal rent payable in respect of such improvement, addition or additional service. The furniture shall be made available free of charge to the members within the existing monetary ceiling of sixty thousand rupees in respect of durable furniture and fifteen thousand rupees for non-durable furniture. Members are liable to pay additional rent based on the depreciation value of furniture for the Extra furniture made available to them beyond the ceiling of seventy five thousand rupees as desired by the members in their residences. Further additional provisions such as tiles in bathroom and kitchen, as demanded, and washing of sofa covers and curtains after every three months shall be provided free of cost.

Every member shall in respect of any accommodation allotted to him or in respect of any private accommodation in Delhi in which he is residing also be entitled, without payment of charges, to the supply of water and electricity upto a maximum of 50,000 units of electricity per annum (25,000 units each of light/ power meters or pooled together) and 4,000 kilolitres of water per annum free of charge beginning first January of every year<sup>73</sup>.

Before the commencement of the first session of a new Lok Sabha, a circular is issued to all members by the Secretariat inviting applications for residential accommodation. In allotting the accommodation, efforts are made, as far as possible, to allot the type of accommodation desired by a member in accordance with the criteria laid down by the House Committee.

“Improvement” or “addition” means the provision of additional accommodation, furniture, table and pedestal fans, table lamps, floor standard lamps, boilers, refrigerators, desert coolers and air-conditioning units.

“Furniture” means such items of furniture as are admissible to a member for a residence allotted to him and includes any additional items taken on rent by a member in his residence.

“Charges in respect of additional services” means charges in respect of—the provision of Sweepers and Jamadars and the staff attached to members’ residences with dusters and brooms;

the supply of electric bulbs at the residences of members;

the maintenance of flowers beds;

the maintenance of any place (like an Enquiry Office) intended for the common benefit of members; and any other amenities provided for the common benefit of members.

71. For House Committee, See Chapter XXX—‘Parliamentary Committees’.

72. The Housing and Telephone Facilities (Members of Parliament) Rules, 1956, rule 2(3), effective from 12 December 2006.

73. Ibid, rule 2(2), effective from 12 December 2006.

A member is not allowed to sublet the accommodation to or share it with, any person, including a member of Parliament, without obtaining the prior permission in writing from the Chairman of the House Committee of the Lok Sabha or of the Rajya Sabha, as the case may be. Members can retain the residential accommodation for a maximum period of one month after their retirement, resignation or removal on payment of the same rent which they were paying before the occurrence of any of these events.

In the case of the death of a member, however, the members of his family can retain the accommodation on the same rate of licence fee as was payable by the member immediately before his death, for a maximum period of six months after which the allotment shall be deemed cancelled. The Deductions on account of licence fee in respect of accommodation and telephone charges, etc. are made from the salary bill of a member, as assessed by the Directorate of Estates and the Telephone Department.

As far as possible, accommodation for short periods is also allotted to members on payment of licence fee as prescribed from time to time for the use of their guests.

All questions relating to allotment of residences to members and the facilities and other amenities to be provided therein are dealt with by the respective House Committees.

A few rooms are made available to members in the Parliament House where they can do their parliamentary work.

The Central Public Works Department looks after the lawns and maintenance of buildings allotted to members. In addition to furniture, electrical appliances like room heaters, geysers, refrigerators, table and pedestal fans, air cooling units, etc. are issued to members by the Department on payment of prescribed rent.

Telephone Facilities

During the term of office, a member is entitled to three free telephones, one at his residence or office in Delhi or New Delhi and the other at his usual place of residence or a place selected by him in his constituency or within the State in which he resides. The installation charges, monthly rental and local call charges to the extent of fifty thousand<sup>74</sup> local calls per year for each of these telephones are borne by the Government. In addition to this, the Chairman of a Parliamentary Committee, excluding a Select or Joint Committee on a Bill or any other ad hoc Committee, shall be exempted from payment of any charges for calls made from the telephone installed at his residence in Delhi or New Delhi<sup>75</sup>. In addition, the following facilities are also provided:

- (i) Each member is also entitled to have one additional telephone without payment of installation and rental charges either at his residence in Delhi/ New Delhi or at his usual place of residence or at the place selected by him within the State in which his constituency is or in the State in which he resides and 50,000 free local calls during a year are allowed on the telephone and for Internet connectivity purposes.

- (ii) The above mentioned 50,000 free local calls admissible on each telephone can be clubbed together which comes to 1,50,000 local calls in a year.
- (iii) A member may use any number of telephones for availing the above-mentioned 1,50,000 free local calls subject to the condition that the telephones are in the name of member and the installation and rental charges of additional telephones are borne by the member himself.
- (iv) Every member is also entitled to one mobile phone connection of MTNL and another mobile phone connection of MTNL/BSNL or any private mobile operator, in case MTNL/BSNL services are not available, with national roaming facility for utilization in the constituency and the calls made from these telephones may be adjusted from the above-mentioned 1,50,000 calls available to him on three telephones. However, the registration and rental charges for private mobile phone connection are borne by the member himself.
- (v) In case a member makes calls in excess of admissible free local calls in a year, the excess calls can be adjusted from the calls available to him on three telephones for the next year. Further, the unutilized telephone calls of a year are carried over to the subsequent years till the seat of a member becomes vacant.
- (vi) A member is also entitled to avail broadband facility from MTNL/BSNL on any one of the above-mentioned three telephones subject to the condition that the Government may pay upto Rs. 1,500 per month towards the charges of this facility directly to MTNL/BSNL.

Further shifting of telephones necessitated by change of allotment or surrender of an officially allotted residence is allowed free of charge. Once a particular telephone number is opened for a member, the same number is, as far as possible, re-opened (after having been closed at the termination of session, etc.) for him, whenever so requested.

- (vii) The members can also avail:-
  - (i) Mobile chip and connection for iPod (unlimited free data download) in lieu of local calls equivalent to Rs. 999/- per month, to be adjusted from the quota of calls admissible to the MP.
  - (ii) Unlimited blackberry 3G data usage and instant messaging Data Card 3.6 Mbps as per 3G Plans provided to members; in lieu of local calls equivalent to Rs. 999/- to be adjusted from the quota of free calls.
  - (iii) Mobile TV on the existing 3G mobile set and mobile connection in lieu of local calls equivalent to Rs. 75/- per month to be adjusted from the quota of calls admissible to the MP.

Where a member dies during the term of his office, his family shall, for a period not exceeding two months from the date of death of the member, be entitled to retain the telephone and avail of such facilities as were available to the said member immediately before his death.

Facilities to Members of Pre-maturely Dissolved Lok Sabha

If a Lok Sabha is dissolved pre-maturely, the members of the dissolved Lok Sabha are entitled to avail the unutilized telephone calls from the date of dissolution of the Lok Sabha to the constitution of subsequent Lok Sabha. Further, if a member is re-elected in subsequent Lok Sabha, he is entitled to adjust the excess telephone calls, availed during the intervening period from the quota for the first year of the subsequent Lok Sabha.

Stenographic Assistance

Members are provided with limited stenographic assistance in both English and Hindi so that they can dispose of their urgent parliamentary work promptly and methodically.

Advance for the Purchase of Conveyance

Every member is entitled to an advance not exceeding rupees four lakh or the actual price of the conveyance which is intended to be purchased, whichever is less, subject to such conditions as have been laid down in this behalf. Simple interest at the rate fixed by the Union Government in relation to the advance for the purchase of conveyance by the Government servants shall be charged on the said advance<sup>76</sup>.

Income-tax Relief

For the purpose of income-tax, the monthly remuneration received by member is described as “income from other sources” and consequently, no income-tax is deducted at source. The daily allowance and travelling allowance are exempt from income-tax.

Facilities provided by Parliament Library and Reference, Research, Documentation and Information Service

The primary objective of what is functionally known as the Parliament Library and Reference, Research, Documentation and Information Service (LARRDIS) of the Lok Sabha Secretariat is to keep members of both Houses of Parliament well informed of varied development by furnishing them with non-partisan, objective, authentic and timely information on a regular basis. The Service also provides reference material on legislative measures and other business coming up for discussion before the two Houses so as to enable members to participate effectively in the debates.

76. Till 2002, the collections of the Parliament Library were housed in the Parliament House. The new Parliament Library Building in the Parliament Complex was inaugurated by President K.R. Narayanan on 7 May 2002.

The various facilities and services provided by the Divisions/Wings in the LARRDIS, in brief, are as under:

Parliament Library

The Parliament Library is located in the Parliament Library Building (Sansadiya Gyanpeeth)—The principal functions of the Library Division are acquisition, processing, preservation and issue of books, periodicals, reports and other published material received from various sources.

Parliament Library at present acquires 481 journals and 85 newspapers for reference and use of members of Parliament. These include 374 journals in English, 72 in Hindi and 35 in different regional languages. Periodicals and newspapers in English, Hindi and various other Indian languages are displayed in the 'A' Block on the Ground Floor of the Parliament Library Building as well as in the Reading Hall on the Ground Floor of Parliament House. With its present holding of about 1.27 million volumes of books, reports of Parliamentary Committees, law reports, Reports of Central, State and Foreign Governments, publications of the United Nations and its allied agencies, and other reference publications are stacked in the First and Second Basement of the Parliament Library Building. The Debates of the Central Legislative Assembly, the Constituent Assembly, the Lok Sabha, the Rajya Sabha, the State Legislatures in India and select foreign Parliaments; Gazettes of India and of all the States, Central Acts since 1841, Bills, and Statements Laid on the Table of the two Houses are stacked in the 'G' Block. Books on a wide range of subjects are arranged according to the Dewey Decimal System of Classification and kept in the First Floor and the First Basement of the Library. Reading rooms are provided in both the Ground Floor and the First Floor of the Parliament Library.

The issue of books and other publications to members is regulated by the Library Rules which are framed on the recommendations of the Library Committee.

As a mark of respect to the memory of Mahatma Gandhi, the Father of the Nation, a separate Gandhiana Section, which contains works by and on Gandhi in English, Hindi and various other Indian regional languages, was opened in the Parliament Library on 9 August 1978. Similarly, there is a separate section known as Nehruana having books by and on Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, the first Prime Minister of India. A separate unit containing books in various Indian languages has been carved out in the Library. Besides, the Parliament Library also have a Children's Corner on the Ground Floor.

Rare and Art Books

The Parliament Library possesses a rich collection of rare books on politics, law, history, art, painting, sculpture and architecture. Books on Indian art cover a broad canvas of Indian history as well depicting different stages of its evolution. These include the paintings of the Mughal, Rajput, Kangra, Garhwal and other Schools of Art. The foreign art collections comprise the creations of celebrated artists like Michaelangelo, Leonardo Da Vinci and Raphael as also works on Chinese and Japanese art, Russian, German, French, American and Arabian paintings. The book titled, History on Late Revolution of the Great Mogol Empire by Burnier, published in 1671, is one of the oldest books available in the Parliament Library. Another important document in the possession of the Parliament Library is the original calligraphed Constitution of India (in Hindi and English).

Children's Corner

Children's Corner, established as a branch Library of the main Parliament Library, is a unique arrangement in so far as Legislature Libraries are concerned. Such kind of arrangement for children exists only in the National Diet Library of Japan. Setting up of Children's Corner in Parliament Library is a step forward to fulfil the United Nation's<sup>77</sup> Convention on the right of the child.

The Children's Corner was inaugurated by the Speaker Somnath Chatterjee on 21 August, 2007. His concept to establish a "Children's Corner" in Parliament Library is an initiative towards easy access of knowledge to the children, specially children of under privileged sections of the society, who do not have access to good and resourcefull Library. It has been designed to inculcate the reading habits amongst children and to enable them in sharing the vast resources of Parliament Library and the exhibits displayed in the Parliament Museum and Archives.

The Children's Corner comprises of more than 3418 books, magazines, old classics, contemporary fiction, encyclopaedia, science project books, e-literature i.e. CDs and DVDs. From time to time, children can watch movies, plays and other informative programmes on computers and plasma screen. Children are encouraged to use the computer as an educational tool and are rendered assistance.

Special events like drawing competition, story telling, story painting, cultural programmes and puppet shows are organized from time to time to make the Children's Corner an interactive hub of activities.

Since its inauguration, the Children's Corner has been attracting many children from various schools particularly the children of the under privileged sections of the Society. Small group of children sponsored by recognized schools and registered NGOs are making regular use of the Children's Corner.

The children in the age group of 8 to 17 are eligible to be members of the Children's Corner. Membership is also extended to (a) Children/grand children of members of Parliament and Ex-MPs; (b) Children of the permanent employees of the Secretariats of both Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha and also of the Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs; (c) Children of the Journalists accredited to the Press Gallery of the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha ; and (d) Children sponsored by the registered NGOs and schools. Membership Form can be obtained from the Reception Office, Parliament Library Building

Documentation Service

The Documentation Service of Parliament Library was set up in 1975 for indexing of articles published in newspapers, periodicals and edited books received in the Parliament Library that may be of interest to the members of Parliament. The Indexed entries of selected articles contain bibliographic details such as name of the author, title, name and date or the year of the publication, suitable annotation and subject headings as per the specially devised scheme of classification. The Indexed entries of articles for a fortnight are arranged, fed into the computer and published in the form of a publication, titled 'Parliamentary Documentation'. Earlier, until December 1988, the bibliographic details of these selected articles were published in the publication titled 'Documentation Fortnightly'.

From August 2008 onwards, the Service also brings out publication in Hindi titled 'Sansadiya Pralekhan' so as to cater to the information needs of members of Parliament, Officers of both the Secretariats, researchers and other users who intend to take bibliographical details of articles appearing in Hindi Newspapers, Journals and edited books being received in the Parliament Library.

The electronic versions of 'Parliamentary Documentation' and 'Sansadiya Pralekhan' are being sent to members of Parliament, Officers of the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha Secretariats at their e-mail addresses. The Publications are also available to the public through the Home Page of 'Parliament of India': <http://loksabha.nic.in> → Parliament Library → Services → Documentation and <http://loksabha.nic.in> → Hindi Site → Sansadiya Granthalay → 'Sansadiya Pralekhan'.

The indexed entries may be searched online from various parameters, such as name of the author, title of the article, name and year of the publication, subject of the article, etc. Though the 'Parliamentary Documentation' and the 'Sansadiya Pralekhan' are available on Parliament of India Home Page, a few computer generated copies of the publications are also taken out and distributed for reference and use by the Officers of the Lok Sabha Secretariat. Bound volumes of 'Documentation Fortnightly' (1975-1988), 'Parliamentary Documentation' (1989 onwards) and the 'Sansadiya Pralekhan' (August 2008 onwards) are also kept in Parliament Library for reference purpose.

Press Clippings Service

This Service, set up in 1956 caters to the latest information needs of the members of Parliament and other users of Parliament Library by providing them relevant and up-to-date press clippings of news items, selected editorials comments and articles on important developments in legislative, political, economic, socio-cultural, scientific and technological fields, taken from selected English and Hindi newspapers. The Press Clippings are maintained chronologically in subject folders and stacked in proper sequence according to a specially devised classification scheme based on the Dewey Decimal Classification. These folders can be consulted in the Reading Rooms of Parliament Library and are not issued out. Selected Press Clippings (in Hindi and English) on topical interest are scanned and uploaded. These clippings can be retrieved through classification number and subject and keywords from the computers connected to the Local Area Network (LAN) in Parliament precincts. Ordinarily, Press Clippings are retained for five years. However, important clippings of lasting value and interest and those having a bearing on constitutional, parliamentary and legal subjects are retained permanently after scrutiny.

Microfilming Unit

The Microfilming Unit of Parliament Library was set up in 1987, to provide for Computer-Assisted Retrieval (CAR) of information from the microfilmed documents. Located at the Sansadiya Gyanpeeth building, the Unit has three RV-3 and one MRD-2 cameras which enable microfilming of 16mm and 35mm/16mm rolls, respectively. A Processor and a Duplicator for making additional copies of microfilm rolls are also available. The microfilms can be used with the help of the Microfilm reader-cum-printer which is installed in the Branch.

There are over 1673 microfilm rolls containing more than 33 lakhs exposures, including the important documents like the Indian Legislative Council Debates (1858-1920), Central Legislative Assembly Debates (3 February 1921 to 12 April 1947), Council of States Debates (3 February 1921 to 19 May 1954), Constituent Assembly Debates (Legislation) and also Draft making in Hindi as well as English (9 December 1946 to 24 January 1950), Parliamentary Debates (Provisional Parliament and House of the People) (28 January 1950 to 13 May 1954), Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha Debates (Hindi and English), Constitution of India—(calligraphed copy), proceedings of the Presiding Officers Conference, Papers Laid on the Table of Lok Sabha, Information relating to Parliamentary Committees, Reports of Departmentally Related Standing Committees, O&M Records, Library Records, Bills, Rare Books, Decisions from the Chair, Observations from the Chair, Directions by the Speaker and a few Lok Sabha Secretariat Publications. Apart from these, microfilming has been done of some documents of historical importance also viz., Indian Round Table Conference Proceedings (1930-1932), Constituent Assembly of India—Constitutional Precedents (1947), Indian Statutory Commission—Memoranda (1930), Sardar Patel's Correspondence (1945-1950)—Vols. I to X, Indian Historical Records Commission—Proceedings (1920-1960), Partition Proceedings—Expert Committee No. 1 (1947-1949) and Indian Record Series—Fort William—India House Correspondence: Vols. II to IV and other contemporary, papers, and VI to XXI and also papers of archival value.

The Unit also proposes to undertake the microfilming of some other documents like Reports of various Inquiry Committees and Commissions as available in the Parliament Library, Newspaper (bound volumes), etc.

The microfilms can be viewed by members of Parliament and other users of the Parliament Library.

A one-member Committee headed by S.S. Ahluwalia, ex-MP, Rajya Sabha was constituted on 10 July 2012 to suggest ways and means to carry forward microfilming and digitization of Parliamentary Proceedings, documents and also to transform Parliament Library into a Digital Library. The Committee is in the process of carrying out further the process of microfilming and digitization of all Parliamentary records simultaneously.

Reprography Service

This Service, set up in 1975, meets the urgent requirements of members for photocopying of important Press Clippings, parliamentary questions and answers, articles in periodicals and newspapers and extracts from books and other documents.

Members' Reference Service

The Members' Reference Service arranges the dissemination of factual, objective and latest information to Presiding Officers, members of Parliament and Chairmen of the Parliamentary Committees on important legislative measures and other subjects of economic, social, political, constitutional and legal interest. The scope of material to be provided in response to members' references is normally limited to subjects connected with the immediate business before the two Houses of Parliament. The information needs of members are met both in English and in Hindi.

The Service broadly performs the following functions:

- (i) Supply of on-the-spot references to members from published documents;
- (ii) Collection and dissemination of the latest relevant material, factual data, statistics, etc. in response to members' references;
- (iii) Preparation of bibliographies on important subjects including Bills; and
- (iv) Preparation of Reference Notes, Brochures, Background Notes, Fact Sheets, Information Bulletins, Information Folders, etc. and maintenance of 'Study Boxes' on topical issues as part of anticipatory referencing work.

A large number of these occasional papers are now available on Parliament of India website and on Intranet in digital format for on-line retrieval by members of Parliament and for use in the Secretariat. In addition, a software package for keeping the records of references made by members of Parliament has been developed by the National Informatics Centre (NIC), Government of India.

In addition, the revision and updating of the following ad hoc publications are undertaken from time to time:

- (i) President's Rule in the States and Union territories;
- (ii) Council of Ministers since 1947;
- (iii) Presidential Ordinances since 1950;
- (iv) Parliament of India: A study (brought out at the end of the term of each Lok Sabha).
- (v) Time Spent on Various Kinds of Business in Lok Sabha – An Analysis; and
- (vi) India: Some Facts (updated from time to time).

When the Parliament is not in Session, the Service prepares papers on topics of contemporary interest which are supplied to members during the Session period. Besides, the Reference Division, in close association with the Parliament Library, sets up a Reference Desk during Parliamentary Conferences and Seminars hosted by the Indian Parliament to meet the information requirements of the Delegates. Selected Parliamentary publications and reference books are put on display at the Reference Desk.

Research and Information Division

Appreciating well the multifarious information requirements of members, the Research and Information Division endeavours to keep them informed on a continuous basis about the current developments, both national and international, and brings out, in English and Hindi, specialized Books, Brochures, Background notes, Information Bulletins, Fact Sheets, Monographs, etc. thereon, as also on important issues coming up before the two Houses of Parliament. Information so provided acts as ground to build balanced opinion on issues of vital importance. Profiles of eminent leaders whose statues and portraits are unveiled from time to time in the Parliament Complex are also prepared by the Service. All these publications are based on authentic published sources and continuous efforts are made to keep the publications up-to-date.

The Research and Information Service also brings out the following periodicals regularly:—

- (i) The Journal of Parliamentary Information (Quarterly);
- (ii) Digest of Central Acts (Quarterly);
- (iii) Digest of Legislative and Constitutional Cases (Quarterly);
- (iv) IPG Newsletter (Quarterly).

The Division, inter alia, prepares briefs, background notes, draft speeches, interventions, Memorandum, explanatory notes, Resolutions, etc. for Indian Parliamentary Delegations going to other countries on good-will visits or for participating in various International Parliamentary Conferences/Meetings/Seminars held under the auspices of the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU), the Commonwealth Parliament Association (CPA), the Association of SAARC Speakers and Parliamentarians, the Conferences of Commonwealth Speakers and Presiding Officers, etc.

Computer Information Service

The twentieth century has witnessed major developments in technology relating to the gathering, processing and distribution of information. Among other developments, the installation of world-wide telephone networks, the invention of radio, television and satellite technology are worth mentioning. Today, all these technologies together have greatly facilitated the people living in distant parts of the country, region or the world to come closer to one another, think and work together to achieve common goals.

By increasing the speed and the scope of communication and computation, modern information technologies (IT) have radically altered basic patterns of human interaction, communication and thought. This, in turn, has fostered economic growth and development and has also helped in the better dissemination of information and knowledge around the globe.

The Parliament of India has taken significant steps in developing information technology to assist the members of Parliament in the effective discharge of their duties. The Parliament Library made a modest beginning towards automation in December 1985 when a Computer Centre for managing the Parliament Library Information System (PARLIS) was set up with the help of the National Informatics Centre (NIC). Since then, the computerization programme has taken a quantum jump and now, almost the entire Lok Sabha Secretariat is in the process of automation.

The Parliament Library Information System (PARLIS) was designed within the Library for the benefit of members of Parliament. Initially, it was a database of subject index references to parliamentary information. Later, all the databases were converted into full text databases in Web format and made available onto the Parliament of India Home Page, i.e., <http://parliamentofindia.nic.in>

In a very short period, the Home Page containing the information generated within the Rajya Sabha and the Lok Sabha has become an important source of information and reference tool about the Constitution of India, history of Indian Parliament, parliamentary practices and procedures, proceedings of Constituent Assembly, Rajya Sabha and Lok Sabha, profiles of members of both the Houses and their socio-economic background, etc. Separate websites of the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha are being maintained by the respective Secretariats and are linked onto the Parliament of India Home Page.

In addition, general information about Parliament, Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha, Directions by the Speaker, Government of India Manual on Parliamentary Work, Government Instructions on dealings with MPs and Virtual Tour of Parliament House and Parliament Library are also made available on the Home Page. Links to Legislative Bodies in India; Rajya Sabha; other Parliaments; Inter-Parliamentary Union; Commonwealth Parliamentary Association; President of India; Prime Minister; Ministries; States and Union Territories; Election Commission; Supreme Court and High Courts have also been provided under the icon Legislative Sites, Judicial/Legal Sites and Official Sites.

Lok Sabha Speaker's Website (<http://speakerloksabha.nic.in>)

A separate Home Page has been developed for the Lok Sabha Speaker, which inter alia, contains the profile of the incumbent Speaker, political and personal achievements, role of the Speaker, events attended, speeches and press releases. Profiles of all the previous Speakers along with their terms of office are available in this Site.

Parliament Museum Website (<http://parliamentmuseum.org>)

The interactive website of the Parliament Museum was launched by the Speaker of Lok Sabha, on 19 December 2007. The website tells the story of democratic heritage of India spanning over 2500 years of Indian history. This story is woven with the help of walk-through period settings with sound-light-video animation, large-screen interactive computer multi-media, animatronics, impressive visualization with multi-screen panoramic projection. The user can take part in quiz on Indian democracy, choose picture post-cards, e-mail and make suggestions or ask questions to the Museum.

Bureau of Parliamentary Studies and Training (BPST) Website (<http://bpst.nic.in>)

This website contains information relating to Orientation Programmes, Lectures, Courses, Seminars for Members, Training Programmes, Lok Sabha Internship Programme, Study Visits/Tours for Govt. Officials. It also provides information relating to Appreciation Courses organized for Probationers of All India Services, International Training Programmes for Parliamentary and Government Officials, etc.

Lok Sabha Television Channel (LSTV) website (<http://loksabhatv.nic.in>)

Besides the 24-hour Lok Sabha TV webcast, its schedule and important video clippings are available on the Home Page.

Parliament Library Website (<http://164.100.47.134/plibrary/home.htm>)

This website provides information relating to the Parliament Library collections, new additions to the library, e-Resources, and various services available to members of Parliament.

Scheme of Financial Entitlement to Members of Lok Sabha for purchase of Computer Equipment

The Committee on Provision of Computers to members of Lok Sabha headed by the Deputy Speaker is constituted to recommend computer hardware requirements of members of Lok Sabha. Members of Parliament (Lok Sabha) have been provided facility to procure computer and other peripherals under the Financial Scheme for Purchase of Computer Hardware and Software which came into effect from 31 July 2009. The financial entitlement of a member for purchasing equipment and software under the scheme during one's term as member of Lok Sabha shall be ₹ three lakhs, whether elected in General Election/bye election or nominated by the President under Article 331 of the Constitution<sup>78</sup>. However, purchase of e-Reader device shall be mandatory for a member to avail the above financial entitlement. Maintenance and insurance charges of the computer hardware procured by the member under the scheme is to be borne by the member himself. The computer equipment purchased by a member under the Scheme shall remain with him. However, he shall have to deposit depreciated cost of the computer equipment as per prevailing Income Tax Rules when he ceases to be a member.

Members' Query Booth

A Members' Query Booth is set up in Room No. G-127 of the Parliament Library Building where members submit the proforma invoice/bills for payment of amount to dealer or for reimbursement under the new scheme of financial entitlement for purchase of computer equipment. Members are also guided about the use of e-Reader and installation of e-Reader applications in their devices.

---

78. Inserted w.e.f. 13 January 2015.

Computer Hardware to Political Parties

As per provision of Computer Equipment (Legislature Party in Lok Sabha and Officers) Rules 2009, Political Parties which have been allotted accommodation in Parliament House Complex shall be entitled to have one desktop, one UPS, one printer and internet connection by the Secretariat. Maintenance of the computer hardware shall also be provided by the Secretariat. However, the cost of insurance and consumable items shall be borne by the Political Parties.

Intranet and E-mail Services

To facilitate sharing of data and to access internet, a high speed Local Area Network (LAN) has been laid providing for high performance, high port density, fast ethernet and gigabit ethernet aggregation in all parts of the network, including access, distribution and backbone layers as well as the server farm and data centre environments. The independent Local Area Network of the three buildings and reception offices is connected with each other through optical fiber cables for providing high speed connectivity. The computer connectivity to outside world, including Internet, is being provided through the National Informatics Centre Network known as NICNET. A dedicated E-Mail Messaging Service with the domain name (sansad.nic.in) is available to all members of Parliament and officers/sections of the Secretariat.

Procurement and Maintenance of Computers

A number of computers and servers have been installed in the Lok Sabha Secretariat for efficient management of information. The Standing Technical Advisory Committee (STAC) is constituted for technical examination of proposals and an Officers' Committee on Computerization in Lok Sabha Secretariat is constituted to discuss and recommend computer hardware requirements of various Offices/Branches of the Secretariat. Necessary Computer hardware are procured on the recommendations of the Committee.

The work of maintenance of the computers has been entrusted to a maintenance agency who has set up a Call Dispatch Centre in Parliament Complex to register the calls received from all Officers/Branches. The Call Dispatch Centre also provides telephonic support for user's assistance.

Training

Training Programmes are organized periodically at the Bureau of Parliamentary Studies and Training for the benefit of MPs/Officials in acquiring knowledge and developing/sharpening their skills in various uses of information technology for parliamentary work.

Parliamentary Museum and Archives Division (PMA)

With the growth of the parliamentary democracy in the country, a need was felt to evolve a system for preserving an authentic and up-to-date pictorial record of the Parliament of India – its history, activities and eminent personalities. To fulfil this objective, the Parliamentary Archives of Photographs and Films was initially set up in the year 1976 as part of the LARRDIS. Subsequently, in August 1984, a proposal to set up the Parliamentary Museum and Archives was approved by the then Speaker and General Purposes Committee of the Lok Sabha. After a great deal of preparatory groundwork, the Parliamentary Museum and Archives (PMA) was inaugurated by the then Speaker of Lok Sabha in December 1989.

The Division has been set up with the basic objective of undertaking acquisition, storage and preservation of precious records, historic documents, photographs, rare objects and articles connected with the origin, growth and functioning of the Constitution of India and its Parliamentary Institutions. The PMA seeks to preserve the past and the present for the future generations by protecting these records and articles from the ravages of time and neglect, and thereby enabling a better understanding of the history and growth of Parliamentary Institutions in India. The Division intends to provide due care for proper repairs, renovation, scientific preservation, cataloguing, storage and display of artefacts and photographs under ideal conditions.

The rich collections of PMA include, among others, portraits of distinguished national leaders and eminent parliamentarians, models and photographs of legislative buildings of Indian States and Union territories and foreign parliamentary buildings, gifts, mementoes, private papers, diaries and correspondence of Parliamentarians, commemorative stamps and coins, and a comprehensive photographic record of the history of the Indian Parliament, its events and activities. The photographic collection of PMA are also maintained in the digital format to ensure better preservation and easy retrieval of photographs.

The Division, in cooperation with concerned government agencies, also organizes from time to time, exhibitions for members of Parliament and the general public, on varying themes relating to the functioning and achievements of Parliament and other democratic institutions of India.

Parliament Museum

As part of Parliament Museum and Archives (PMA), Museum Section was initially set up to show, with the help of models, charts, illustrations, objects, photographs and other visual techniques, the evolution and functioning of parliamentary institutions in India and abroad.

After shifting of PMA to the Parliament Library Building in May 2002, an idea was conceived to bring Parliament closer to the people by setting<sup>79</sup> up a full fledged Parliament Museum in the Parliament Library Building. With this aim, an ultra-modern, hi-tech and interactive Parliament Museum of international standards,

79. As a corollary of this initiative, Dr. Saroj Ghose, an eminent Museologist and former President of International Council of Museums in UNESCO, Paris and retired Director General of National Council of Science Museum in India, was invited to set up the Parliament Museum. Dr. Ghose's concept in presentation of the blueprint of the Museum was approved by Leaders of all political parties in a meeting held on 21 April 2005. This was followed by signing of an Agreement on 24 August 2005 between Lok Sabha Secretariat and Kolkata Museum Society for setting up a world class Museum. The final script of the Museum was approved by the Leaders of all political parties on 17 March 2006.

highlighting India's rich democratic heritage was set up in a record time of 11 months. The Museum was inaugurated by Dr. A.P.J. Abdul Kalam, the then President of India on 14 August 2006 and has been opened for general public since 5 September 2006. It is spread over an area of more than 1500 square metres on the Ground Floor and the Mezzanine Floor in Hall No. G-118 of the Parliament Library Building.

The Museum endeavours to showcase the entire story of India's democratic heritage through seven major clusters with the help of walk-through period settings with sound-light-video-synchronisation, large scale interactive computer multi-media and immersive visualization with multi-screen panoramic projection, virtual reality and animatronics. The first cluster is on the 'Early Heritage and Medieval Period.' The emphasis in this cluster is on ancient democratic heritage of India, buddhist councils, missions for international peace and harmony and the famous secular religion of Akbar, Din-I-Illahi. The second cluster is on the 'Freedom Movement', in which attempts have been made to exhibit the multi-cultural pluralist society through exhibits on Unity in Diversity, Freedom Movement and a simulated recreation of Dandi March—wherein there is an emotional involvement of the visitors, enabling them to take part in the famous Dandi March of 1930. The third cluster depicts the 'Transfer of Power' through exhibits on legislative reforms, multi-party democracy and a documentary with multi-screen projections. The 'Making of the Constitution' forms the next cluster, wherein separate exhibits have been set up on the drafting of Constitution, the three organs of the State and adult suffrage. The fifth cluster attempts to recreate the functioning of the Parliament through recreated Rajya Sabha, the Lok Sabha and the Central Hall, wherein visitors get a unique opportunity to hear the famous speech 'tryst with destiny' of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. The next cluster depicts 'Parliaments of the World.' The Information Bank is the last cluster, which has been enriched by portraits of national leaders, artefacts and a well equipped Resource Center which houses visual & textual information regarding the democratic heritage, freedom struggle & photographs of MPs, etc. For the visually challenged visitors, the country's democratic heritage has been inscribed in brief in braille language also at different places in the Museum.

A well equipped Conservation Laboratory, set up in 2007, takes care of preservation & restoration of important collection of artefacts in Parliament Museum.

Apart from the general visitors, a large number of school children, VIPs, foreign diplomats and other dignitaries visit the Museum. In addition to the above, the visitors can enjoy an Arm Chair Tour of the museum through DVD/CD. On the Mezzanine Floor there is a Souvenir Shop having more than 50 items with the Parliament museum logo, on sale.

In order to further extend the reach of the museum to the people, an interactive website (www.parliamentmuseum.org) on the Parliament museum was launched on 19 December 2007 which provides an opportunity to the viewers to visit the museum virtually. Being a member of the International Council of Museums, the Parliament museum is recognized internationally.

Supply of Publications to Members

All periodicals brought out by LARRDIS are available to members of Parliament on request from the Parliament Library counters. Members who are interested in receiving any or all of these publications on a regular basis make specific written requests to this effect and their names are placed on the mailing lists.

Teleprinter Service

With a view to keeping members abreast of the latest news, national as well as international, English, Hindi and Urdu teleprinter machines have been installed in the Parliament House. When Parliament is in session, important news items are displayed on boards outside the Parliament Library (Ground Floor and elsewhere). Besides, news scanners have been installed in Parliament House. In addition to the teleprinter news, photographs, maps, charts, etc. connected with parliamentary activities are exhibited on these boards and at other places in the Parliament House.

Periodicals brought out by other Branches of the Lok Sabha Secretariat

Apart from the periodicals brought out by LARRDIS, the Legislative Branch (Privileges) of the Lok Sabha Secretariat brings out annually a periodical titled Privileges Digest, which carries summaries of privileges cases in Parliament and State Legislatures and other write-ups on privileges.

Besides, the Raj Bhasha Prabhat<sup>80</sup> of the Lok Sabha Secretariat brings out the following periodicals in Hindi for the use of members—(i) Sansadiya Patrika (Quarterly); (ii) Kendriya Adhiniyam Sar (Quarterly).

Other Facilities

Office accommodation in Parliament House complex is made available to recognised political parties and groups in the Parliament. This facility is, however, not available to individual members.

There are two refreshment rooms on the first floor of Parliament House and one snack bar near the Central Hall. Refreshment facilities are also available in the Parliament House, Reception Office for members and their guests. Similar facilities are available for members in the Parliament House Annexe as well as the Parliament Library Building.

In addition to the two refreshment rooms in the Parliament House, the Tea Board and the Coffee Board run their own stalls for the benefit of members. There are also stalls in Parliament House and Parliament House Annexe where milk products of the Delhi Milk Scheme are available.

There are two Publication Counters on the ground floor of the Parliament House, one each for the members of the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha, where publications intended for distribution to the members can be had by them. Stationery, greeting cards, etc. are also got printed and sold at these counters.

The periodicals namely, Saransh Seva (Quarterly); Samachar Manjusha (Monthly); Sarkari Upakram: Samachar Aur Abhimat Sar (Monthly), brought out earlier, were discontinued from January 2003 as per the decision taken in the third sitting of Library Committee (2002-2003) held on Thursday, 5 December 2002.

The branches of the State Bank of India at the Parliament House as well as the Parliament House Annexe provide banking facilities. Besides providing Safe Deposit Lockers, the Bank has installed two ATMs in Annexe i.e. one at Old Reception Office, another in Basement near Lift No. 1 & 2. One ATM is available for members and staff of Parliament in Library Building. Internet Banking as well as Loan facility is also being provided by both the Branches of SBI for the convenience of the members. Two sub-Post Offices—one in Parliament House and the other in Parliament House Annexe—function throughout the year. The Railway and Air Booking Offices of the Indian Airlines function all the year round in the Parliament House. Arrangements for special vehicles on nominal payment basis have been made to carry members from their residences to the Parliament House and back, both during the session and inter-session periods.

A full-fledged liaison office of the New Delhi Municipal Corporation (NDMC) functions in Parliament House Annexe throughout the year to look into the complaints of the members with regard to meters installed at their residences and all other matters connected with the NDMC, including electricity and water bills of members. An LPG Service Counter of the oil industry in regard to supply of LPG and rendering timely service in respect of defective installation, etc. functions during session period at the Reception Office, Parliament House.

Lockers have been provided for members, both of the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha, one for each, in the outer lobbies of the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha, respectively. Members find these convenient for keeping their papers, books, etc.

In case a member intends to purchase a vehicle, he may do so through the Ministry of Industry which arrange for the same, on priority basis, directly from the manufacturers of the vehicle itself. Besides, the Ministry of Defence arrange to supply, on request of members, on cash payment, three vehicles, i.e. ambassador car, jeep and motorcycle from the surplus defence stock subject to availability.

Besides, an Income Tax Section is also set up by the Ministry of Finance (Department of Revenue) in the Parliament House Annexe throughout the year in order to assist members in filing their tax returns, etc.

During the period when the Parliament is in session, the traffic around the Parliament House and the Annexe is regulated to avoid congestion and noise. Members are also issued special motor car labels each year.

In order to acquaint members with the social, cultural and political life of the Capital city and also to enable them to carry on other activities, a club called the Constitution Club has been provided with modern facilities. The Club is located inside the Vithalbhai Patel House Complex, hardly a distance of two furlongs from the Parliament House. One of the biggest auditoriums in the Capital is also attached to the Club, besides a modern swimming pool. The auditorium called, the 'Mavalankar Auditorium' is named after Speaker, G.V. Mavalankar, who was the Speaker of the First and the Second Lok Sabha. The Club and the auditorium are also made available to all the parliamentary parties for their political activities. Apart from these, facilities for indoor and outdoor games such as badminton, etc. are provided in the Club premises. Talks, discussions and other cultural activities are organised on suitable occasions under the auspices of the Club management.

In addition to the main Club, there are two Community Centres, well equipped with facilities for indoor games, one each in the North Avenue and the South Avenue, where the majority of members reside.

In 1997, the Committee of Privileges (11 LS) among various other things also considered the facilities aspect of the members and felt that facilities provided to the members of Parliament in India compared too unfavourably with those provided to their counterparts in some other Parliaments. The Committee in their Report on 'Ethics, Standards in Public Life, Privileges, Facilities to Members and other Related Matters' made certain recommendations with respect to provision of certain additional facilities to members.

Members of Parliament Local Area Development Scheme (MPLADS)

A Members of Parliament Local Area Development Scheme (MPLADS) was introduced by Government of India with effect from 23 December 1993 whereby each member could suggest to the District Collector developmental works to be done within his or her constituency. An amount of rupees one crore per year per member was allotted for the purpose. The amount was raised to rupees two crore on 23 December 1998.<sup>81</sup> Later the amount was raised to rupees five crore from the financial year 2011-12.

Detailed Guidelines on the Scheme, concept, implementation and monitoring of MPLADS were issued in 1994 by the Ministry of Rural Areas and Development. In October 1994, the entire work relating to release of funds for execution and monitoring of the Scheme was transferred to the Ministry of Planning and Programme Implementation (Department of Statistics and Programme Implementation), now Ministry of Statistics and Programme Implementation. The revised guidelines on the Scheme were issued in December 1994; February 1998; September 1999; April 2002; November 2005<sup>82</sup>; and August 2012.

An ad hoc Committee on the MPLADS (Lok Sabha) consisting of 23 members was constituted for the first time during Fourth Session of the Twelfth Lok Sabha to monitor the Scheme and to consider the complaints of members of Lok Sabha.<sup>83</sup> Presently, there are 24 members in this Committee.

III. Salaries, Allowances and other Entitlements of Ministers

The Salaries and Allowances to be paid to the members of the Union Council of Ministers are governed by the Salaries and Allowances of Ministers Act, 1952, as amended from time to time. According to the provisions of the Act, each Minister shall be entitled to receive a salary per mensem and an allowance for each day during the whole of his term as such Minister at the same rates as are specified in section 3 of the Salaries, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament Act, 1954 with respect to members of Parliament. Each Minister shall also be entitled to receive a constituency allowance at the same rate as is specified under section 8 of the said Act with respect to members of Parliament.

In addition to the salaries and allowances as provided under the Act, there shall be paid a sumptuary allowance to each Minister at specified rates<sup>84</sup>—viz.

- (a) the Prime Minister — three thousand rupees per mensem;
- (b) every other Minister who is a member of Cabinet — two thousand rupees per mensem;
- (c) Minister of State — two thousand rupees per mensem; and
- (d) Deputy Minister — six hundred rupees per mensem.

No person in receipt of a salary or allowance under the relevant Act shall be entitled to receive any sum out of funds provided by Parliament by way of salary or allowances in respect of his membership of either House of Parliament.

Travelling and Daily Allowances

A Minister is entitled to (a) travelling allowances for himself and the members of his family and for transport of his and his family's effects: (i) in respect of the journey to Delhi from his usual place of residence outside Delhi for assuming offices, and (ii) in respect of the journey from Delhi to his usual place of residence outside Delhi on relinquishing office; and (b) travelling and daily allowances in respect of tours undertaken by him in the discharge of his official duties, whether by sea, land or air. In addition to this, a Minister and any one member of his family<sup>85</sup> accompanying him are entitled to travelling allowance in respect of not more than twelve return journeys performed, during each year, within India, at the same rates at which travelling allowances are payable to such Minister under clause (b) of sub-section (1) in respect of towards referred to in that clause, subject to overall entitlement of fortyeight single journeys in each year.<sup>86</sup> Return journey in this respect means a journey from one place to another place and the return journey from such other place to the first mentioned place.

Housing Facilities

A Minister is entitled without payment of rent to the use of a furnished residence throughout his term of office and for a period of one month immediately thereafter

84. The Salaries and Allowances of Ministers Act, 1952, Act 76 of 1985 w.e.f. 26-12-1985, section 51.

85. "Family" means a Minister's wife residing with him and legitimate children and step children residing with and wholly dependent on him. Not more than one wife is included in a family for the purpose of these rules. If the Minister is a married woman, "family" will include her husband residing with and wholly dependent upon her.

86. Op. cit.

and no charge will fall on the Minister personally in respect of the maintenance of such residence<sup>87</sup>.

In the event of the death of the Minister, his family shall be entitled to the use of the furnished residence occupied by the Minister and the maintenance thereof, without payment, for one month immediately after his death; and for a further period of one month on payment of rent at such rates as may be prescribed by rules made in this behalf by the Central Government and also charges in respect of electricity and water consumed in that residence during such further period.

Medical Facilities

A Minister and the members of his family are entitled to free of charge accommodation in hospitals maintained by the Government and also to medical treatment.

Advance for the Purchase of Conveyance

There may be paid to any Minister by way of a repayable advance such<sup>88</sup> sum of money as may be determined by rules made in this behalf for the purchase of a motor car in order that he may be able to discharge, conveniently and efficiently, the duties of his office.

IV. Abbreviations for Members of Parliament

Members can use the abbreviation 'M.P.' after their names.

In 1952, a mild dissatisfaction was expressed by some members of the Rajya Sabha for appending 'M.C.' after their names. As both the Houses together formed Parliament, a reference was made by Speaker Mavalankar to the Joint Committee on Payment of Salaries and Allowances to make its recommendation about the abbreviations that could be used by members of the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha. The Committee recommended that members of both the Houses should be called members of Parliament or M.P.s<sup>89</sup>.

CHAPTER XIV

Recognition of Political Parties in Parliament

Party system is an integral part of any system of democratic governance more so, in a parliamentary form of government. Barring a few members who may not be attached to any party, most members of Parliament have a dual capacity: they represent a constituency and a party. There is always a party or coalition of parties in power and party or parties in Opposition.

In the Central Legislative Assembly, there was nothing correspond to party system as the expression is understood in a parliamentary democracy where the party in power is responsible to the House. The parties were to be found only in Opposition: there was no party in power as such.

Though the Moderates were returned to the first Assembly in 'prepondering numbers', they did not form any 'permanent party division'<sup>1</sup>. After the second elections in 1923, a 'compact, disciplined and well-organized' Swarajist Party was formed in the Assembly by two Congressmen, C.R. Dass and Motilal Nehru. The Swarajists and the Independent Group, however, did not include between them the whole of the elected members. It was in 1927 that there developed in the third Assembly, for the first time, something like the distribution of the greater part of the elected members into organized groups<sup>2</sup>. The Swarajists, the Independents<sup>3</sup>, the Nationalists<sup>4</sup>, the Central Moslem Party<sup>5</sup>, and the European Group.

In 1932, in obedience to the Congress mandate, the Swarajist Party boycotted the Legislature. In 1934, however, the Party revised its Constitution under which it was to act as a part of the Congress organization except in its internal administration, in regard to which it had a free hand<sup>6</sup>.

1. Simon Report, pp. 250 and 257. Political opinion at that time was divided into Moderates and Extremists. To the latter, the Montague-Chelmsford Reforms were wholly unacceptable: they did not, therefore, contest the elections.
  2. Ibid., p. 257.
  3. The Independent Party was led by M.A. Jinnah.
  4. The Nationalist Party was a new party under an old name, consisting of the Responsive Co-operators and the Hindu Mahasabhaitees, led by M.R. Jayakar and N.C. Kelkar-Simon Report, pp. 256-57.
  5. The Central Moslem Party functioned under the leadership of Sir Zulfikar Ali Khan.
  6. See Pattabhi Sitaramayya, History of the Indian National Congress, 1935, Vol. 1, pp. 570-71.

The year 1934 was significant not only because of the resuscitation of the old Swarajist Party but also for the formation of the new Congress National Party<sup>7</sup>. In spite of the wide area from which its members were drawn representing varying shades of interests, the Congress Party in the Assembly acted like a machine once the party decision on a question had been taken and working with consummate skill, it functioned as an effective parliamentary Opposition<sup>8</sup>.

Members of the Congress Party boycotted the proceedings of the Central Assembly in 1939 in response to a resolution passed by the Working Committee of the Congress Party. It was only in 1943 that the Congress members returned to their seats in the Assembly.

An important event in the evolution of the party system in the Central Legislature was an understanding between the Congress and the Muslim League in 1945, born out of a common dislike for the Government. With the lobby balance tilting in favour of the Opposition, the Government suffered a series of defeats at the hands of the Congress-League combination<sup>9</sup>.

When the election, so long delayed owing to the War, were held in 1945, the newly elected Legislature was a transformed Assembly altogether and party alignments became clearer and well-defined. The Opposition had the majority and could and did defeat the Government on many issues, so long as the Congress and the Muslim League could combine.

It was only when India became independent that there came into being the parliamentary form of Government with the Cabinet responsible to the Legislature, a party in power and a number of political groups in Opposition.

One of the characteristic features of Indian polity is the predominance of political pluralism. A large number of political parties participate in the elections to the Lok Sabha and the State Legislatures. The strength of the political parties which secured representation in the Lok Sabha after each General Election, from the First to the Fifteenth is given in Table I.

7. This party was formed at a Conference of Congressmen and others at Calcutta in August 1934 under the leadership of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya with the object inter alia of carrying on agitation against the Communal Award – Simon Report, p. 577.

8. Indian Review, June 1935, p. 409.

9. In the course of 43 sittings of the Budget Session (1945), the Opposition defeated the Government on 21 issues and caused a tie on another, only to be saved by the casting vote of the Chair. Against this, the Opposition lost only two divisions. On four items, inclusive of a Censure Motion, the Government did not press for a division and suffered defeat silently—Indian Year Book, 1945-46, p. 958.

Speaker Mavalankar once remarked that democracy will never grow on proper lines unless there are the fewest number of parties, possibly not more than two major parties which can almost balance each other as the Government and the Opposition<sup>34</sup>. During the First Lok Sabha, on requests from leaders of parties, the matter regarding recognition of Parliamentary Parties/Groups and allotment of seats was discussed by Speaker Mavalankar with leading members of the House. With a view to discouraging multiplication of parties and growth of splinter groups, he laid down general principles based on which recognition can be given to political parties for their parliamentary work in the Lok Sabha<sup>35</sup>. These principles were later embodied in the Directions from the Speaker.

Conditions of Recognition

The above principles as enunciated in the Directions by the Speaker provide that an association of members who propose to form a parliamentary party in the Lok Sabha must satisfy the following requisite conditions for recognition<sup>36</sup>—

- (i) They should have a distinct ideology and programme of work whether in the political, economic or social field, which was announced by them at the time of General Elections and on which they have been returned to the House. They should form a homogenous unit capable of developing into a well knit entity;
- (ii) They should have an organisation, both inside and outside the House, which is in touch with public opinion on all important issues before the country; and

34. G.V. Mavalankar, Speeches and Writings, p. 47.

35. History of Directions.

36. See Dir. 121(i).

- (iii) They should at least be able to command a strength which would enable them to keep the House, i.e. their number should not be less than the quorum fixed to constitute a sitting of the House, which is one-tenth of the total membership<sup>37</sup>.

It is further provided that a political party, having representation in the Lok Sabha, which satisfies the first two conditions but fails to command the required minimum strength, viz. one-tenth of the total membership of the House, is recognized as a parliamentary group, provided its membership is at least thirty<sup>38</sup>.

In the First Lok Sabha, the Communist Party was recognized as a parliamentary group in the House. In August 1954, however, the Group lost recognition when its membership dropped to 29. In the Second Lok Sabha, no group of members was recognised as a parliamentary group in the House. The Communist Party, consisting of 34 members, was recognized in the Third Lok Sabha as a parliamentary group in the House. The Group, however, lost its recognition in September 1964 due to split in the Communist Party of India as a result of which the Group in the House also split into two. In the Fourth Lok Sabha, as constituted after the General Elections in 1967, the Swatantra Party (45 members) and the Jan Sangh (31 members) were recognised as parliamentary groups. After the Congress split in November 1969, certain members dissociating themselves with the ruling Congress Party, formed a separate party called the Congress Party (Opposition). Since it had a strength of 60 members in the House and satisfied all the conditions prescribed for recognition as a parliamentary party, it was for the first time recognised as an Opposition Party and its leader, Dr. Ram Subhag Singh, was recognised as the Leader of the Opposition. The recognition lasted till the dissolution of the Lok Sabha in December 1970<sup>39</sup>. In the General Elections held in 1971, the ruling Congress Party received 348 seats in a House of 515 and none of the Opposition parties secured the minimum strength needed for recognition. In the Fifth Lok Sabha, therefore, no group of members was recognised as a parliamentary group in the House.

37. The minimum number of members required to form a party in the former Central Legislative Assembly (which consisted of 141 members from 1937 to 1945) was ten. In 1941, it was reduced by Speaker Abdur Rahim, after consulting leaders of various parties, to nine in order to afford recognition as a party to the European Group whose membership had been reduced from ten to nine.

38. Dir. 121(ii).

In the Central Legislative Assembly, the number of members for recognition as a group was prescribed by Speaker Mavalankar as ten. This number has since been raised to 30 but so far as selection of speakers for participation in the deliberations of the House is concerned, groups whose membership is ten or more are given time to speak during various discussions.

L.S. Deb., 16-3-1964, cc. 5595-96

In 1971, in order to accommodate members to speak in a balanced way, the Speaker grouped the parties into major parties (i.e. parties with more than 15 members), medium parties, and small parties (i.e. parties with only 3 or 4 members)—L.S. Deb., 31-3-1971.

39. Bn. Part I, 17-12-1969, L.S. Deb., 17-12-1969, cc. 366-67.

After the General Elections held in 1977, the Janata Party with 306 seats in the House emerged as the Ruling Party and the erstwhile ruling Congress Party with 153 seats as the Opposition Party. Since both the Janata and the Congress Parties satisfied all the conditions for recognition as parliamentary parties, they were recognised as such. No group of members fulfilled the requisite conditions for recognition as a parliamentary group in the Sixth Lok Sabha.

Consequent upon the split in the Congress Party on 9 March 1978 into Congress and Congress (I), Congress Party (I) having a strength of 58 members was recognised as parliamentary party. Similarly, after the split in the Janata Party into Janata and Janata (S), Janata Party (S) having a strength of 68 members was recognised as parliamentary party with effect from 16 July 1979.

In the Seventh Lok Sabha, only Congress (I) Party was recognised as a parliamentary party. The Janata Party (S), consisting of 41 members, Communist Party of India (M) consisting of 35 members and Janata Party consisting of 31 members were recognised as parliamentary groups in the House. In March 1980, Janata Group lost its recognition as a parliamentary group due to disassociation of three members from the Group and the consequent reduction of their strength from 31 to 28 members.

In the Eighth Lok Sabha constituted on 31 December 1984, Congress (I) Party with 398 members emerged as the largest party and was recognised as a parliamentary party. Telugu Desam consisting of 30 members was recognised as a parliamentary group. No other group of members fulfilled the requisite conditions for recognition as a parliamentary group in the Lok Sabha. However, on 3 March 1988, Telugu Desam Group also lost its recognition as a parliamentary group due to resignation of one of its members from the Lok Sabha resulting in the reduction of their strength from 30 to 29 members.

In the Ninth Lok Sabha, constituted on 2 December 1989, Congress (I) consisting of 194 members, Janata Dal consisting of 141 members and Bharatiya Janata Party consisting of 86 members—were recognised as parliamentary parties. Communist Party of India (M) consisting of 32 members was recognised as a parliamentary group in the House.

In the Tenth Lok Sabha, constituted on 20 June 1991, Congress (I) consisting of 224 members, Bharatiya Janata Party consisting of 119 members and Janata Dal consisting of 51 members were recognised as parliamentary parties. Communist Party of India (M) consisting of 35 members was recognised as a parliamentary group in the House.

However, in certain cases, even where the membership of an association of members is less than 30, under the orders of the Speaker, it was given the nomenclature of a Group for the sake of convenience without according formal recognition as such<sup>40</sup>.

40. (i) In the First Lok Sabha, associations of members accorded such a nomenclature were:

For functional purposes in the House, it had been the practice to accord the nomenclature of parliamentary party or group to the constituent groups forming a party, having a common programme of parliamentary work, a common organisation,

- (ii) In the Second Lok Sabha, members of Communist Party, Praja Socialist Party, Socialist Party, Scheduled Caste Federation (later the name was changed to Republican Group), Swatantra Party, Ganatantra Parishad, Bharatiya Jan Sangh, Hindu Mahasabha and D.M.K. were given the nomenclature of a Group.
- (iii) In the Third Lok Sabha, in addition to those mentioned at (ii) above, Muslim League and Nirdaliya Dal were also given this nomenclature.
- (iv) In the Fourth Lok Sabha, members of Dravida Munnetra Kazhagham, Communist Party of India, Samyukta Socialist Party, Communist Party of India (Marxist), Praja Socialist Party, Progressive Group, Independent Parliamentary Group and Nirdaliya Sangathan were given the nomenclature of a Group.
- (v) In the Fifth Lok Sabha, members of Communist Party of India (Marxist), Communist Party of India, Dravida Munnetra Kazhagham, Jan Sangh and Congress Party (Opposition) were given the nomenclature of a Group.
- (vi) In the Sixth Lok Sabha, members of Communist Party of India (Marxist) and All India Anna Dravida Munnetra Kazhagham were given the nomenclature of a Group.
- (vii) In the Seventh Lok Sabha, members of Janata (S), Communist Party of India (Marxist), Janata and Dravida Munnetra Kazhagham were given the nomenclature of a Group.
- (viii) In the Eighth Lok Sabha, members of Telugu Desam and CPI(M) were given the nomenclature of a Group.
- (ix) In the Ninth Lok Sabha, members of Communist Party of India (Marxist) were given the nomenclature of a Group.
- (x) In the Tenth Lok Sabha, members of the Communist Party of India (Marxist) were given the nomenclature of a Group.

In the list of members of the Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Lok Sabha, party affiliation of members belonging to a group having a strength of less than 15 (i.e. less than half of the members required for recognition as a group) and upto 2 was shown as "Other party". In case where there was only one member belonging to a party, he was treated as an unattached member. The party affiliation of such members and of independents was shown as "Unattached".

The party affiliation of members belonging to groups having strength of 15 and above, was shown by the name of the Group to which they belonged.

In the Eighth Lok Sabha, the practice of showing 'independents' and 'lone members of legislature parties' as 'Unattached' was done away with consequent on the coming into force of the Constitution (Fifty-second Amendment) Act, 1985, which provides that "an elected member of a House shall be deemed to belong to the political party, if any, by which he was set up as a candidate for election as such member". Accordingly, only those members who contested and won the election as independent candidates were shown as independents in the List of Members with effect from 7 August 1987. Nominated members were shown as such (instead of being clubbed with unattached members). Likewise, lone members elected on party tickets were shown as belonging to the respective parties to which they belonged. Only those members who were elected to the House on a party ticket but were subsequently expelled from the party were treated and shown as "Unattached" in the List of Members.

a common leader and a Whip to speak on their behalf on the floor of the House. This condition was made applicable equally to both the Government and the Opposition parties and no distinction was made between a Government Party consisting of various constituent groups and an Opposition party similarly formed.

Members of different parties having different ideologies and unattached members who form an ad hoc group with distinctive designation were also termed as such for the purpose of functioning in the House<sup>41</sup>.

The Directions also provided that the recognition of an association of members as a parliamentary party or group, for the purpose of functioning in the House, would be accorded only by the Speaker and his decision in the matter would be final<sup>42</sup>. The Speaker, on his own initiative, did not accord this recognition but a formal request had to be made to him in this regard by the members concerned<sup>43</sup>. In submitting a

The issue was examined afresh during the Tenth Lok Sabha. It was decided not to treat the expellees as unattached members and instead, seat them separately in the Lok Sabha outside the block of seats of the parties from which they had been expelled without any change in the party affiliations in the party position in the Lok Sabha and other records. This is now the prevailing practice. As a matter of fact, this practice has come to be established consequent upon the following observation made by Speaker (Shivraj V. Patil), Tenth Lok Sabha regarding expulsion from political parties and status of expelled members, in his decision in the Janata Dal case under the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution given on 1 June 1993.

"In this respect, Explanation (a) to para 2(1) is relevant:

(a) an elected member of a House shall be deemed to belong to the political party, if any, by which he was set up as a candidate for election as such member.

This is a constitutional status given to the member which cannot be taken away from him by expulsion." [Bn. Pt. II, dated 1-6-1993].

41. Independent Parliamentary Group in the First, Second and Third Lok Sabha; United Progressive Parliamentary Group in the Second and Third Lok Sabha.

On 24 November 1967, in the Fourth Lok Sabha, the Speaker announced that in future members who had been elected to the Lok Sabha as independents would continue to be unattached and no group formed by them would be recognised. Accordingly, members of independent Parliamentary Group, Progressive Group and Niradaliya Sangathan were, thereafter, treated as unattached members. L.S. Deb., 24-11-1967, c. 2685.

The practice of giving recognition to groups formed by independent members was revived during the Eighth Session of the Fourth Lok Sabha and United Independent Parliamentary Group (UPIG) and BKD were recognised for the purpose of selection of speakers in debates and allotment of contiguous seats. Similar recognition was given to the UPIG in the Fifth Lok Sabha.

In the Eleventh Lok Sabha, a member (G.G. Swell) intimated the Speaker about formation of an 'United Parliamentary Group' comprising of independent members and members belonging to single member parties and made a request for accord of recognition to this Group. After examination of the matter in the light of provisions in the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution and prevalent position in the Lok Sabha vis-a-vis Parliamentary Parties and Groups, it was decided that it would not be feasible to accede to G.G. Swell's request. The member was accordingly informed. (F. No. 28/1/96/T).

42. Dir. 120.

43. In the Second Lok Sabha, the Communist Party which consisted of 30 members and conformed to the other conditions laid down in this regard was not formally recognized as a group as no formal request for its recognition had been made to the Speaker.

written communication to him, the association of members in question had to show that they satisfied all the conditions formulated for the purpose of recognition either as a Party or a Group. The signatures of all the members concerned had to be appended to the request<sup>44</sup>.

Position after coming into force of the Tenth Schedule

After the coming into force of the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution with effect from 3 March 1985, and the Representation of People (Amendment) Act, 1988 (which introduced section 29A providing for compulsory registration of all political parties), the concept of recognition of parliamentary parties/groups has materially changed vis a vis the recognition of parliamentary party/group by the Speaker on the basis of the numerical strength of a party in the House.

For the purpose of the Tenth Schedule, all the members of the House belonging to a particular political party would be deemed to belong to the 'Legislature Party' of that party in the House irrespective of the numerical strength of that 'Legislature Party'. Even a lone member of a political party in the House would, therefore, have a Legislature Party by that name. However, those members who contested and won elections to the Lok Sabha as independent candidates and those who have been nominated are shown as per their status, i.e. independent or nominated members, as the case may be.

The provisions of Directions relating to recognition by the Speaker to parliamentary parties/groups accordingly required interpretation from entirely a different point of view. Ever since the coming into force of the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution, the application of Directions is now mainly limited to their functional utility, viz. selection of speakers in the House from the Parties/Groups; considering nominations to various parliamentary committees; contiguous allotment of seats in the House; supply of parliamentary papers, etc.

Nevertheless, recognition to political parties/groups, albeit in their functional context in the House, continued till mid of the Tenth Lok Sabha.

However, during the deliberations in the Janata Dal case under the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution, the provisions of the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution came in for in-depth scrutiny.

In the context of the breakaway groups that emerged due to splits in the Legislature Parties in the Lok Sabha, a view<sup>45</sup> came to be established that accord of

44. In the absence of signature of any member, the leader of the Group is asked to obtain the same: The onus of confirmation of membership rests on the leader of the Party or Group.

There were exceptions to this procedure when in the case of 'Union of Socialists and Progressives', which was formed in 1952, individual members were addressed by the Secretariat to confirm their membership of the Group instead of the leader being asked to obtain it. Likewise, in the Second Lok Sabha, four members of the Independent Parliamentary Group were asked to confirm their membership of the Group in writing.

45. During the Tenth Lok Sabha, in the Samata Party case, the breakway group of members which came into existence consequent upon a split in the Janata Dal in 1994 was not accorded any formal recognition.

recognition to political parties came within the sole domain of the Election Commission of India.

Consequently, from the Eleventh Lok Sabha onwards, while Legislature Parties continue to enjoy certain functional facilities on the basis of their numerical strength in the House, the practice of according recognition by the Speaker in terms of Directions 120 and 121 was done away with.

Facilities to Legislature Parties

Though the recognition of parliamentary parties and groups has now been done away with, the old norms are still being followed for granting certain facilities by the Speaker to the Legislature Parties on the basis of their numerical strength. A parliamentary party carries with it certain facilities which the Speaker may grant to that party. To a parliamentary group, he may grant such of these facilities as he may deem fit or feasible. An association of members may also be granted some facilities if such a course, in the opinion of the Speaker, facilitates the conduct of business in the House. In all cases, the Speaker's decision to grant facilities is final<sup>46</sup>.

A Parliamentary Party is generally granted the following facilities<sup>47</sup>.

- (i) Allotment of blocks of seats in the House in proportion to the strength of the party and the total number of seats available in the Chamber<sup>48</sup>.
- (ii) Allotment of a furnished room with telephone and internet facility in the Parliament House for the purpose of parliamentary work of the party:

Up to the Fifth Lok Sabha, the Congress Party, which was the party in power, was allotted two furnished rooms in the Parliament House. Opposition 'Groups' were provided with a furnished room and a few lounges in the Lobby of the Central Hall. In the Sixth Lok Sabha, four furnished rooms in the Parliament House were provided each to the Janata Party which was the party in power, and to the Congress Party which was in the Opposition. A furnished room was also allotted to AIADMK 'Group'. In the Seventh Lok Sabha, the Congress Party, which was the party in power, was provided four rooms. All other political parties with a strength of at least eight members in both the Houses were allotted a furnished room each. The same facility continued in the Eighth, the Ninth, the Tenth, the Eleventh, the Twelfth, the Thirteenth, the Fourteenth Lok Sabha as well as the Fifteenth Lok Sabha. Stenographic assistance is rendered to members by the Secretariat and a telephone is also provided for them.

In the Eleventh Lok Sabha, the breakway groups of Samajwadi Party (Rashtriya) and Rashtriya Janata Dal came into being consequent upon splits in the Samata Party and the Janata Party, respectively; no formal recognition was accorded to these Groups by the Speaker—L.S. Deb., 12-9-1996 and F. No. 46/4/97/T.

46. See Dir. 122 and 123.

47. Dir. 122.

48. For details regarding allotment of seats to members of Party or Groups, see Chapter XV—'Oath, Affirmation, Seating of Members in the House', under sub-heading Seating of Members.

- (iii) Allotment of Committee rooms or other available accommodation for holding party meetings.

On written requests from parties or groups, the Central Hall and Committee rooms are made available to them for holding party meetings connected with parliamentary work. Each request is examined on its merits.

The following kinds of requests have been complied with:

For holding a meeting of members to consider the question of forming a new party or group in Parliament.

For holding a meeting of a party or group in Parliament.

For holding meetings of members from certain States to discuss cooperation of parliamentarians in resolving certain national problems.

For holding meetings of members and Ministers from a particular State to consider problems relating to that State.

For holding a meeting of members drawn from all parties.

No standing allotment of a Committee Room is, however, made to any party or group<sup>49</sup>.

- (iv) Supply of Parliamentary or Government papers or publications which the Speaker may determine from time to time.

Parliamentary papers or publications are supplied to a party or group on specific request made by them to the Speaker in that behalf.

- (v) Nomination to a Parliamentary Committee in proportion to the strength of the Party.

With a view to nominating members on parliamentary committees, the Leaders of the parties or groups in the House, are requested to propose the names of members of their respective party/group for consideration of the Speaker. These names are obtained without prejudice to the Speaker's absolute discretion not to nominate members as recommended by Leaders. Normally, the recommendations made by the party or group concerned are accepted by the Speaker<sup>50</sup> and the representation of all parties and groups on a Committee where members are to be nominated, is more or less in proportion to their respective strength in the House<sup>51</sup>. In the case of a casual vacancy in a Committee, other than Departmentally Related Standing Committees, only the group to which the outgoing member belonged is consulted.

49. On 17 June 1952, the Congress Party requested that, as a standing arrangement, a particular room might be allotted to them on every Friday during the sessions for holding meetings of the General Council of the Party. The request was not acceded to.

50. In 1988 (Eighth Lok Sabha), while nominating members to BAC and Committee of Privileges, Speaker interchanged the nominees of Janata Party in the Lok Sabha to these Committees.

51. On 8 August 1960, the Deputy Leader of Swatantra Group, in a letter addressed to the Speaker, requested inter alia that his Group might be given representation on certain other parliamentary committees as well. While rejecting the request, the member was informed that the representation of all parties and groups on parliamentary committees (nominated by the Speaker) as a whole was more or less in proportion to their respective strength in the House.

Apart from the parliamentary committees, there are also Committees, Councils, Boards, etc. generally called Government Committees, which are constituted by the Government. Members of either House are also represented on them. These committees neither work under the direction of the Speaker nor present their reports to the House or the Speaker. Members of the House are, however, nominated to these Government Committees by the Speaker in consultation with the Leaders of parties and groups in the Lok Sabha on request from the Minister concerned in accordance with the provisions contained in the Government notifications, resolutions, etc. regarding the composition and functions of such committees, councils, boards, etc.

Members of the Lok Sabha who are to form part of a delegation going abroad are selected by the Speaker in consultation with the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs and the Leaders of the Opposition Parties and Groups in the Lok Sabha. While making selection of members for inclusion in the delegation, the Speaker takes into consideration the party affiliations of the member, his suitability vis-a-vis the country to be visited and the object of the visit, etc. Since all the members cannot be sent abroad at the same time, the Speaker selects them for inclusion in the delegation in rotation<sup>52</sup>.

- (v) Submission to the Speaker of a panel of names for selection of members to be called to speak in debates.

Leaders of Parties and Groups are usually given preference in the selection of speakers to participate in the deliberations of the House and are generally given more time than is given to other members.

- (vi) Consultation, where necessary, in the matter of allocation of time to various Government legislative and financial business or any other matter coming up before the House.

The Speaker nominates members of political parties in Lok Sabha to the Business Advisory which allots time to various items of government legislative and financial business to be transacted by the House. The strength of the Committee is limited to fifteen members. As the number of political parties in Lok Sabha has considerably increased over the years, in order to ensure the representative character of the Committee, a convention has evolved where-under leaders of parties not represented on the Committee are invited as Special Invitees to the sittings of the Committee. During the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Lok Sabha, leaders of parties having a strength of five and above, which were not represented on the Business Advisory Committee were invited to the meetings of the Committee as Special Invitees.

52. Members of Parliament are also included in the delegations to the UN. General Assembly sessions, where they function as representatives, alternate representatives as well as parliamentary advisers. Selection is made at the discretion of the Government of India and many factors are taken into account, including the consideration that the chosen delegates are in agreement with the policies of the Government, their ability to project these policies properly and to support them fully in the General Assembly, etc.—S.Q. 1263, L.S. Deb., 17-4-1968; U.S.Q. 1405; 26-11-1969; U.S.Q. 3541, 10-12-1969.

Groups Representatives of Political Parties/Groups may also be consulted on a matter of procedure in the House<sup>53</sup>.

- (vii) Allotment of a seat in the front row in the Central Hall on the occasion of the President's Address and other important functions.

Leaders of all recognised Opposition Parties and Groups and leaders of Parties having strength of eight members in Lok Sabha and five members in Rajya Sabha are allotted seats in the front rows on the occasion of the President's Address to both the Houses of Parliament assembled together and during similar parliamentary functions in the Central Hall. The principle followed in allotment of these seats is that one seat is allotted to the leader of a party/group having the maximum strength in the Lok Sabha and the next seat is allotted to the leader of party/group having the maximum strength in the Rajya Sabha and so on. However, depending upon the circumstances, the matter is reviewed from time to time and seats are reserved in the front row even for the leaders of smaller Groups having strength less than that mentioned above.

In addition, certain other facilities are provided, e.g. library facilities to the parties and groups. Residential accommodation is sometimes provided for leaders of groups from the general pool on the recommendation of the Leader of the House.

53. For instance, on 9 September 1958, the Speaker held a meeting with the representatives of various Opposition groups. After discussion, procedure relating to the moving of adjournment motions in the House was laid down.

On 21 April, 1962, the Speaker held an informal meeting with the Party and Group leaders or their representatives in connection with the procedure to be observed for the disposal of adjournment motions—see L.S. Deb., 23-4-1962, c. 475.

An informal meeting was held by the Speaker with the Party and Group leaders or their representatives on 7 November 1962, in connection with the simplification of procedure necessitated by the emergency caused by the Chinese aggression—L.S. Deb., 8-11-1962, cc. 89-92.

On 27 November and 11 December 1962 similar meetings of the Speaker with Party and Group leaders were held to discuss matters of procedure.

A meeting of the Speaker with Party and Group leaders was held on 6 September 1963, to discuss matters re: Calling Attention Notices, Short Notice Questions, Half-an-Hour Discussions, etc., and on 26 November 1963, to discuss the question of language of speeches in the House.

During the Fourth Lok Sabha (1967-70), fifteen meetings of the Speaker with Party and Group leaders were held to discuss various matters concerning the business of the House.

During the period between the Fifth and the Seventh Lok Sabha (1971 to 1984), seventy-one meetings of the Speaker with Party and Group leaders were held to discuss various important matters concerning the business of the House.

During the Eighth Lok Sabha, sixteen meetings of Speaker with Party and Group leaders were held to discuss various subjects concerning the business of the House.

During the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth and Thirteenth Lok Sabha, the Speaker held eighteen, seventy, twenty-two, ten and sixty meetings, respectively, with Party and Group leaders to discuss various subjects concerning the business of the House.

During the Fourteenth Lok Sabha, 151 meetings were held by the Speaker with Party and Group leaders out of which eighteen meetings were held on the eve of the Session.

During the Fifteenth Lok Sabha (upto end of September 2013), twenty-two meetings were held by the Speaker with Leaders of Political Parties/Groups out of which Fourteen Meetings were held on the eve of the Session to discuss various subjects concerning the business of the House.

CHAPTER XV

Oath, Affirmation and Seating of Members in the House

Oath or Affirmation

Every member, before taking his seat, is required to make and subscribe before the President or some person appointed in that behalf by him, an oath or affirmation according to the form set out for the purpose in the Third Schedule to the Constitution, as amended by the Constitution (Sixteenth Amendment) Act, 1963<sup>1</sup>. As per practice, Speaker Pro tem<sup>2</sup> presides over the first meeting of the newly-elected Lok Sabha.

For the sake of simplicity and formality of the proceedings and in order to conform to the normal parliamentary practice, the person appointed by the President as Speaker Pro tem is also designated by him as the person under article 99 before whom members may make and subscribe the oath or affirmation<sup>3</sup>.

The Speaker Pro tem to whom the oath is administered by the President himself in the Rashtrapati Bhawan signs the Roll of Members<sup>4</sup> in the House whereupon he is deemed to have taken seat in the House. He then calls other members to make and subscribe oath or affirmation in the House. On a member having made and subscribed the oath or affirmation, the Speaker Pro tem accords him permission to take his seat in the House after signing the Roll of Members kept on the Table.

Before members are called to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation on the first sitting of a newly constituted House, a book containing the list of members

1. Art. 99.

2. In accordance with the second proviso to article 94, the Speaker of the dissolved Lok Sabha vacates his office immediately before the first meeting of the new Lok Sabha constituted after the General Elections; there being thus neither Speaker nor Deputy Speaker, the President, under article 95(1), appoints a member to preside over the first sitting of the new Lok Sabha till the election of the Speaker. The member so appointed is known as the Speaker Pro tem. Also see, Chapter VII on 'Presiding Officers of Lok Sabha', ante.

3. Along with the Speaker Pro tem, two or three other senior members of the House are also appointed as the persons before any of whom newly-elected members may make and subscribe the oath or affirmation. See order issued by the Vice-President acting as the President on 24 March 1977-Gaz. Ex. (1-1), 24-3-1977. At the commencement of the first sitting of the new Lok Sabha, these other members are appointed by the Speaker Pro tem on the Panel of Chairmen to enable them to preside over the House in the absence of the Speaker Pro tem during a sitting—L.S. Deb., 25-3-1977, c. 3 and L.S. Bn. (II), 16-1-1980, para 30; 7-1-1985, para 41.

4. The Roll of Members is a Register which is kept on the Table during a session and remains in the custody of an officer of the House during the inter-session period.

elected to the Lok Sabha, presented to the Speaker by the Chief Election Commissioner, is laid on the Table by the Secretary-General<sup>5</sup>.

On the election of the Speaker, the Office of the Speaker Pro tem automatically ceases to exist. Such of the members as did not make and subscribe the oath or affirmation till the election of the Speaker do so before the Speaker, Deputy Speaker or a member of the Panel of Chairmen, presiding over the House<sup>6</sup>, as the case may be.

Making and subscribing the oath or affirmation is not a proceeding of the House if the person administering the oath is other than a Presiding Officer of the House and the oath is taken outside the House; but if the oath is administered at a sitting of the House, it forms part of the proceedings and the Speaker's decision over the manner in which the oath is to be administered is final.

The issue of the language in which oath is administered in a State Legislature can be raised in the Lok Sabha, as it affects the working of the Constitution. The matter is also justiciable, because the oath has to be administered under article 99 and a member can go to a court of law for any contravention of the constitutional provision<sup>7</sup>.

If a member sits or votes in the House without making and subscribing the oath or affirmation, he is liable in respect of each day on which he so sits or votes to a penalty of five hundred rupees to be recovered as a debt due to the Union<sup>8</sup>.

As soon as may be after the result of an election has been declared, the Returning Officer reports the result to the Union Government, the Election Commission and the Secretary-General of the Lok Sabha<sup>9</sup>. After the declaration of the result, the Returning Officer also grants to the successful candidate a certificate of election<sup>10</sup> and obtains from him an acknowledgement of its receipt duly signed by him and sends the acknowledgement by registered post to the Secretary-General<sup>11</sup>.

Members returned in by-elections make and subscribe oath or affirmation before the Speaker, Deputy Speaker, or a member of the Panel of Chairmen.

This provision was made on 13 August 1958, vide Notfn. No. G.S.R. 700A of the same date, at the instance of the Lok Sabha Secretariat as a safeguard against impersonation.

On 16 July 1957, a person posing as an elected member, made an oath, signed the Roll of Members and took his seat in the House. As soon as it was discovered that the person had not been duly elected, his signature was expunged from the Roll of Members. No action was, however,

In the case of a member nominated by the President, the Ministry of Law issues to the member concerned a letter of nomination for being presented at the Table of the House at the time of making and subscribing the oath or affirmation.

Sufficiently in advance of the date fixed for taking of oath, members are requested to bring without fail the certificate of their election granted to them by the Returning Officer when they come to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation and take seat in the House and to contact an officer of the House<sup>12</sup>. When certificates are shown by members to an officer of the House, he, where necessary, verifies the signature of the member with his signature in the acknowledgement received from the Returning Officer. After verifying the identity of the member-elect, the officer concerned signs on the back of the certificate in token of such verification and returns the certificate to the member who is advised to bring it with him when he comes to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation. Before making and subscribing an oath or affirmation and taking their seats in the House, members are required to deposit with the Secretary-General their election certificates or, as the case may be, certified copy of the notification nominating them as members<sup>13</sup>. The acknowledgements are also kept at the Table for the purpose of verification, if necessary.

Rights of Members Prior to Making Oath or Affirmation

A person becomes a member of the House from the date on which he is declared elected by the Returning Officer<sup>14</sup> but he is not entitled to sit and vote in the House until he has made and subscribed the prescribed oath or affirmation and taken his seat in the House. He is, however, entitled to receive his salary as a member<sup>15</sup> from the date of publication of the notification of the Election Commission constituting the taken against that person as the Medical Board had reported that the person was of an unsound mind, his being a case of schizophrenic reaction, a type of insanity. To prevent the possibility of such an incident thing happening in future, the Rules Committee were of the view (vide Third Report of Rules Committee laid on the Table on 30 April 1958) that members should present a formal return of election from the Returning Officer so as to eliminate the danger of impersonation. The Ministry of Law accordingly made the provision in the Representation of the People (Conduct of Elections and Election Petitions) Rules, 1956.

12. A paragraph to this effect is published in the Bulletin. Members are asked therein to intimate by a specified date whether they will take oath or make the affirmation and the language in which they will do so. See for instance, Bn.(II), 24-3-1977, para 4.
13. Rule 4(2) of the Members of Lok Sabha (Disqualification on Ground of Defection) Rules, 1985.

Prior to the coming into force of the Constitution (Fifty-second Amendment) Act, 1985, the procedure followed for verification of certificates of election of members was that before making and subscribing the oath or affirmation, members, excepting those whose identity was well-known to the officers at the Table, were required to show their certificates of election. In case a member is not able to produce the certificate at the time, he was permitted to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation on the basis of acknowledgement received by the Secretary-General from the Returning Officer, if he had been a member of the previous House; and on being introduced by another sitting member and on verification of his signature in the aforesaid acknowledgement if he had been returned for the first time.

House<sup>16</sup>. He is also entitled to other rights of a member. He can be elected to the Office of the Speaker or Deputy Speaker<sup>17</sup> or nominated and elected as a member of a Select or other Committee of the House but he cannot function as a member of such Committee until he has made and subscribed the oath or affirmation and taken seat in the House<sup>18</sup>.

He can also attend the Address by the President to the members of both Houses of Parliament<sup>19</sup>.

A member who has not taken seat in the House can give notice of a question or a resolution and these can be admitted but neither he nor any other member on his behalf is entitled to ask the question or move the resolution. Speaker Whyte observed in 1924<sup>20</sup>:

A member who has not taken the oath of the office cannot discharge his functions on the floor of this House...As a matter of convenience, I have consented to receive notices of questions and resolutions before the oath was taken merely in order that the stage of admission might be gone through before business opened here. But when it comes to the asking of questions or the performance of any other function on the floor of this House, that cannot be done until the oath is taken.

A member who has not made and subscribed the oath or affirmation or taken seat in the House is entitled to ask for leave of absence from the sittings of the House in order to guard against vacation of his seat<sup>21</sup>. A member can also resign his seat before making and subscribing the oath or affirmation and taking seat in the House<sup>22</sup>.

Members who have not already made and subscribed the oath or affirmation will be admitted to the Central Hall on the occasion of the Address on production of the certificate of election granted to them by the Returning Officer or introduction by a member who has made and subscribed the oath or affirmation or on production of summons.

Necessary modifications were made in the paragraphs on 1977, as the Bulletin was issued before the first sitting of the Sixth Lok Sabha—L.S., Bn. (II), 24-3-1977, para 24.

22. U. Muthiralinga Thevar and Ram Karan Joshi, who were elected to the Lok Sabha in the first general elections held in 1952, resigned their seats in the Lok Sabha with effect from 5 and 23 February 1952, respectively, before taking oath and taking seat in the House. R. Venkataraman, (elected to the Second Lok Sabha) M. V. Krishnappa (elected to the Third Lok Sabha), Vijaya Raje Scindia and G. Latchanna and also Jashvant Mehta (elected to the Fourth Lok Sabha) and Bhagirathi Gomango and Manmohan Tudu (elected to the Fifth Lok Sabha), Prem Singh Lalpura (elected to the Twelfth Lok Sabha) and Mulayam Singh Yadav (elected to the Fourteenth Lok Sabha) resigned their seats before making oath and taking their seats in the House.

Procedure regarding making and Subscribing Oath or Affirmation

The first sitting of a newly elected House is usually devoted to oath or affirmation by members. On that day, the members assemble in the House but take their seats in the House only after making and subscribing the oath or affirmation.

A convention has developed that before the business commences, the Speaker Pro tem calls upon the members to stand in silence for two minutes to mark the solemnity of the occasion<sup>23</sup>. The Speaker Pro tem then signs the Roll of Members. He also announces the names of persons appointed by him on the Panel of Chairmen to preside in his absence<sup>24</sup>.

Members make and subscribe the oath or affirmation in a particular order. The names of members are called by the Secretary-General for the purpose of making and subscribing oath or affirmation. The Prime Minister is called first, followed by the other Ministers. After that, the names of members of the Panel of Chairmen are called. Thereafter, the names of other members are called State-wise<sup>25</sup>. The names of the members who are not able to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation are called again at the end.

Members make and subscribe the oath or affirmation in English or in any of the twenty-two languages specified in the Eighth Schedule to the Constitution<sup>26</sup>. The form of oath or affirmation given in the Third Schedule to the Constitution is adhered to in the case of the English version. Likewise, the forms used in the Third Schedule of the translations of the Constitution in various languages are adhered to, with some modification in certain cases<sup>27</sup>.

23. A few days before the first sitting, the Prime Minister is informed about the practice regarding observance of silence. The Speaker Pro tem, while calling upon members to stand in silence, makes the following observation:

“We meet today on a solemn occasion. A new House has been constituted under the Constitution charged with great and heavy responsibilities for the welfare of the country and our people. It is fit and proper that we all stand in silence for two minutes before we begin our proceedings.” L.S. Deb., 10-5-1957, c.1; See also L.S. Deb., 19-3-1971, c. 1; 25-3-1977, c. 1; 21.1.1980, c. 1; 15-1-1985, c. 1; 18-12-1989, c. 1; 9-7-1991, c. 1; 22-5-1996, c. 1; 23-3-1998, c. 1; 20-10-1999, c. 1; 2-6-2004, c. 1.; 1-6-2009, c.2.

On 10 May 1957, the Speaker Pro tem also made a reference to the centenary of the First War of Independence of 1857, which had coincided with the first sitting of the Second Lok Sabha.

24. In 1962, the Speaker Pro tem (Seth Govind Das) did not nominate the Panel of Chairmen.
25. In 1977, members of the Sixth Lok Sabha were called to make and subscribe oath or affirmation in the following order—
- (i) Prime Minister,
  - (ii) Leader of the Opposition,
  - (iii) Members of Panel of Chairmen, and
  - (iv) Other members State-wise.

L.S. Deb., 25-3-1977, c. 2.

26. Vide the Constitution (Ninety-Second Amendment) Act, 2003.
27. The form of oath/affirmation in Hindi was slightly amended by Speaker Mavalankar in 1952. The form of oath/affirmation in Urdu was amended by Maulana Abul Kalam Azad in 1952.

The oath or affirmation is made and subscribed by members individually in accordance with a set procedure. On the name of a member being called by the Secretary-General, the member proceeds from the place he is occupying to the right side of the Secretary-General's table, where a copy of the form of oath or affirmation, as the case may be, in the language in which the member desires to make the oath or affirmation, is handed to him. The member faces the Chair while making and subscribing the oath or affirmation<sup>28</sup> and then goes up to and shakes hands with the Speaker Pro tem who then gives the member permission to take his seat in the House. The member then passes behind the Chair to the other side of the Secretary-General's table, where he signs the Roll of Members and thereafter takes his seat in the House.

In the case of a member who is ill and is unable to move from his place, the oath or affirmation may be made by him at the place he is occupying in the House, if he so desires. In such a case, the officer at the Table takes the relevant oath or affirmation card to the member. After the oath or affirmation has been made by the member, the Roll of Members is given to him at his seat where he signs it<sup>29</sup>.

While making and subscribing the oath or affirmation in the House, members are required to read the same style of their name as given in the declaration regarding their election received from the Returning Officer.

In the case of Assamese, Kannada, Sanskrit and Odia, the version given in the Third Schedule in the translations of the Constitution in these languages is used.

In Gujarati, Bengali, Punjabi, Malayalam, Tamil and Telugu, the form follows versions different from those given in the translations of the Constitution in the respective languages.

The translated version of the form in Kashmiri (both in Devnagri and Persian scripts) was prepared by the Lok Sabha Secretariat.

When Sindhi was added to the languages specified in the Eighth Schedule to the Constitution, the translation of the form into Sindhi was got done by a member of the Rajya Sabha.

In the case of Konkani, Manipuri and Nepali, the Official Language Wing supplied copies of forms of oath/affirmation (of these three languages) as set out in the Third Schedule of the Constitution.

In the case of Bodo, Maithili, Santhali and Dogri, the Official Language Wing supplied copies of the forms of oath/affirmation.

28. On 25 March 1977, as a member could not read the oath form due to blindness, another member read out the oath which was repeated by the former.
29. Hari Saran Prasad Shrivastava who was unwell was allowed to take oath from his seat—L.A. Deb., 6-3-1940, p. 979.

Manno Lal Dwivedi from Uttar Pradesh, who was unwell, was allowed to take oath out of turn along with the members from Bihar. L.S. Deb., 16-4-1962, cc. 5-6.

Hifzul Rehman who was ill, was allowed to take oath out of turn and sign the Roll of Members at his seat, L.S. Deb., 16-4-1962, c. 3.

Jamilur Rehman who was ill was allowed to take oath from his seat and sign the Roll of Members at his seat. L.S. Deb., 13-3-1985, c. 1.

Bir Singh Mahato who had his leg fractured was brought in a wheel chair in the House and was allowed to take affirmation from the wheel chair he also signed Roll of Members from the wheel chair. L.S. Deb., 26.3.1998, c. 5.

A.B.A. Ghani Khan Choudhary, who was not well, took the oath from his seat, L.S. Deb., 3.6.2004, c.6.

Baliram Kashyap, whose health was not so good, took the oath from his seat, L.S. Deb., 3.6.2009, c.2.

The decision of the person before whom oath or affirmation is made as to whether the oath or affirmation has been properly made or not is final<sup>30</sup>.

Members who do not make and subscribe the oath or affirmation on the first day, do so on any subsequent day in the same session or a later session at the commencement of a sitting of the House. However, on request, a member has been allowed to take oath during the inter-session period<sup>31</sup>.

Where a person ceases to be a member as a result of an order of Court in an election petition and another is declared elected in his place and the latter takes his seat in the House, the former has to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation again, if the order declaring his election void is subsequently reversed by the higher Court. In such cases, the membership of the other member automatically stands cancelled.

A member elected to the Third Lok Sabha in the 1962 general elections had made and subscribed the oath or affirmation and taken his seat in the House. His election was held void by the Election Tribunal and in the same order another candidate was declared duly elected in his place, who consequently made and subscribed the oath and took his seat in the House on 7 September 1964.

On 19 December 1966, the Allahabad High Court set aside the order of the Election Tribunal. It was decided, in consultation with the Ministry of Law, that the member became a member de novo with effect from the date the order of the Tribunal was reversed by the High Court. He was, therefore, required to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation again but he could not do so because no further session of the House was held and the Lok Sabha was dissolved on 3 March 1967.

A member is not entitled to make any observation in the House before making and subscribing the oath or affirmation, signing the Roll of Members and taking his seat in the House<sup>32</sup>.

Oath or Affirmation by a Member Returned in a By-election

A member returned in a by-election during the inter-session period makes and subscribes the oath or affirmation in the House on the commencement of a session. Although a member may make and subscribe oath or affirmation under article 99 before the President or any person appointed in that behalf by him at any time outside the House, the practice in the Lok Sabha has been for members to do so in the House itself.

31. A member (Vijaya Raje Scindia) of the Twelfth Lok Sabha could not make/subscribe oath or affirmation during the First Session as she was ill.—Thereafter, she sought the permission of the Speaker to take oath in his Chamber since she had not fully recovered from her illness. Her request having been acceded to, necessary arrangements were made in the Speaker's Chamber. The member then took oath in Hindi and signed the Roll of Members in the Speaker's Chamber and that too, during an inter-session period, in presence of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs and some guests of the member.

As soon as the declaration regarding the election of a member in a by-election is received from the Returning Officer, the member is informed about the duration of the current session or the date of commencement of the next session as the case may be, and is asked to intimate the date on which he would like to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation. He is also requested to bring with him the certificate of his election and contact the officer at the Table through a sitting member at least an hour before the commencement of the sitting so that the necessary formalities may be completed before the sitting commences.

There have, however, been instances where the Speaker has granted permission to members to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation even when prior notice had not been given or the complete election papers had not been received<sup>33</sup>.

The oath or affirmation is made and subscribed by such a member immediately at the commencement of a sitting of the House<sup>34</sup>. This enables him to take part in the proceedings at the earliest opportunity. He can ask questions on the same day in case he has been elected during the inter-session period and has given notices of questions for the day. Even if he has not given notice of a question for the day, he can ask supplementaries on questions of other members.

If a member arrives after the sitting has commenced, he makes and subscribes the oath or affirmation at any convenient time during the sitting of the House as the Speaker may direct, but till then he is not allowed to sit in the House and is required to wait in the Lobby.

There have been several occasions when members were allowed by the Speaker to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation after the business of the day had been taken up<sup>35</sup>. But on certain other occasions the Speaker has not given such concession.

Seating of Members

Members sit in the House in such order as is determined by the Speaker<sup>36</sup>. All recognized Parties and Groups are allotted blocks of seats in proportion to the strength of the Party or Group and the total number of seats available in the House. Individual allotment of seats within a block of seats is made by the Party or Group itself and intimated to the Speaker. Blocks of seats are not allotted to small Groups or independent members. Seats to individual members of such Groups and to independent members are allotted by the Speaker. Members of such Groups who express a desire to sit together are, as far as possible, allotted contiguous seats.

Senior members of the House who have earned a distinctive position by virtue of their long and devoted service to the House may be allotted prominent seats and, in appropriate cases, in the front rows, without consideration of Party or Groups to which they belong<sup>37</sup>. The Deputy Speaker is allotted the first seat in the front row on the left of the Chair<sup>38</sup>. 37. At the beginning of the Second Lok Sabha, the following members were allotted seats in the front row of the Opposition block:

Frank Anthony, a nominated member representing the Anglo-Indian community and a member of the Independent Parliamentary Group.

Shibban Lal Saxena (India), elected from the Maharajganj Constituency (U.P.).

J.B. Kripalani, Leader of the P.S.P. Group. On resignation from the P.S.P. in November 1960, he became an unattached member but in view of his position in public life, no change was made in the seat allotted to him. In accordance with the establishment principle viz., their standing in Parliament and prominence in public life, the following members were also allotted seats in the front row other than the Government side in the Lok Sabha Chamber on the basis of their distinctive position without consideration of party to which they belonged:

Third Lok Sabha: Seat No. 352 Frank Anthony for being leader of Independent Parliamentary Group and a senior member.

Fourth Lok Sabha: Seat No. 266 to Dr. Govind Das, Father of the House. Seat No. 351 to Frank Anthony (Unattached Member) for being a senior member.

Fifth Lok Sabha: Seat No. 266 and later 181 to Dr. Govind Das, Father of the House. Seat No. 352 to Frank Anthony for being a senior member.

Seventh Lok Sabha: Seat No. 351 to Frank Anthony (Unattached Member) for being senior member.

Eighth Lok Sabha: Seat No. 352 to Frank Anthony (Unattached Member) for being a senior member.

Tenth Lok Sabha: Seat No. 181 to Chandra Shekhar (J.P.) for being senior member, Seat No. 266 to K.P. Unnikrishnan Cong. (S) for being a senior member.

Eleventh Lok Sabha: Seat No. 366 to Chandra Shekhar (J.P.) for being former Prime Minister.

Twelfth Lok Sabha: Seat No. 99 to Chandra Shekhar (SJP-R); Seat No. 187 to I.K. Gujral (JD); and Seat No. 188 to H.D. Deve Gowda (JD) for being former Prime Ministers; and seat No. 276 to Indrajit Gupta (CPI) for being Father of the House.

Thirteenth Lok Sabha: Seat No. 277 to Chandra Shekhar (SJP-R) for being former Prime Minister and Seat No. 454 to Indrajit Gupta (CPI) for being Father of the House.

Fourteenth Lok Sabha: Seat No. 99 (released by Minister of Parliamentary Affairs) to H.D. Deve Gowda (JD-S) and Seat No. 187 to Chandra Shekhar (SJP-R) for being former Prime Ministers.

Fifteenth Lok Sabha Seat No. 99 to T.R. Baalu (DMK) for being a senior member; Seat No. 187 to H.D. Devagowda [JS(S)] for being former Prime Minister and Seat No. 188 to Lalu Prasad (RJD) for being a senior member. All these seats were allotted on the recommendation of Minister of Parliamentary Affairs.

38. The convention that the Deputy Speaker should occupy the first seat to the left of the Speaker was established in 1927, when Speaker Patel directed that the then Deputy Speaker be allotted the first seat to his left.—see also L.S. Deb., 16-3-1970, c. 250.
39. There was no Leader of the Opposition as such in the First, Second, Third and Fifth Lok Sabha as no party in Opposition was recognized as a Parliamentary Party under Direction 121. In the First Lok Sabha, Communist Party was recognized as Party Group. The Leader of the Communist Group was allotted a seat next to the Deputy Speaker and other members of his Group were

State and Deputy Ministers, seats are allotted by the Speaker in the front rows on the right side of the Chair in the order of their seniority as intimated by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs.

The seating arrangement in the Lok Sabha Chamber has undergone several changes from time to time. While in the days of the Central Legislative Assembly, the Chamber had only 148 seats, the number was increased to 300 after the Chamber was re-modelled in 1947 to accommodate the members of the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) which met in the Assembly Chamber to function as a distinct body in the capacity of the Dominion Legislature. In 1952, following the first general elections, the number of seats was raised to 466 which was less than the number of members returned. The number was further increased in 1957 to accommodate up to 530 members, each one being provided with a seat.

allotted contiguous seats behind his seat. In August 1954, however, the Group lost recognition when its membership dropped to 29.

In the Fourth Lok Sabha, with a split in the ruling Congress Party in November 1969 certain dissociating members thereof formed a separate party called the Congress Party (Opposition) and its leader was recognized as the Leader of the Opposition and allotted a seat next to the Deputy Speaker.

On the constitution of the Sixth Lok Sabha in March 1977, the Congress Party being the only Party in Opposition eligible for recognition as a Parliamentary Party under Direction 121, its leader was recognized as the Leader of the Opposition and allotted a seat next to the Deputy Speaker. Also see Chapter VIII—'Parliamentary Functionaries', under the heading Leader of the Opposition.

On the constitution of the Seventh Lok Sabha in February 1980, no party in the Opposition was recognized as Parliamentary Party in terms of Direction 121. The Leaders of Janata (S), CPI(M), Janata, DMK, Congress (U) and CPI were allotted seats in the first row. Frank Anthony, a nominated member representing the Anglo-Indian community, was allotted seat in the first row.

The Eighth Lok Sabha was constituted on 31 December 1984 and no party in Opposition was recognized as a Parliamentary Party in terms of Direction 121. The Leaders of Telugu Desam, CPI (M), Janata, CPI and AIADMK were allotted seats in the first row.

Frank Anthony, a nominated member representing the Anglo-Indian community, was allotted seat in the first row.

On the constitution of the Ninth Lok Sabha in December 1989, Indian National Congress (INC) being the largest party in Opposition, its leader Rajiv Gandhi was recognised as the Leader of the Opposition and allotted a seat next to the Deputy Speaker's seat in the Lok Sabha Chamber. Due to the split in the United Front, the Government headed by V.P. Singh stepped down and on 10 November 1990, the INC extended its support to Chandra Shekhar to form the new Government. Consequently, the BJP being the largest party in the Lok Sabha, next to the INC at that time, became the largest Opposition party and its leader, L.K. Advani was recognised as the Leader of the Opposition and allotted the above mentioned seat.

In June 1991, when the Tenth Lok Sabha was constituted, L.K. Advani was recognised as the Leader of the Opposition and was allotted the seat adjacent to the Deputy Speaker's seat in the Lok Sabha Chamber. After two years, in July 1993, A.B. Vajpayee was elected as the Leader of the BJP and consequently, he was sworn in as the Leader of the Opposition and occupied the same seat mentioned above.

Similarly in May 1996, when the Eleventh Lok Sabha was constituted, P.V. Narasimha Rao was recognised as the Leader of the Opposition and was allotted the seat next to the Deputy Speaker's seat in the Lok Sabha Chamber. Consequent upon the resignation of the BJP Government in May 1996, A.B. Vajpayee became the Leader of the Opposition and was allotted the seat next to the Deputy Speaker's seat in the Lok Sabha Chamber.

In 1975, twenty additional seats were provided and the Chamber can now accommodate up to 550 members.

At the beginning of the Second Lok Sabha, the installation of the Automatic Vote Recording Equipment for taking votes in a division made it imperative that each member should be allotted a specific seat in the Chamber and that he should occupy the allotted seat. Subsequently, during Tenth Lok Sabha, in March 1995, a computerized, integrated system on Microphone Management, Simultaneous Interpretation and Automatic Vote recording was installed in the Lok Sabha Chamber for recording votes during the time of Division in the House. Each member is now allotted a fixed seat from where he has to address the House<sup>40</sup> unless otherwise directed by the Chair<sup>41</sup> and at the time of a division, he has to record his vote by operating the switches/push buttons provided for as fixed to his seat only<sup>42</sup>.

In the Central Legislative Assembly, once the seats were allotted to Parties at the beginning of a session, no further alterations in the seats were normally made during the same session unless the changes proposed in the seating arrangements were few and did not upset the seating arrangement for the session. Where members of a Party to whom seats were allotted abstained

In March 1998, when the Twelfth Lok Sabha was constituted, Sharad Pawar was recognised as the Leader of the Opposition and was allotted the seat next to the Deputy Speaker's seat in the Lok Sabha Chamber.

On the constitution of Thirteenth Lok Sabha in October 1999, Sonia Gandhi was recognized as the Leader of the Opposition and was allotted the seat next to the Deputy Speaker's seat in the Lok Sabha Chamber.

Similarly, on the constitution of Fourteenth Lok Sabha in May 2004, L.K. Advani was recognized as the Leader of the Opposition and was allotted the seat next to the Deputy Speaker's seat in the Lok Sabha Chamber.

On the Constitution of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha in May 2009, L.K. Advani was recognized as the Leader of the Opposition and was allotted the seat next to the Deputy Speaker's seat in the Lok Sabha Chamber. On 21 December 2009, consequent upon Sushma Swaraj being recognized as the Leader of the Opposition, she was allotted the seat adjacent to the seat of Deputy Speaker.

40. Rule 349(vii)—see also L.S. Deb., 8-3-1960, cc. 4696-98; 19-12-1960, c. 6334. The matter relating to the observance of rules by members while speaking in the House was discussed in the Business Advisory Committee meeting held on 9 March 2005, wherein the Speaker directed that members, except the Ministers, shall speak from their own seats unless permitted by the Chair to speak from another seat.

From 2005 onwards a para in Bulletin – Part II is also issued during the session routinely drawing the attention of the members to the provisions of rules 349 (vii) and 351 of the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha, which, inter alia provide that whilst the House is sitting, a member shall keep to his usual seat and shall speak from his place while addressing the House.

41. The Chair often permits members who are inaudible when speaking from their seats, to come to the bench which is closer to the microphone and address the House—see L.S. Deb., 21-12-1955, c. 3515; 31-3-1960, c. 9016; 26-8-1960, c. 5120; 22-12-1960, c. 7144.
42. At the time of division, each member has to press the vote initiation switch with one hand and then operate one of the three push buttons with the other hand simultaneously. Only then, the light will flash in the corresponding set of LEDs pertaining to the seat of the member in the Individual Result Display Panels installed on the wall on either side of the Speaker's Chair in the Chamber. Otherwise, the particulars of voting of each member will not present a true picture.

totally from attending the sittings of the House for the entire period of the session and formal notice had been given by the Party to that effect, their seats were allotted to members of other Groups<sup>43</sup>. Once a seat was occupied by a member he had to stick to it and was not to occupy any seat lying vacant without the permission of the Chair<sup>44</sup>.

When the Provisional Parliament came into existence in 1950 and the number of seats in the Chamber was less than the number of members, no formal allotment of seats was made by the Speaker and a member occupied a seat in a block as he chose. Having selected a seat, it was expected of a member to sit in the block in which he had been sitting and to address the House from that position<sup>45</sup>.

In the first general elections, the total number of members returned to the Lok Sabha was 499. But as the number of seats in the Chamber was only 466, the various Opposition Groups were allotted blocks of seats on a pro rata basis<sup>46</sup>. The remaining seats were thereafter assigned to the Party commanding a majority, leaving it the freedom of allotting the various seats to its individual members<sup>47</sup>.

The first blocks to the right of the Chair, is reserved for the Ministers and few members to whom seats are allotted in the order of their seniority<sup>48</sup>. Ministers who are not members of the Lok Sabha are not allotted fixed seats<sup>49</sup>. A few seats in these rows are, however, kept vacant to be occupied by them. The first seat in the front row to the right of the Chair is always earmarked for the Prime Minister, whether he is a member of the House or not. Leaders of political parties, members who were former Prime Ministers, and very senior members, also given seats in the front row. So far as allotment of seats to members belonging to smaller parties having strength of less than 5 members is concerned, they are treated at par with independent members.

46. This allotment on pro rata basis was done a few days after the first sitting of the newly elected House. Till then, members were asked to occupy the same seats which they had occupied during the Question Hour. See H.P. Deb., (I), 19-5-1952, 6-11-1952, cc. 65-66; see also L.S. Deb., 7-12-1954, c. 1071.

47. See H.P. Deb., (II), 18-6-1952, cc. 2035-36.

48. Ministers to whom seats have been allotted in the second row are permitted by the Speaker to take their seats (at least during the Question Hour) in the first row if they are vacant, to answer questions. If the Ministers to whom the front seats have been allotted happen to come at that time, they take their seats for the time being in the second row.

At other times, when voting is not taking place, the Minister in-charge of a Bill may sit on another seat—see L.S. Deb., 11-12-1958, cc. 4535-37.

49. An exception was, however, made in case of Govind Ballabh Pant, Minister of Home Affairs, who was a member of the Rajya Sabha. He was allotted a fixed seat in the Chamber.

Members belonging to these parties are allotted seats by the Speaker at his discretion in accordance with the established principle, viz. their standing in Parliament, prominence in public life, etc.

Individual allotment of the remaining seats within the blocks reserved for the Government Party/Ruling Alliance is recommended by the Government Chief Whip Minister of Parliamentary Affairs in accordance with the general principles laid down by the Speaker in regard thereto<sup>50</sup>. All subsequent requests for allotment of seats by members returned in by-elections proposed for changes in the allocation of seats already made are dealt with by him and any changes decided/proposed by him are forthwith submitted for the approval of the Speaker.

When additional seats are required in the front rows consequent upon the appointment of new Ministers, the Government Chief Whip makes available the requisite number of seats for being allotted to them. Private members who are affected by the release of such seats are allotted seats elsewhere by the Speaker on the recommendation of the Government Chief Whip within the blocks reserved for the Party.

Parties and Groups in the Opposition, recognized by the Speaker, are allotted blocks of contiguous seats proportionate to their strength, starting from the left of the Chair. The Party Group having the largest membership is allotted seats to the extreme left, the Party Group having the next largest membership to the right of that Party Group and so on. Where the membership of the Parties or Groups undergoes changes, the Speaker may re-allot seats to them in accordance with their numbers. The seats among the members of a Party or Group are allotted to them by the leader of the Party or Group concerned with the approval of the Speaker. In allotting seats to individual members, the same principles are normally followed as are applicable in the case of the Government Party Alliance.

Individual members of smaller Groups are allotted seats by the Speaker. Such members may, in the discretion of the Speaker, be allotted contiguous seats. The Speaker may, on a request made in that behalf, permit the members of a Group to change their seats inter se.

When a member returned in a bye-election comes to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation, he is seated in one of the back rows of the first block on the right of the Chair. In the case of a member of an Opposition Party or Group, he may be permitted to sit in the respective block, if he so desires. After a member makes and subscribes the oath or affirmation, he is allotted a regular seat.

50. Generally, the following considerations are kept in view—

As far as possible, members who are re-elected are allotted the original seats or seats nearby; some ex-Ministers of the Government of India and the State Governments elected to the House are given preference in allotment in the front rows or behind the seats of the Ministers;

Prominent members who frequently take part in the debates are given seats in the front rows; and

New members are allotted seats on the merits of each case according to their prominence in public life, individual standing, etc. as far as these factors are known.

In the case of a member returned in a bye-election and affiliated to a Party or Group, an additional seat is placed at the disposal of the Party or the Group concerned after the new member has made and subscribed the oath or affirmation for being allotted to him, if necessary, by making suitable adjustment in the allotment made to other members of that Party or Group under intimation to the Speaker. In the case of a member belonging to a small Group or an independent member returned in a bye-election, the seat is allotted by the Speaker.

When any new Party or Group is formed due to merger in terms of paragraphs of the Tenth Schedule to the Constitution during the life of the House, its members may be allotted contiguous seats or seats as near as possible to one another without dislocating seats allotted to other members.

Whenever any change takes place in the leadership of a Party or Group, the Speaker may, keeping in view its membership and prominence in public life and individual standing of the new leader of the Party or Group, re-allot him a better seat, and in an appropriate case a seat in the front row<sup>51</sup>.

If during a session of the House any Party or Group gains or loses membership and thereby becomes eligible for a new block of seats, the seating arrangement is not usually disturbed until the session is over. Necessary reallocation may take place at the commencement of the succeeding session<sup>52</sup>.

51. At the beginning of the Second Lok Sabha, the leader of the P.S.P. Group was J.B. Kripalani who was allotted a seat in the front row. He resigned from the Group in November 1960. Thereupon, Asoka Mehta became the leader of the Group. He was allotted a vacant seat in the front row.

At the commencement of the Third Lok Sabha, the Leader of the Communist Group, which functioned as a recognized Group, was allotted a seat next to the Deputy Speaker. In 1964, the Communist Group, split into two Groups and it lost recognition as a Parliamentary Group. The seat next to the Deputy Speaker was then allotted to the Leader of the Swatantra Group which commanded the largest membership amongst the unrecognized Groups in the House.

Consequent upon the change of leadership of the AIADMK Group on 16 March 1988, during the Tenth Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha, the leader of the AIADMK was allotted seat in the front row.

52. During Twelfth Session of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha, seating arrangement was revised when All India Trinamool Congress, a constituent party of the ruling United Progressive Alliance, demanded separate seating for its members consequent upon withdrawing from the Alliance.

CHAPTER XVI

Leave of Absence of Members

Each constituency expects that the member it elects will take his seat in the Lok Sabha and attend sittings of the House, except when it is necessary for him to remain absent on account of unavoidable reasons. It is the right of the Lok Sabha to receive from him an account as to why he was absent. The duty of members to the House is paramount and they are expected to remain absent from the sittings thereof only when there are compelling reasons for doing so<sup>1</sup>.

Constitutional Provisions

The Constitution provides that if for a period of sixty days, a member of either House of Parliament is, without permission of the House, absent from all meetings thereof, his seat may be declared vacant by the House<sup>2</sup>. In computing the said period of sixty days, no account is taken of any period during which the House is prorogued or is adjourned for more than four consecutive days<sup>3</sup>.

In the Central Legislative Assembly, if a member was absent from India or unable to attend to the duties of his office for a period of two consecutive months his seat could be declared vacant by the Governor-General<sup>4</sup>. However, in the case of an elected member, the Governor-General could consider the possibility of taking action under the constitutional provision only when moved to do so by the constituency of the member to which the member was primarily responsible for the due performance of his duties. If a non-official nominated member could not see his way to attend with reasonable regularity, the proper course for him was to resign his seat.

During the period from the passing of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, to the commencement of the Constitution, there was no constitutional provision for declaring vacant the seats of the members of the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) on the ground of their continuous absence from the sittings thereof, nor was it necessary for members to obtain permission of the House to remain absent<sup>5</sup>.

1. 4R (CAM-1LS).

2. Art. 101(4).

Provision has accordingly been made by Lok Sabha in the Rules prescribing the method for seeking permission of the House to remain absent from the sitting thereof and for the vacation of a seat on a motion moved in that behalf by the Leader of the House—Vide Rules 242 and 325 to 328.

3. Art. 101(4), Proviso.

4. Sec. 93(2) of the Government of India Act, as set out in the Ninth Schedule to Government of India Act, 1935.

5. After the passing of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, the Ninth Schedule as also sec. 25(3) of the Government of India Act, 1935, were omitted from the Act of 1935 under India (Provisional Constitution) Order, 1947.

Under the Rules, the seat is declared vacant on a motion by the Leader of the House or by such other member to whom he may delegate his functions in this behalf<sup>6</sup>.

The present practice is that it is the Committee on Absence of Members<sup>7</sup> who first report that the House should declare the seat of the member in question vacant. The report, before presentation to the House, is forwarded to the Leader of the House for comments. After the report is agreed to by the House, the Leader of the House, or if he has delegated his authority to the Chairman of the Committee, then the latter, may move the motion, on giving notice thereof<sup>8</sup>.

The period of sixty days referred to in the Constitution means 'a single unbroken period of sixty days' and in order to disqualify a member under these provisions, the absence has to be continuous.

The period of absence is calculated from the day a member is absent from the sittings of the House till the day he next attends it, whether in the same session or in subsequent sessions. The intervening days in a session on which no sitting of the House is held are counted, but any period of prorogation or adjournment of the House for more than four consecutive days is excluded<sup>9</sup>.

The constitutional provisions are only directory and not mandatory and a seat may not be declared vacant unless there is a contumacious disregard of duty as a member of the House. The power to declare a seat vacant being only an enabling power, it is within the competence of the House to condone the absence of any member exceeding a period of sixty days<sup>10</sup>.

Where a member has already been absent for over sixty days on the date of application for leave of absence, the permission of the House given to remain absent up to the date of the application is termed as 'condonation of absence' and the permission to remain absent after the date of the application, if applied for, is termed as 'grant of leave of absence'<sup>11</sup>.

Attendance Register

In order to record the attendance of members, an attendance register is maintained for members to sign against their names in token of having attended the sitting of the House on a particular day<sup>12</sup>.

---

6. Rule 241(1).

7. For details regarding the functions and working of the Committee, see Chapter XXX—Parliamentary Committees, under 'Committee on Absence of Members from Sittings of the House'.

8. L.S. Deb., 5-12-1956, cc. 1922-36.

9. P. Deb., (II), 19-4-1950, p. 3023.

10. Min. (RC), 17-12-1953, p. 21.

11. 7R (CAM-ILS)—The Report was adopted by the House on 23 December 1954.

12. The register was first introduced on 11 December 1947. Previously, the practice had been that a Secretariat official in the Lobby recorded attendance of members; in view of the increase in the size of the House and the fact that members come in at different times of the day, that practice was not regarded as satisfactory and accurate.

Before entering the House, a member has to record his presence in the attendance register kept in the Lobby and he has to sign it every day<sup>13</sup>. For the convenience of members, the register is split up into four parts—each having a series of division numbers and each part is kept on a separate rostrum in the Lobby.

After the adjournment of the House each day, all the four parts of the attendance register are collected and the attendance of members i.e. members who have signed/ not signed, is uploaded on the website of Lok Sabha for the purpose of keeping a complete record of the attendance of members and computing the period of continuous absence of members. Original attendance registers of different Lok Sabha are bound separately and kept as a record.

There is no provision in the Constitution or the Rules making it incumbent upon members to record their attendance in the attendance register. In fact, each day, a number of members attending the House do not sign the attendance register. There can also be cases where members may sign the attendance register in the Lobby on a day but may not actually attend the House at all on that day. Signatures in the attendance register do not imply that the members concerned were present in the House throughout the day. A member can come and sign the attendance register at any time during the sitting of the House. There are also occasions when due to inadvertence or hurry some members do not sign the attendance register. Sometimes the signatures are not legible; and later on it may become difficult to identify such signatures. Ministers, as a rule, do not sign the attendance register. All these factors go to show that the attendance register is not a complete document. It is only a voluntary record of the evidence to show that a particular member signed the attendance register on a particular day. Absence of signature of a member does not, therefore, mean that he was not present in the House on a particular day.

Prior to 9 June 1993, the payment of daily allowance to a member was not dependent upon his signatures in the attendance register. However, with effect from 9 June 1993, no member is entitled to daily allowance unless he signs the attendance register on all the days (except intervening holidays for which no such signing is required) of the session of the House for which the allowance is claimed<sup>14</sup>.

In 1997, the Committee of Privileges (11 LS) in their Report on ‘Ethics, Standards in Public Life, Privileges, Facilities to Members and Other Related Matters’ also dealt with this matter<sup>15</sup>.

13. This information is incorporated in Handbook for Members. A para is also issued in the Bulletin from time to time reminding the members about the necessity of signing the attendance register. Such reminders were issued in the form of circulars prior to 1950.

14. Section 3 of the Salary, Allowances and Pension of Members of Parliament Act, 1954 (amended by Act No. 40 of 2006).

15. The Committee, in their Report, took a view that claiming daily allowance without attending the House is immoral and unethical. The Committee, however, felt that the said statutory provision had to be viewed in the right perspective taking into account the spirit of the law. Taking a logical view, it was opined that a member who attends the sitting of the House becomes entitled to claim daily allowance, hence, in certain exceptional cases, where a member inadvertently forgets to sign the attendance register, but nevertheless attends the House, in all fairness, his claim for daily allowance should be considered, subject to production of a tangible proof of attendance.

The attendance register is utilised for reminding a member about the constitutional provisions regarding attendance of a member. In case he has not signed the attendance register for a long time and when his absence on the basis of the attendance register comes to forty days or more, the member concerned is then reminded to apply for leave of absence in time. Such a reminder also induces a member to sign the attendance register in future, in case he had not been doing so earlier.

Chart Showing Hourly Count

Connected with the attendance register, there is also a chart maintained by the Lobby officer showing the number of members present in the House at different hours of the day, which is maintained in order to convey a more correct impression of the attendance in the House than marking the attendance once in a day at a particular time. The chart also indicates the total attendance of the House during the day. At the end of each session, an analytical abstract showing the maximum and minimum attendance on a day, highest and lowest hourly count and the average attendance per day during the session, is prepared. This chart, however, does not show the names of members present but only the number of members present.

Procedure for obtaining Leave of Absence

A member desiring permission of the House to remain absent from the sittings thereof to escape penalty under the constitutional provisions is required to make an application in writing specifying therein the period for which leave of absence is required, together with the date of commencement, and termination of such leave and the grounds for it<sup>16</sup>. Applications for leave of absence may be addressed to the Speaker, or the Secretariat, or the Chairman of the Committee on Absence of Members. If any application is addressed to a person or body other than these, the member concerned is advised to send a fresh application.

To make an application in writing means that the member concerned should sign it. Leave of absence has also been granted on the basis of applications by telegram<sup>17</sup>, e-mail and fax, followed by letter written and signed by the member himself.

If a member is unable to apply by himself in writing for reasons which the Speaker considers adequate, another member may be permitted to apply for leave of absence from the sitting of the House on his behalf<sup>18</sup>.

An application from an ailing member affixing his thumb impression thereon received through a sitting member was considered by the Committee and the leave recommended was granted by the House<sup>19</sup>.

16. Rule 242. This Rule was first framed in 1950.

17. Min. (RC), 15-4-1950, p. 2.

18. Min. (CAM-1LS), 13-12-1955; 9R (CAM-4LS); 10R(CAM-7LS).

19. See 10R & 11R (CAM-6LS); 6R(CAM-8LS).

An application for leave of absence on the ground of illness received on behalf of a member signed by his son was considered by the Committee and leave was recommended<sup>20</sup>. Similarly, an application on ground of severe burns, received on behalf of a member from his wife, was considered by the Committee and leave was recommended<sup>21</sup>. On the other hand, an application signed and addressed by a member on behalf of another member was not considered as valid as the latter was capable of applying by himself<sup>22</sup>.

A letter from the private secretary of a member regarding grant of leave of absence to the member is not treated as valid application for leave of absence<sup>23</sup>.

Where an application does not state the specific period or reasons or both for which leave is required, the member concerned is asked to do so by a letter addressed to him, before his application is considered.

The period for which leave of absence is required by a member must not exceed sixty days<sup>24</sup>. If a member applies for leave of absence for a period exceeding sixty days, the Committee recommend fifty-nine days' leave only in the first instance<sup>25</sup>.

In case a member applies for leave of absence for a period which falls partly during the current session and partly in the next session, he is granted leave till the termination of the current session only in the first instance, provided that the period of leave so granted does not exceed fifty-nine days. For the portion of period of leave falling in the next session, the member is advised to apply afresh<sup>26</sup>.

It is not necessary to apply for leave of absence where the period of absence is less than fifteen days<sup>27</sup>. Strictly speaking, under the provisions of the Constitution, it is not necessary to take the permission of the House for leave of absence for less than sixty days, but it is safer for the members to do so<sup>28</sup>.

As soon as a member completes forty days of continuous absence without permission of the House, the Secretariat informs him about it, so that he may apply for leave of absence in time in order to avoid complications at a later stage<sup>29</sup>. A further reminder is sent to him when his continuous absence amounts to fifty days.

23. In his letter, dated 15 November 1958, the private secretary to a member intimated that the member was undergoing treatment in the U.S.A. and was not in a position to send his leave application under his own signature. The letter was not treated as leave application and the private secretary was advised to ask the member to send his leave application to the Speaker direct.

28. See L.S. Deb., 9-5-1956, cc. 7720-21; 17R(CAM-5LS).

29. This is done in pursuance of the recommendation of the Committee on Absence of Members—see Min. (CAM-1LS), 15-3-1956, paras 4 and 5; 13R(CAM-1LS), para 16.

This enables a member to apply for leave of absence or to clarify that he had been attending the House but had not signed the attendance register<sup>30</sup>. If a member is continuously absent from the sittings of the House for sixty days or more, without permission, his attention is drawn to the constitutional provisions and the relevant rules and he is advised to apply for condonation of the period of absence, stating the reasons necessitating his absence, for the information and consideration of the Committee on Absence of Members<sup>31</sup>. In a similar case, no such communication is, however, sent to a Minister.

Applications for leave of absence have to specify the grounds for leave<sup>32</sup>. The reasons given in the application should be proper, sufficient and convincing. On the recommendation of the Committee on Absence of Members, Lok Sabha has laid down<sup>33</sup> the following grounds on which leave could be granted to members —

- (i) Illness of self, including medical check up;
- (ii) Illness, accident or mishap in the family;
- (iii) Death in family;
- (iv) Marriage of self or marriage in family;
- (v) Detention in jail;
- (vi) Pilgrimage or participation in religious celebrations;
- (vii) Visits abroad for (a) participation in Conferences and Delegations, (b) study tour, (c) lecturing, or (d) participation in games and sports;
- (viii) Relief work in natural calamities like floods, drought, fire or earthquake in the constituency or any part of the country;
- (ix) Work connected with delimitation of constituencies or preparation of electoral rolls;
- (x) Work connected with some Commission of Inquiry;
- (xi) Celebrations in the constituency like Martyrs' Day, centenary celebrations, Inauguration of a new project in Assembly or State, etc. in which the member has been assigned a prominent role;
- (xii) Elections or bye-elections in the constituency;
- (xiii) Participation in Party session or Party meetings;
- (xiv) Agitations or disturbances in the constituency; and
- (xv) Breakdown of communications.

It was agreed<sup>34</sup> that some of the grounds mentioned above would not merit grant of leave for long durations, and as such while granting leave not only the grounds but also the duration of leave would be a vital factor.

34. Ibid.

The Lok Sabha further decided<sup>35</sup> that leave need not ordinarily be granted on grounds like—

- (i) Work in the constituency other than those mentioned in the preceding paragraph;
- (ii) Professional or business engagements;
- (iii) Private affairs; and
- (iv) Domestic trouble other than those mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

The Lok Sabha also decided<sup>36</sup> that the information given by members should be relied upon and members need not be required to produce certificates or evidence in support of the ground on which leave is applied for<sup>37</sup>.

Leave should not be asked for on flimsy and frivolous grounds or on grounds which tend to lower the prestige and dignity of the House<sup>38</sup>.

In connection with an application for leave of absence from a member, Speaker Mavalankar observed:

This leads me to another question and that is, it will be better if the House takes into consideration the propriety of the reasons for which a member remained absent. I am not speaking with reference to this case but I have seen cases in which applications have come and we have granted leave. Some of them have not been very convincing, and there were not cogent reasons for a member to remain absent from the discharge of his duties as a member of Parliament<sup>39</sup>.

Where a member does not state in his application the grounds on which he desires leave of absence, he is asked to furnish them before his application is considered. If the reasons given by a member are vague, he is asked to specify them to enable the Committee on Absence of Members to recommend and the House to grant the leave<sup>40</sup>.

36. Ibid.

37. Earlier, on one occasion when a member had been continuously absent from the sittings of the House for a long period, he was directed to state full reasons for his absence and produce a medical certificate from a civil surgeon before the question of granting him any further leave could be considered—L.S. Deb., 17-9-1963, c. 6515.

38. See 4R(CAM-1LS), Min. (CAM-1LS), 13-12-1955.

39. H.P. Deb., (II), 20-4-1953, c. 4627.

40. The following reasons were held as vague and not proper and the members concerned were asked to specify the exact reasons for their absence from the sittings of the House:

- (a) Urgent work without specifying what it was;
- (b) Some private business which required the member's continuous presence in his constituency;
- (c) Politico-communal disturbance in the member's area—Min. (CAM-2LS), 19-12-1957 and 30-3-1960. Reasons that the member is busy with constituency matters or that the member had to look after his factory are not considered good reasons—L.S. Deb., 18-3-1974.

Application for leave of absence for touring the country, meeting the people and listening to their grievances or holding of peace marches in various parts of the country or participation in the Ballet, Ekti on freedom struggle and national integration were considered adequate by the Committee and leave recommended which was subsequently granted by the House<sup>41</sup>.

When the House is in session, a member who is on a Government Committee or Commission and goes out in connection with its work, has to apply for leave of absence<sup>42</sup>.

Absence of Speaker, Deputy Speaker and Ministers

The constitutional provisions in regard to leave of absence apply to the Speaker also since he is a member of the House. Whenever the Speaker has to remain unavoidably absent for long periods during a session, he sends a message to the Deputy Speaker to be conveyed to the House stating the reasons for his absence and requesting for grant of leave of absence to him<sup>43</sup>. The only procedural difference between the application for leave of absence by the Speaker and that by a member is that the application by the Speaker is in the form of a message which is directly conveyed to the House by the Chair and leave of absence is granted to him there and then without the matter being first placed before the Committee on Absence of Members.

Where the absence of the Speaker is for short periods only, he does not inform the House but informs the Deputy Speaker and the Secretary-General so that necessary arrangements are made for the Deputy Speaker or a member of the Panel of Chairmen to preside.

Similarly, the Deputy Speaker also informs the Speaker whenever he proposes to be absent for short periods during a session.

Ministers need not apply for permission of the House for their absence from the sittings thereof whenever they are required to perform their duties outside the headquarters or are unable to attend the House due to circumstances beyond their control.

However, there have been occasions when application for leave of absence received from Ministers were formally considered and leave of absence was granted to them<sup>44</sup>.

Generally, the Ministers, whenever they propose to be absent from the House for long periods, inform the Speaker about their proposed absence as a matter of courtesy to the House and the Speaker<sup>45</sup>.

45. On 16 April 1960, the Minister of Food and Agriculture, (S.K. Patil) informed the Speaker about his inability to attend the sittings of the House as he had to undertake a trip to U.S.A.

Ministers inform the Speaker of their absence from the sittings of the House even for a short period and also intimate the arrangements made by them regarding handling of parliamentary business standing in their name during their absence.

Absence of Members who have not taken Oath or made Affirmation

A member who has not made and subscribed the oath or affirmation is entitled to ask for leave of absence from the sittings of the House in order to avoid penalty envisaged in the Constitution<sup>46</sup>.

Procedure for Disposal of Applications for Leave of Absence

All applications from members for leave of absence are placed before the Committee on Absence of Members from the sittings of the House for their consideration and report<sup>47</sup>.

The report of the Committee is circulated to all the members on the same day on which it is presented to the House.

If the recommendations contained in the report are that the leave of absence be granted to the members concerned or absence be condoned, as the case may be, then after the presentation of the report to the House, the Speaker takes the sense of the House in respect of these recommendations on the next sitting of the House.

The members concerned are then informed through a letter about the grant of leave of absence to them or condonation of their absence, as the case may be.

On the same day on which leave of absence is granted to the members or their absence is condoned by the House, the names of all such members together with the period for which leave has been granted or absence condoned, are published in the Bulletin Part-I.

When the sense of the House is taken by the Speaker on the recommendations of the Committee as contained in their report, no member generally dissents, but if a dissenting voice is heard, the Speaker takes the sense of the House and decides accordingly. While doing so he goes by voices, and, if necessary, he may allow a division as well.

46. In April 1952, a reference was made to the Ministry of Law as to the position of a member who had not taken oath and remained absent from the sittings of the House. The Ministry of Law advised as follows:

“A member who has not taken oath cannot sit and act as member, but there is no reason why he should not apply for permission under clause (4) of article 101 in order to avoid vacation of his seat under that clause. The object of that clause need not only be to penalise a member for dereliction of his duty as legislator, it may well be to ensure that all constituencies are represented in the House. The result of taking the former view would be that a member who has not taken oath, will stand in a more favourable position than the one who has taken the oath, since clause (4) of article 101 will apply to the latter and not to the former. It could not be intention of the Constitution to place a person who has neglected his duty of taking oath in a more favourable position than the one who has discharged his duty.”

47. For procedure in the Committee, see Chapter XXX—‘Parliamentary Committees’, under Committee on Absence of Members from the Sittings of the House.

Earlier, at the time of taking the pleasure of the House, the Speaker used to permit members to raise points on the report, provided they had given advance intimation thereof in writing<sup>48</sup>. In case notice of any point was received the Chairman of the Committee was apprised of the position so as to enable him to answer that point in the House on the appropriate day. This practice is, however, not followed now.

Vacation of Seat

When the Committee recommend that leave of absence be not granted to a member who has been absent for sixty days or more from the sittings of the House without permission thereof, they also recommend that a motion may be moved in the House with a view to declaring the seat of the member concerned vacant<sup>49</sup>.

After the report<sup>50</sup> of the Committee has been adopted by the House, a motion is moved on the next day by the Chairman of the Committee<sup>51</sup> for declaring vacant the seat of the member concerned<sup>52</sup>.

Such a motion can also be made either by the Leader of the House or by any other member to whom he may delegate his functions in this behalf<sup>53</sup>. Under the current practice, this motion is moved by the Chairman of the Committee<sup>54</sup>.

No amendments to such a motion are permissible<sup>55</sup>.

48. In order to enable members to give advance intimation of the point that they desired to raise on the report, a paragraph was issued in the Bulletin, after presentation of the report suggesting that 'members desirous of raising any point on the report should give intimation thereof in writing to the Parliamentary Notice Office'.

49. 18R(CAM-1LS), para 9(9).

50. The report is also submitted to the Speaker and the Leader of the House for approval before its presentation to the House—see L.S. Deb., 4-12-1956, c. 1789.

51. Before the constitution of the Committee in March 1954, the practice was that the action to declare the seat of a member vacant under article 101(4) was taken by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs to whom the Leader of the House had delegated this function—see P. Deb. (II), 19-4-1950, c. 3023.

52. It is not necessary to state in the motion the actual period for which the member concerned was absent from the sittings of the House without permission thereof—L.S. Deb., 5-12-1956, c. 1925.

53. Rule 241.

54. See L.S. Deb., 5-12-1956, cc. 1922-26.

In Lok Sabha, on 19 April 1950 seats of (i) Ravu Swetachalapathi Ramakrishna Ranga Rao, (ii) Raghib Ahsan, and (iii) Abdul Hamid, members of Provisional Parliament were declared vacant under Art. 101 (4) under a motion made by Minister of Parliamentary Affairs.

On 5 December 1956, seat of S.N. Mahapatra, a member of First Lok Sabha, was declared vacant under art. 101 (4) under a motion made by Chairman, Committee on Absence of Members from Sittings of the House (CAM), Lok Sabha.

Similarly in Rajya Sabha, on 21 December 2000, seat of Barjinder Singh Hamdard was declared vacant under art. 101(4) under a motion adopted by the Rajya Sabha.

55. Ibid., c. 1923.

After the motion is carried, the Secretary-General causes the information to be published in the Gazette<sup>56</sup>. Copies of the notification are sent to the member concerned, the Election Commission for filling the vacancy thus caused, the Chief Electoral Officer of the area to which the member belonged, all the Ministries of the Government of India and others concerned.

The seat of the member concerned is vacated from the date on which the motion is adopted by the House.

Lapse of Unexpired Portion of Leave if the Member attends the House earlier

If a member who has been granted leave of absence attends the session of the House during the period for which the leave of absence has been granted to him, the unexpired portion of the leave from the date of his resumed attendance lapses<sup>57</sup>.

Records regarding Attendance of Members

All records pertaining to the absence or attendance of members from the sittings of the House or pertaining to the Committee on Absence of Members are kept in the custody of the Secretary-General<sup>58</sup>. Such records comprise attendance register of members, daily and consolidated chart showing hourly count and total attendance of members, applications for leave of absence from members, and reports and minutes of the sittings of the Committee.

After the House is adjourned for the day, the attendance sheet is removed from the Lobby. When a member informs in writing that he forgot to sign the attendance register on any particular day although he was present in the House, his statement in original is tagged with the corresponding attendance without marking him present therein.

Supply of Information regarding Attendance of Members

Earlier when a request was received from a member or a former member for the supply of information regarding his attendance in the House on particular days or for a specified period according to the records of the Secretariat, he was asked to state the purpose for which the information was required<sup>59</sup>. Each request was then considered on its merits<sup>60</sup> and information was furnished accordingly. With the coming into force of the Right to Information Act 2005, the position has, however, undergone change. Now the information regarding attendance of members is being supplied to members and non-members as and when they are requesting for the same. In fact, as information regarding the Attendance Register is being uploaded on the website, it is already available in the public domain for perusal by one and all. Information regarding attendance of members of Lok Sabha is supplied to all the applicants who seek information under the RTI Act.

57. Rule 245.

58. Rule 383.

59. Dir. 114(1).

60. Dir. 114(2).

Production of Documents regarding Attendance of Members in a Court of Law

Documents relating to the attendance in the House of a member or a former member can be produced in a court of law by an officer of the Secretariat with the permission of the House, if a request on that behalf is received from the court<sup>61</sup>. However, the request for production of attendance register may not be complied with where it would not conclusively prove the issue involved<sup>62</sup>.

61. In 1957, an officer of the Secretariat was detailed to produce in a court of law in Bombay the relevant documents to show inter alia the dates on which an ex-member attended the sittings of the Provisional Parliament during the period from 14 November 1950 to 9 June 1951.
  62. On 12 March 1964, the Home Department of the Uttar Pradesh Government made a request for production of the register for August-September 1959, before the court of Judicial Magistrate, Allahabad, in order to enable the court to find out whether a former member had attended the House during that period or not. The State Government was asked to bring to the notice of the court that there was no statutory obligation on a member to sign the attendance register when he attended the sittings of the House and that the absence of signature of a member in the register was not a conclusive proof of the fact that the member did not attend the House on that particular day or that he was not in Delhi.

CHAPTER XVII

Sittings of the House

Fixation of Sittings

The Lok Sabha sits on such days as the Speaker, having regard to the state of business in the House, may direct from time to time<sup>1</sup>. ‘The state of business in the House’ means the volume as well as the importance of business<sup>2</sup>.

Normally, three sessions of the House of about 23 to 24 weeks’ duration are held during a year and the House on an average sits for about 120 days. However, since 1993 after the constitution of the Departmentally Related Parliamentary Standing Committees (DRSCs), the actual sittings of Lok Sabha have been below 100 days.

1. Rule 13.

In the Central Legislative Assembly (1921-47), the Constituent Assembly of India (Legislative) and the Provisional Parliament, the rule regarding fixation of sittings was the same—see The Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly, 1945, S.O.-99 3(3); Rules of the Constituent Assembly of India (Legislative), Rule 13; and the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Parliament, Rule 9.

On 15 January 1983, the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, while intimating the date of commencement and duration of the Eleventh Session of the Seventh Lok Sabha requested the Speaker that in view of the Non-Aligned Summit, the sittings of the House might not be fixed from 7 to 10 March 1983. The Speaker agreed and no sittings were fixed on those days. A footnote that ‘There will be no sittings from 7 to 10 March 1983’ was given in the Provisional Calendar of Sittings.

Similarly, on 17 October 1983, on a request made by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, while intimating the date of commencement and duration of the Thirteenth Session of the Seventh Lok Sabha, and agreed to by the Speaker, no sittings of the House were fixed from 23 to 30 November 1983 in view of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting at New Delhi and a footnote given in the Provisional Calendar of Sittings.

Also during the Twelfth Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha, on a request made by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs on 3 October 1988 and agreed to by the Speaker, no sittings of the House were fixed from 7 to 11 November 1988 on account of Diwali and a footnote given accordingly in the Provisional Calendar.

On another occasion on 31 January 1994, following the same procedure the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, while intimating the date of commencement and duration of the Ninth Session of the Tenth Lok Sabha, requested the Speaker that to enable the Departmentally related Parliamentary Standing Committees to consider the Demands for Grants of Ministries/Departments and prepare their Reports, the House may adjourn on Friday, 18 March 1994. The Speaker agreed and indication was given in the Provisional Calendar of Sittings.

From 1994 onwards, during Budget Session, the House is adjourned for recess for 3 to 4 weeks to enable the Departmentally Related Parliamentary Standing Committees (DRSCs) to consider the Demands for Grants of Ministries/Departments and prepare their reports, which are presented to the House when it meets after the recess.

2. L.A. Deb., 22-2-1946, pp. 1352-56 and 1393-95.

The Constitution does not prescribe the number of sittings for the Houses of the Parliament. Rule Book, viz. the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha also is silent about it<sup>3</sup>.

After the Speaker agrees to the suggestion of the Government regarding the duration of a session, the days on which the House is to sit for the transaction of Government and Private Members' business are fixed under the orders of the Speaker<sup>4</sup>. For fixing a sitting of the House the Speaker's power is absolute and the consent of the Government is neither necessary nor sought. However, the Speaker normally goes by the general wish of the House or the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee as adopted by the House<sup>5</sup>.

3. However, the State Legislative Assemblies of Himachal Pradesh, Odisha, Rajasthan and Uttar Pradesh have in their Rules of Procedure a provision for holding a minimum number of the sittings during a year. Similar is the position in the Legislative Council of Uttar Pradesh.

In the Sixty-fourth Conference of Presiding Officers of Legislative Bodies in India held at Chandigarh on 28 and 29 June 2001, the Conference unanimously adopted the Report of the Committee of Presiding Officers on "Procedural Uniformity and Better Management of the Time of the House", which inter alia recommended that "there should be some constitutional provisions regarding the minimum number of sittings of Legislatures. It should be 100 sittings for the bigger States, having more than 100 members and 60 sittings for the smaller ones, having less than 100 members".

Subsequently, in a Conference of major political leaders, in which the Presiding Officers and Chief Ministers of various States also participated, held in Chandigarh on 25 November 2001, adopted a resolution recommending a mandatory sitting of 110 days for Parliament and 90 and 50 days for Legislatures for big and small States and suggested steps for suitable amendments in the Constitution for the purpose.

4. In the Central Legislative Assembly, at the beginning of each session, the list of proposed Government days was submitted to the Speaker for his approval—see Fredrick Whyte, Legislative Assembly Manual of Business and Procedure, p. 2.
5. The Budget Session, 1976 of the Fifth Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 22 May 1976. The sitting on that day had to be cancelled and the session extended from 24 to 27 May 1976. This was done by the House on the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee. L.S. Deb., 6-5-1976, cc. 119-20. The Fifteenth Session of the Seventh Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 24 August 1984. On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, the House agreed to sit also on 25 and 27 August 1984. [66R (BAC-7LS), Bn. (II), 21-8-1984, Para 2999.]

The First Session (Eighth Lok Sabha) was scheduled to conclude on 25 January 1985. On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, the House agreed to sit also on 29 and 30 January 1985. [1R(BAC-8LS), Bn. (II), 24-1-1985, Para 107.]

On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, Lok Sabha agreed to cancel its sitting fixed on 4 April 1985, as no sittings had been fixed on 3 and 5 April 1985 on account of Mahavir Jayanti and Good Friday, respectively. [4R(BAC-8LS), Bn. (II), 2-4-1985, Para 289.]

The Third Session (Eighth Lok Sabha) was scheduled to conclude on 22 August 1985. On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, the House agreed to extend the session till 29 August 1985. [12R(BAC-8LS), Bn. (II), 23-8-1985, Para 597.]

On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, Lok Sabha agreed to cancel its sitting fixed on 27 March 1986 as no sittings had been fixed on 26 March and 28 March 1986 on account of Holi and Good Friday, respectively. Private Members Business scheduled for 27 March was accordingly shifted to 25 March, 1986. [22R(BAC-8LS), Bn.(II), 24-3-1986, Para 970.]

On 22 February 1946, in connection with the fixation of a sitting of the Central Legislative Assembly for discussing an adjournment motion, Speaker Mavalankar

---

On the motion moved by the Minister of State in the Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs, Lok Sabha agreed to cancel its sitting fixed on 17 March 1987. [Bn. (II), 13-3-1987, Para 1567.]

On the motion moved by the Minister of State in the Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs, Lok Sabha agreed to sit also on 11 May 1987. [Bn. (II), 8-5-1987, Para 1655.]

On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, Lok Sabha agreed to cancel its sitting fixed for 15 April 1988 as there were no sittings on 13 and 14 April 1988 on account of Vaisakhi and Birth Anniversary of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, respectively. [51R(BAC-8LS), Bn. (II), 4-4-1988, Para 2204.]

On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, the Lok Sabha agreed to cancel its sittings fixed for 2, 6, 7, 8, 12, 15 and 16 April 1993 on account of the 89th Inter-Parliamentary Conference hosted by India. [26R(BAC-10 LS), Bn. (II), 16-3-1993, Para 1877.]

The Seventh Session of the Tenth Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 27 August 1993. On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, the House agreed to fix its sitting on Saturday, 28 August 1993. [33R (BAC-10 LS) Bn. (II), 25-8-1993, Para 2367.]

As per schedule, the House was to adjourn on 18 March 1994 to meet again on 18 April 1994. On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, the Lok Sabha agreed to sit on Saturday, 19 March 1994. [38R (BAC-10 LS), Bn. (II), 2-3-1994, Para 2832.]

As per schedule, the House was to adjourn on 2 June 1995. On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, the House agreed to fix its sitting on Saturday 3 June 1995. [51R (BAC-10 LS), Bn. (II), 31-5-1995, Para 3982.]

The Fifth Session of the Eleventh Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 29 August 1997 but as per decision of Leaders of Parties and Groups, the House also met on Saturday, 30 August 1997 and Monday, 1 September 1997.

On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, the sitting of Lok Sabha fixed for Friday, 16 November 2007 was cancelled and in lieu thereof a sitting of the House was fixed for Saturday, 1 December 2007. [42R(BAC-14LS), Bn. (II), 15-11-2007, Para 4245.]

On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, Lok Sabha agreed to cancel its sitting fixed for Friday, 7 March 2008. [46R(BAC-14LS), Bn. (II), 4-3-2008, Para 4587.]

On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, Lok Sabha agreed to cancel its sitting fixed for Friday, 2 May 2008. [48R(BAC-14LS), Bn. (II), 21-4-2008, Para 4740.]

The Seventh (Budget) Session of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 21 April 2011. In order to enable the Standing Committees to consider the Demands for Grants, the House was to adjourn on 16 March 2011 to meet again on 4 April 2011. However, on recommendation of BAC, the sitting of the House fixed for 4 April 2011 was cancelled on account of Chaitra Sukladi/Gudi Padava/Ugadi/Cheti Chand festival. Accordingly, the House after its adjournment on 16 March 2011 was to meet on 5 April 2011 instead of 4 April 2011. Subsequently, on recommendation of BAC, the first part of the session was extended up to 25 March 2011 (i.e. from 17.3.2011 to 25-3-2011) and the sittings of the second part of the session i.e. from 5-4-2011 to 21-4-2011 were cancelled on account of Assembly elections in the States of Assam, Kerala, Tamil Nadu and West Bengal and Union Territory of Puducherry. [23R (BAC-15 LS), Bn. (II), 23-2-2011, Para 2508; 25R (BAC-15 LS), Bn. (II), 8-3-2011, Para 2578.]

The Ninth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 21 December 2011. However, as per recommendation of BAC, a sitting of Lok Sabha was fixed on 22 December 2011 in lieu of cancellation of sitting of Lok Sabha were fixed on 5 December 2011. Again as per recommendation of BAC, sittings of Lok Sabha were fixed on 27, 28 and 29 December 2011 in order to provide sufficient time for completion of essential items of Government Business, [30R(BAC-15 LS, Bn. (II), 1-12-2011, Para 3437); 33R (BAC-15LS Bn. (II), 22-11-2011, Para 3559].

made the following observations on the interpretation of the rule<sup>6</sup> regarding fixation of sittings—

“This is irrespective of the consent of the Government and I believe, I have got the power of fixing the sittings from day to day”<sup>7</sup>.

Along with the summons for a session, a Provisional Calendar of Sittings showing the programme of sittings so fixed is issued to members. Apart from the days on which the House is to sit, the Provisional Calendar of Sittings also contains the week days to be observed as holidays or those on which no sitting is to be held, the nature of business – Government or Private Members, to be transacted on the days on which sittings have been fixed and allotment of days for answering questions pertaining to various Ministries of the Government arranged in five groups to be taken up on specified days of the week<sup>8</sup>. This information is also published in the Bulletin along with the other information on various matters connected with the commencement of the session<sup>9</sup>.

Any change in the programme of sittings as shown in the Provisional Calendar of Sittings and notified in the Bulletin may be made as and when considered necessary and announced by the Speaker in the House. Such changes are also published in the Bulletin.

From the Eleventh Session of the Third Lok Sabha normally no sitting of the House is fixed on a Saturday even if a holiday intervenes during the week<sup>10</sup>. However, if Saturday happens to be the last working day in the month of February, a sitting is fixed at 1700 hours on that day for presentation of the General Budget<sup>11</sup>.

Consequent upon the Government’s decision in mid 1985 to observe five-day week in Union Government Offices, Saturdays are observed as closed holidays. Accordingly, while drawing up the Provisional Calendar of Sittings for the Eighth Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha, no sitting was fixed on Saturday, 28 February 1987. However, on a suggestion of the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, the Speaker agreed to convene a sitting of the House at 17.00 hrs., on 28 February 1987, specifically for the purpose of the presentation of General Budget for 1987-88, and members were informed accordingly through Bulletin.

As per decision taken in the meeting of the Speaker with Leaders of parties held on 3 May 2012, a Special Sitting of the House was fixed on Sunday 13 May 2012 to commemorate the 60th Anniversary of the first sitting of the Parliament of India.

10. Till the Tenth Session of the Third Lok Sabha, the practice was that in case there was a holiday on any of the week days, or a session commenced from the middle of a week, a sitting of the House was fixed on Saturday in that week. See Bn. (II), 30-6-1956, paras 3336-38; 9-8-1956, paras 3464-66. Sittings were also previously fixed on Saturdays if on any day in the week the House adjourned without transacting any business either due to the death of a member or for any other reason – L.S. Deb., 9-8-1956, c. 2550; 1-12-1961, cc. 2549-50.

Sometimes, sittings of the House are fixed on Saturdays to enable the House to cope with the pressure of Government business. Request for fixation of the additional sitting is made by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs and is considered by the Business Advisory Committee. The Committee makes a report which is adopted by the House<sup>12</sup>. If there is no time for the Committee to meet and consider the proposal, fixation is done by the Speaker after taking sense of the House.

The Lok Sabha observes all the closed holidays which are observed by the Government of India. In addition, Raksha Bandhan, Maha Shivratri, May Day (1 May), Vaisakhi, Guru Ravidas's birthday, Ramnavami and birth anniversary of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar are also observed as holidays for Lok Sabha<sup>13</sup>. In fixing the sittings, no note is taken of the other restricted holidays under the Government of India<sup>14</sup>. Whenever any ad hoc holiday is declared by the Government of India during a session, the question of declaring it a holiday for Lok Sabha is considered by the Speaker keeping in view the occasion for which that day has been declared a holiday<sup>15</sup>.

In case it is decided to observe any such day as a holiday for Lok Sabha also, then a sitting of the House in lieu thereof may be fixed on any other day of the week on which no sitting has already been fixed.

In special cases a sitting of the House may be fixed on a holiday<sup>16</sup>.

Sometimes, sittings of the House are extended beyond the last date fixed for a session<sup>17</sup>. This extension is always done after the actual commencement of the session. A proposal in this regard is submitted by the Leader of the House to the Speaker. It is then placed by the Speaker before the Business

For instance the Government of India declared that all their offices in the Union territory of Delhi would remain closed on 20 March 1958 to enable the Government employees to serve as presiding and polling officers in connection with the elections to the Delhi Municipal Corporation on that day. The sitting of Lok Sabha provisionally fixed for that day was not cancelled as it was not a general holiday for a festival.

The information is simultaneously published in Bulletin for information of members.

A sitting may also be cancelled. The need to cancel a sitting may arise when there is no business to transact or the Government feel that the scheduled Government business will be completed in advance of the last date fixed for the session, or due to any other reason<sup>21</sup>. The Speaker has the power to decide whether the House shall

On 6 February 1952, just before 1700 hours, when the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections Bill was being debated, the Prime Minister informed the House of the death of King George VI and suggested that the sitting of the House fixed for the following day, i.e. 7 February 1952, might be cancelled. The Speaker agreed to the suggestion—P. Deb.(II), 6-2-1952, c. 96.

As a large number of items had been disposed of on 10 September 1957 before the scheduled time, the Speaker announced the cancellation of the sitting fixed earlier for 14 September 1957—L.S. Deb., 10-9-1957, cc. 12987-88.

The Minister of Parliamentary Affairs made a suggestion regarding cancellation of the sitting of the House fixed for 12 April 1976, on account of Mahavir Jayanti. The House agreed—L.S. Deb., 8-4-1976, c. 98.

The Eighth Session of the Seventh Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 6 May 1982.

Lok Sabha, however, adjourned sine die on 30 April 1982 and sittings fixed on 3, 4, 5 and 6 May 1982 were cancelled—Bn. (II), 30-4-1982, Para 1622.

The Second part of the Fourteenth Session of the Eighth Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 16 October 1989. The Lok Sabha however, adjourned sine die on 13 October 1989 and sitting fixed for 16 October 1989 was treated as cancelled.

The Seventh Session of the Ninth Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 10 May 1991. The Lok Sabha, however, adjourned sine die on 12 March 1991—[F. No. 37/1 (VII)/91/7]. The Tenth Session of the Tenth Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 16 June 1994. The Lok Sabha, however, adjourned sine die on 14 June 1994 and sittings fixed for 15 and 16 June 1994 stood cancelled. [F. No. 37/1(X)/94/T].

The First Session of the Eleventh Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 31 May 1996. The Lok Sabha, however, adjourned sine die on 28 May 1996 and sittings fixed for 30 and 31 May 1996 stood cancelled. [F. No. 37/1(I)/96/T].

The Sixth Session of the Eleventh Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 19 December 1997. The Lok Sabha, however, adjourned sine die on 2 December 1997 following resignation of the Prime Minister.

or shall not sit on any day for Government business. A sitting of the House fixed for a particular day during a session may be cancelled even before the commencement of that session and a new sitting fixed in lieu thereof<sup>22</sup>. When a sitting is cancelled, an announcement is made by the Speaker in the House and a paragraph is published in the Bulletin<sup>23</sup>. In cases where it is not possible to do both, only an announcement in the House or a paragraph in the Bulletin is considered sufficient.

The last two and a half hours of a sitting on Friday, and if Friday happens to be a holiday, then on any other day in the week, are allotted for the transaction of Private Members' Business<sup>24</sup>.

Hour of Commencement

Sittings of the House, unless the Speaker otherwise directs, ordinarily commence at 1100 hours<sup>25</sup> and the normal hours of sittings are from 1100 hours to 1300 hours and from 1400 hours to 1800 hours leaving one hour from 1300 hours to 1400 hours as lunch break<sup>26</sup>. However, there have been occasions when the House continued to sit during the lunch hour to provide additional time for transaction of Government and other business. During the Budget sessions, usually from the time the Demands for Grants are taken up and to the passage of the Finance Bill, the lunch hour is suspended to make available more time for discussion on financial business, on the recommendation made by the Business Advisory Committee and agreed to by the House<sup>27</sup>.

The Eleventh Session of the Fourteenth Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 14 September 2007. Lok Sabha was, however, adjourned sine die on 10 September 2007 and sittings fixed for subsequent days i.e. 11, 12, 13 and 14 September 2007 were treated as cancelled.

The Thirteenth Session of the Fourteenth Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 9 May 2008. Lok Sabha was, however, adjourned sine die on 5 May 2008 and sittings fixed for subsequent days i.e. 6, 7, 8 and 9 May 2008 were treated as cancelled.

The Third Session of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 21 December 2009. Lok Sabha was, however, adjourned sine die on 18 December 2009 and sitting fixed for Monday, the 21 December 2009 stood cancelled. [F. No. 37/1(III)/2009/T]

The Thirteenth Session of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha was scheduled to conclude on 10 May 2013, Lok Sabha was, however, adjourned sine die on 8 May 2013 and sitting fixed for 9 and 10 May 2013 stood cancelled. [F.No. 37/1(XIII)/2013/T]

22. A sitting of the House already fixed for 23 July 1956 was cancelled on 30 June 1956 whereas the session for which that sitting was earlier fixed was to commence on 16 July 1956. A new sitting in lieu thereof was fixed for 28 July 1956—see Bn. (II), 30-6-1956, Paras 3336 and 3337.

Members are informed of the normal hour of commencement and of conclusion of the sittings pertaining to a session through Bulletin along with information on various matters connected with the commencement of the session. As to the hour of commencement of a sitting from day-to-day, the Speaker, while adjourning the House for the day, also announces the date and hour of commencement of the next sitting. This is also indicated in the relevant Bulletin and, the proceedings of the House for the day.

The hour of commencement of a sitting has been varied according to circumstances under the directions of the Speaker<sup>28</sup>.

In the First Lok Sabha, different hours for the commencement of the sittings of the House were experimented varying from 08.15 hours to 14.00 hours even though the Rules provided for 10.45 hours<sup>29</sup>. The new hours of commencement were found to entail difficulties in finding more time on a day in case it was necessary to do so for disposing of a larger volume of business. Accordingly, in 1954, Speaker Mavalankar, with the concurrence of the members and Leader of the House made an announcement that the House would sit from 11.00 hours to 17.00 hours without break with effect from 10 September 1954<sup>30</sup>. In 1956, the relevant rule was also brought in conformity with the existing practice. Since September 1954, there has been no change in the hour of commencement of the sittings except on rare occasions. The hours of sittings of the House were, however, changed w.e.f. 27 March 1967. On 23 March 1967, the Speaker informed the House that at a meeting which he held with Leaders of Opposition Groups and the Minister of State for Parliamentary Affairs on 21 March 1967, it was unanimously decided that the House should have a lunch break from 13.00 hours to 14.00 hours and that consequently the revised hours of sittings should be from 11.00 hours to 13.00 hours and 14.00 hours to 18.00 hours. However, the timing of sittings of the House was fixed from 10.30 hours to 18.30 hours w.e.f. 8 May 1979 till the conclusion of the session i.e. 18 May 1979<sup>31</sup>.

In exceptional circumstances, the hour of commencement of the sitting may be changed<sup>32</sup>. Such a change may be effected either on the request of members wishing

28. Rule 12.

29. From 1920 to 1948, the hour of commencement of the sitting, provided in the Rules, was 1100 hours when it was changed to 10.45 hours—see Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in the Constituent Assembly (Legislative), Rule 12.

30. See L.S. Deb., 8-9-1954, cc. 1248-52. The Rule relating to the hour of commencement of the sitting was, however, amended in 1956—See Min.(RC), 14-12-1956, para 5; Bn.(II), 24-12-1956, para 3935, and L.S. Notfn. No. 715-C1/56, 24-12-1956, Gaz. Ex. (1-1), 24-12-1956.

32. On the evening of 3 December 1971, Pakistan attacked India. On 4 December 1971, the Speaker informed the House that he had agreed to the proposals arrived at a meeting held by the Prime Minister with Leaders of Opposition Groups that with effect from Monday, 6 December 1971, till the end of the session, (i) Lok Sabha would sit from 10.00 to 13.00 hours; and (ii) there would be no Question Hour and Calling Attention matters. The above decision remained in force till the termination of the session on 23 December 1971.—L.S. Deb., 4-12-1971, cc. 163-64; Bn. (II), 4-12-1971, para 455.

to take part in some religious festival<sup>33</sup>, or other important functions though this request is not always acceded to<sup>34</sup>, or in pursuance of the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee to provide for more time for the discussion and disposal of certain items of business<sup>35</sup>. The change in the duration of a sitting of the House is made either on the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee adopted by the House or by an announcement by the Speaker in the House. After the report of the Business Advisory Committee has been adopted or the announcement by the Speaker has been made, as the case may be, a paragraph is also published in the Bulletin informing members of the changed hours<sup>36</sup>.

The sitting of Lok Sabha on a day on which the President addresses both the Houses assembled together commences half-an-hour after the President's Address.

In exceptional cases, the hour of commencement of a sitting on a day may be fixed ad hoc, keeping in view the nature of the business to be transacted on that day<sup>37</sup>.

The scheduled hour of commencement of the sitting is not changed on account of the visit of a foreign dignitary or a function arranged in that connection<sup>38</sup>.

Commencement of a Sitting

A sitting of the House is duly constituted when it is presided over by the Speaker or any other member competent to preside over a sitting of the House under the Constitution or the Rules<sup>39</sup>. It is, therefore, necessary that the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker or a member of the Panel of Chairmen presides over the House at the hour fixed for the commencement of a sitting and also so long as the sitting lasts. If no such person is present, such other person as may be determined by the House can act as Speaker<sup>40</sup>.

Presence of Ministers is not necessary for constituting a sitting of the House<sup>41</sup>.

The assembly of the two Houses of Parliament to hear the President's Address does not constitute a sitting of the House or a joint sitting of the two Houses as it is not presided over by the Speaker<sup>42</sup>.

Before the Speaker or any other person competent to preside over the House takes the Chair at the commencement of a sitting, it is ensured that there is quorum in the House. If there is no quorum, the bell is rung and the commencement of the sitting is delayed by such time as is taken in making the quorum<sup>43</sup>.

On 24 November 1977, after the House agreed, a member (C.M. Stephen) presided over the sitting for some time as no member of the Panel of Chairmen or Deputy Speaker was available to relieve the Speaker—L.S. Deb., 24-11-1977, cc. 314-24.

On 11 August 1982, the House agreed to a suggestion of the Deputy Speaker that a member (Rattan Singh Rajda) might take the Chair for some time, as no member of the Panel of Chairmen was available in the House to relieve him—L.S. Deb., 11-8-1982, c. 535.

On 3 March 1984 a member (M.C. Daga), relieved the Speaker as neither the Deputy Speaker nor any member of Panel of Chairmen was available in the House—L.S. Deb., 3-3-1984, cc. 3058, 82 and 97.

M.C. Daga relieved the Deputy Speaker as no member of the Panel of Chairmen was available in the House—L.S. Deb., 8-5-1984 at about 20.35 hours; 13-12-1985 at about 15.55 hours and 17-11-1986 at about 15.57 hours.

On 10 March 2008, Chairman (Varkala Radhakrishnan) who was in Chair, suggested that as no member of Panel of Chairmen was available, C.K. Chandrappan, member, might preside for some time. House agreed. Accordingly, C.K. Chandrappan presided over the sitting from 20.58 hours till 21.07 hours, when a member of Panel of Chairmen (Varkala Radhakrishnan) relieved him.—*L.S. At the commencement of a sitting<sup>44</sup>, the Speaker or, in his absence, any other Presiding Officer enters the Chamber from the room of the Speaker which is just behind the Speaker's Chair, preceded by the Marshal who announces the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker or the Presiding Officer, as the case may be in Hindi.

On hearing the announcement, members proceed to their seats and remain standing there. Officers at the Table and Reporters also stand in their places. The visitors in the Galleries, however, keep sitting. The atmosphere of the House at once undergoes a change upon the arrival of the Speaker. He proceeds to his Chair on the dais, bows to all sides of the House—first to the left, then to the right and thereafter to the front—and then takes his seat<sup>45</sup>. Members also respond by bowing to the Chair and take their seats as soon as the Speaker occupies the Chair. Other members who may be in the process of entering the Chamber wait in the gangway near the door and proceed to their seats only after the Speaker has taken his seat. With the Speaker in the Chair the sitting of the House commences. Immediately on taking the Chair the Speaker proceeds with the business for the day as entered in the List of Business.

The same procedure is followed if the House re-assembles after a short adjournment during the course of a sitting.

Quorum during the Sitting

The quorum to constitute a sitting of the House is one-tenth of the total number of members of the House. If at any time during a sitting of the House there is no quorum, it is the duty of the Speaker or the person acting as such, either to adjourn the House or suspend the sitting until there is quorum<sup>46</sup>.

The Speaker presumes that there is quorum throughout a sitting until his attention is invited to the lack of quorum. In such a case the bell is rung and if the House is made within the first ringing of the bell, or if necessary, after the second ringing of the bell, as the Speaker may direct, the business of the House proceeds; otherwise, the Speaker adjourns the House for lack of quorum<sup>47</sup>.

15-3-2012, 19-3-2012, 22-3-2012, 25-4-2012, 30-4-2012, 2-5-2012, 3-5-2012, 4-5-2012, 9-5-2012, 15-5-2012, 16-5-2012, 17-5-2012, 18-5-2012, 21-5-2012, 9-8-2012, 14-8-2012, 17-8-2012, 30-11-2012, 7-12-2012, 10-12-2012, 18-12-2012, 22-2-2013 and 26-2-2013. There have been occasions when the quorum bell had to be rung before the commencement of a sitting but there has not been any instance when a sitting could not commence for lack of quorum.

44. See fn. 34, Chapter XII on Conduct of Members regarding playing of the National Anthem (Jana Gana Mana) and the National Song (Vande Mataram).

45. However, in practice nowadays, the Presiding Officers have been seen greeting the House with folded hands.

46. The Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976, inter alia omitted the provisions relating to quorum in article 100 and amended article 118(1) enabling each House to make suitable Rules in that regard. However, the relevant provisions were omitted by the Constitution (Forty-fourth Amendment) Act, 1978.

47. There have been a few instances when the House was adjourned by the Chair for lack of quorum L.S. Deb., 5-4-1963, c. 8104 and 9-4-1963, c. 8856.

For instance, on 31 July 2009 (Second Session, Fifteenth Lok Sabha), the House adjourned for the day for want of quorum – L.S. Deb., 31-7-2009, c. 134.

There have been occasions, though very rare, when the quorum bell was rung third time in a row and the House was made after the third ringing of the quorum bell<sup>48</sup>.

Objection to lack of quorum once raised by a member cannot be withdrawn by him<sup>49</sup>. It becomes the duty of the Speaker to act in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution once his attention has been drawn to the lack of quorum.

During the period the quorum bell is ringing, the proceedings stand suspended and remain so suspended till the House is made.

When the House used to sit continuously without any lunch-break, a convention had developed that during the lunch hour, i.e. between 13.00 hours and 14.30 hours, the House would not be counted and any matter which had to be decided on a division during this time would be postponed till after 14.30 hours<sup>50</sup>. A voice vote was, however, taken during this time but if it was challenged no count was taken till after 14.30 hours<sup>51</sup>. But in case a division was in progress at 13.00 hours, it was to continue and conclude<sup>52</sup>. On a number of occasions, division was postponed till after 14.30 hours<sup>53</sup>, but there were instances when divisions were held between 13.00 hours and 14.30 hours with the unanimous consent of all parties and members<sup>54</sup>.

Owing to persistent objections raised by some members from time to time, this convention was not observed on many occasions and if objection to the lack of quorum was raised, the Chair acted as it would at any other time of the day<sup>55</sup>.

48. On 19 November 1987, during discussion on a bill at about 1725 hours, a member raised the question of quorum. The bell had to be rung thrice till the House was made at 1734 hours.

Similarly, on 20 November 1987, 8 August 1994, 19 May 1995 and 6 September 1996 after the lunch interval, bell had to be rung three times till the House was made at 1408 hours, 1425 hours, 14.45 hours and 1426 hours, respectively.

Further instances when quorum bell was rung third time in a row and the House was made after the third ringing of the quorum bell : 29-11-1991, 13-12-1991, 7-5-1993, 26-7-1993, 30-7-1993, 6-8-1993, 16-8-1993, 18-8-1993, 23-8-1993, 11-12-1993, 22-2-1994, 25-4-1994, 3-5-1994, 12-5-1994, 26-7-1994, 4-8-1994, 16-8-1994, 15-3-1995, 20-3-1995, 22-3-1995, 24-3-1995, 2-5-1995, 18-5-1995, 22-5-1995, 26-5-1995, 29-5-1995, 1-6-1995, 6-9-1996, 11-9-1996; 28-11-1996, 29-11-1996, 21-2-1997, 28-2-1997, 3-3-1997, 10-3-1997, 15-3-1997, 17-3-1997, 30-4-1997, 2-5-1997, 5-5-1997, 8-5-1997, 12-5-1997, 13-5-1997, 14-5-1997, 15-5-1997, 8-8-1997, 29-8-1997, 18-12-1997, 5-5-2000, 24-11-2000, 3-8-2001, 3-12-2004, 10-12-2004, 4-8-2005 & 12-8-2005, 9-11-2005, 24-2-2006, 12-5-2006, 19-5-2006, 24-11-2006, 16-3-2007, 22-11-2007, 23-11-2007. 30-11-2012 and 22-2-2013.

As stated earlier, the House now adjourns for lunch for one hour. There was another convention in regard to drawing the attention of the Chair to the lack of quorum in the House:

The House was not counted within one hour of the count having been taken as also during the time when the House sat beyond the normal hours<sup>56</sup>; but when the House had to take decision on any matter, quorum was necessary even during the extended time<sup>57</sup>.

At times, objections were taken by members in the House about the convention of not counting the House within one hour of the count<sup>58</sup> or of not challenging quorum when debate was extended beyond the normal hours of sittings<sup>59</sup>. There were also occasions when members did not follow the convention and drew the attention of the Chair to the lack of quorum within one hour of the count having been taken or when the House was sitting beyond the normal hours, and the Chair had to adjourn the House for some time<sup>60</sup> or for the rest of the day if the House could not be made<sup>61</sup>.

Adjournment of the House

Unless the Speaker otherwise directs, sitting of the House on any day ordinarily concludes at 1800 hours<sup>62</sup>. The sitting does not, however, conclude automatically nor is any motion adopted for its conclusion<sup>63</sup>. The House stands adjourned and the sitting on a day is terminated only when the Presiding Officer makes the announcement in the House to that effect<sup>64</sup>.

62. Rule 12, L.S. Deb., 23-3-1967, cc. 762-63.

On 9 March 1982 on a request by several members, the House was adjourned at 1725 hours in connection with 'Holi Festival' on 10 March 1982—L.S. Deb., 9-3-1982, cc. 423, 427-28.

The House was adjourned on 29 January 1976 and 29 January 1985 at 1600 hours to enable members to witness the 'Beating Retreat' ceremony—L.S. Deb., 29-1-1976, c. 262; 29-1-1985, c. 102.

On the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee, Lok Sabha agreed that the House might be adjourned at 17.00 hours on 27 November 1986 in order to enable the members to attend the Address by General Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union on that day—31R (BAC-8LS), Bn.(II), 26-11-1986, para 1393.

On 30 April 1990, the House was adjourned at 1742 hours to enable members to participate in the address by the Prime Minister of Japan in the Central Hall. On 4 December 2003, members desired that the House might be adjourned early to enable them to listen to results of elections to five State Legislative Assemblies. Accordingly, the House was adjourned for the day at 1246 hrs.—L.S. Deb., 4-12-2003, cc. 402-04.

During the course of a session, Lok Sabha may be adjourned<sup>65</sup> from time to time, day-to-day, or for more than a day, or sine die<sup>66</sup>. As a normal parliamentary practice, it is the House which has to determine by its own decision on a motion moved to that effect as to when it should adjourn or whether it should adjourn to a fixed date or sine die. With a view to abridging the process of moving a motion and the discussion thereon, the rules of Lok Sabha have vested the authority in the Speaker. The power of the Speaker is, however, limited in the sense that he either adjourns the House at a fixed hour, or at such other hour under some rule or convention, or as he may determine after taking the sense of the House, and he adjourns it from day-to-day according to the Calendar of Sittings issued at the beginning of a session. If any variation is required in this, the matter has to be decided by the House on a motion made on behalf of the Leader of the House. The Speaker may also, if he thinks fit, call a sitting of the House before the date or hour to which it has been adjourned or at any time after the House has been adjourned sine die<sup>67</sup>.

When the motion “That the House do now adjourn” is being discussed, that is, from the hour the discussion on an adjournment motion has commenced to the time the motion is disposed of, the Speaker cannot adjourn the House

65. At 1110 hours on 6 September 1974, the Speaker adjourned the House till 1215 hours to enable the members of the Business Advisory Committee and Leaders of Parties and Groups to attend an urgent sitting of the Business Advisory Committee (BAC).

At 1220 hours, the Secretary-General announced that as the sitting of the BAC was still going on, the Speaker had directed that the House would re-assemble at 1245 hours—L.S. Deb., 6-9-1974, c. 4.

On 17 November 1987, owing to pandemonium in the House, the Speaker adjourned the House at 1240 hrs. till 1400 hours. At 14.00 hours, the Secretary-General announced that the Speaker had directed that the House would remain adjourned till 1430 hours—L.S. Deb., 17-11-1987, c. 430.

66. L.S. Deb., 5-9-1974, cc. 1-31.

67. Rule 15. There have been two instances so far where a sitting adjourned by the Speaker to a particular day and time has been called before that date or time. For details, see Chapter IX under the heading Summoning of Parliament.

The House, after being adjourned sine die, was re-convened after a gap of two and a half months.

The Eighth and Fourteenth Sessions of the Eighth Lok Sabha, the Third Session of the Ninth Lok Sabha, the First Session of the Eleventh Lok Sabha, the Fourteenth Session of Thirteenth Lok Sabha and the Seventh Session of Fourteenth Lok Sabha comprised two parts each as indicated below:

for the day because during that time it is the House which has to take a decision on its adjournment. However, the discussion may be interrupted by lunch break and disposal of formal items such as laying of Papers<sup>68</sup>. The Speaker cannot also postpone the voting to the next sitting even if a request is made to him to that effect. The motion has to be disposed of before the House is adjourned for the day. In case the motion is adopted, the House automatically stands adjourned in pursuance of the adoption of the motion. If the motion is negatived, discussion on the business which had been interrupted by the adjournment motion is resumed or the next item on the Agenda taken up for a short while and then the House is adjourned by the Speaker for the day. When the motion is withdrawn by leave of the House, the House may be adjourned without resuming further business if it is time for the House to have adjourned in the normal course<sup>69</sup>.

In the case of extension of the duration of a sitting, consent of the House is taken by the Speaker on the recommendation of the Business Advisory Committee who first consider the suggestion of the Government in this regard and make a report to the House<sup>70</sup>. If there is no time to convene a sitting of the Business Advisory Committee for the purpose, then the Speaker makes an announcement in the House and takes its consent.

The adjournment of the House by the Speaker under wrong assumption may be questioned in a court of law.

If the Legislative Assembly of a State is adjourned by the Speaker and in the meantime the Governor prorogues the Assembly and resums it to meet on a particular day after the issue of an Ordinance to regulate the financial procedure, the Speaker's action in adjourning the Assembly afresh without taking the mandate of the Assembly by majority as required by the Ordinance or declaring that the former adjournment continues to operate, is null and void and of no effect. The ruling of the Speaker adjourning the Assembly afresh in these circumstances being based on wrong assumption can be called in question in a court of law<sup>71</sup>.

Adjournment before normal hour: If the business entered in the Agenda for the day is completed earlier, the House adjourns for the day at that hour<sup>72</sup>.

On the day on which the President addresses both Houses of Parliament assembled together in the Central Hall, the House sits in its own Chamber half-an-hour after the conclusion of the Address. At this sitting, a copy of the President's Address is laid on the Table and certain other formal business, viz., introduction of Government Bills, laying of papers on the Table, etc., is transacted. Thereafter, the House normally adjourns for the rest of the day<sup>73</sup>.

Earlier, when the General Budget was presented at 1700 hours on the day appointed for the purpose, the House normally adjourned for one hour at 1600 hours and then reassembled at 1700 hours when the Budget was presented<sup>74</sup>. From the year 2001 onwards as per the suggestion of the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, the General Budget is being presented at 1100 hours on the last day of the month of February. No other business is transacted on that day. A footnote to this effect is appended in the Provisional Calendar of sittings.

If death of a member occurs in the House during the course of a sitting or a member passes away in New Delhi while the House is sitting, the House adjourns for the day.

However, during the Fifteenth Lok Sabha, the Speaker took a decision in a meeting with Leaders to adjourn the House on the Opening day after the inter-session period, if a sitting member has expired during that inter-session period. In certain cases the House has also adjourned on the demise of the head of a friendly foreign State or some outstanding person, at the request of the Leader of the House<sup>75</sup>.

On several other occasions also, the Speaker has adjourned the House earlier than the scheduled hour to meet either after a short interval on the same day or at the scheduled hour of commencement of the sitting on the next day<sup>76</sup>.

The House may also adjourn early on account of lack of quorum<sup>77</sup>.

In the case of a grave disorder arising in the House, the Speaker may, if he thinks it necessary to do so, adjourn the House or suspend any sitting to a later hour to be specified by him<sup>78</sup>.

73. However, on 18 March 1967, the House did not adjourn but took up for consideration the motion of no-confidence in the Council of Ministers. For details, see Chapter X under the head "Laying of a copy of the Address on the Table".

74. On 20 March 1967, the General Budget was to be presented at 1700 hours. However, at 1701 hours, division on no-confidence motion was in progress. After division and disposal of the motion, House adjourned at 1710 hours for 10 minutes and re-assembled at 1720 hours when the General Budget for 1967-68 was presented L.S. Deb., 20-3-1967, c. 424.

On 28 March 1977, the interim General Budget for 1977-78 was presented at 12.59 hours and the House did not adjourn for interval before presentation of the Budget. After its discussion for two days, a Vote on Account for four months was approved by the House.

At the meeting of the Speaker with Leaders of Parties and Groups held on 21 February 1991, it was decided that before the General Budget was presented, the House might be adjourned for a brief interval of one hour (instead of half-an-hour) from 1991 onwards to give sufficient time to conduct security checks in various Galleries of the Lok Sabha Chamber.

Normally, it is not the practice to adjourn the House earlier than the scheduled time on account of the visit of a foreign dignitary or function arranged in that connection or any other function<sup>79</sup> but there have been occasions when the time of conclusion of a sitting was advanced with the consent of the House itself<sup>80</sup>.

Adjournment after scheduled hour: If there is a half-an-hour discussion fixed for a day it is taken up at 17.30 hours<sup>81</sup>. In case it is decided to sit beyond the normal hours on a particular day and if any half-an-hour discussion is also to be taken up on that day, then the sitting is extended further for half-an-hour<sup>82</sup>. During the Budget session till the disposal of urgent financial business, half-an-hour-discussions are usually taken up at 18.00 hours<sup>83</sup>.

On the day on which an adjournment motion on a matter of public importance is discussed or a no-day-yet-named motion or a discussion of short duration is included in the List of Business, the House may sit beyond the normal hours of sitting.

Owing to pressure of work, the House has on many occasions extended its sitting beyond the normal hour of adjournment<sup>84</sup>.

The longest sitting of the First Lok Sabha was on 30 May 1956, when it sat for ten and a half hours from 1000 hours to 2030 hours without any break.

In the Third Lok Sabha, the longest sitting was on 6 September 1966, for eleven hours and five minutes from 1100 hours to 2300 hours with a break from 20.35 hours to 21.30 hours.

In the Fourth Lok Sabha, the longest sitting was on 24 March 1970 for eleven hours and thirty-two minutes from 1100 hours to 2232 hours without any break.

In the Fifth Lok Sabha, the longest sitting was on 9 May 1974, for thirteen hours and fifty minutes from 1100 hours to 0130 hours (10 May 1974), with a break from 14.10 hours to 14.50 hours.

In the Sixth Lok Sabha, the longest sitting was on 23 December 1977 for 12 hours and 5 minutes from 1100 hours to 2305 hours without lunch-break. (Discussion under Rule 193).

In the Seventh Lok Sabha, the longest sitting was on 15 September 1981 for sixteen hours and 58 minutes from 1100 hours to 0358 hours (16 September 1981) without lunch-break.

(Consideration and passing of Essential Services Maintenance Bill, 1981).

In the Eighth Lok Sabha, the longest sitting was on 5 May 1986 for fifteen hours and 48 minutes from 1100 hours to 0248 hours (6 May 1986) with lunch break from 1337 hours to 1442 hours.

[Consideration and passing of the Muslim Women (Protection of Rights of Divorce) Bill, 1986.]

In the Tenth Lok Sabha, the longest sitting was on 30 March 1993 for nineteen hours and 24 minutes from 1101 hours to 0625 hours (31 March 1993) with lunch break from 1345 hours to 1434 hours. [General Discussion on the Budget (Railways) for 1993-94].

It is not necessary to adopt any motion for the extension of a sitting; however, when extension is recommended by the Business Advisory Committee<sup>85</sup>, the House agrees with the report of the Committee on a motion adopted by the House. There has been an occasion when on private members' day the sitting was extended upon a specific motion adopted by the House to enable the next resolution to be moved<sup>86</sup>.

Members have objected to the extension of a sitting beyond the normal hours, and the Speaker has also agreed sometimes with them<sup>87</sup>; but it has not been possible to avoid altogether the extension of hours of sittings. During the Budget Session, it has almost become a practice to extend the hours of sittings in order to provide more time for the discussion of the Budget.

Adjournment sine die: On the last sitting of a session, the Speaker adjourns the House sine die.

Secret Sitting of the House

On a request made by the Leader of the House, the Speaker may fix a day or part thereof for sitting of the House in secret<sup>88</sup>.

When the House sits in secret no stranger is permitted to be present in the Chamber, Lobby or Galleries except the members of Rajya Sabha who may be present in their Gallery and the persons authorised by the Speaker who may be present in the Chamber, Lobby or Galleries<sup>89</sup>.

In the Eleventh Lok Sabha, the longest sitting was on 30 August 1997 for twenty-one hours and sixteen minutes from 1108 hours to 824 hours (31 August 1997) with a lunch break in between from 1355 hours to 1503 hours.

In the Twelfth Lok Sabha, the longest sitting was on 8 June, 1998 for nineteen hours and four minutes from 1100 hours to 604 hours (9 June, 1998) with a lunch break in between, in connection with discussion on Budget (Railways) for 1998-99.

In the Thirteenth Lok Sabha, the longest sitting was on 30 April 2002 for seventeen hours and twenty five minutes from 1100 hours to 425 hours (1 May 2002) without lunch-break. (Discussion under Rule 184).

In the Fourteenth Lok Sabha, the longest sitting was on 20 July 2004 for thirteen hours and thirty-three minutes from 1100 hours to 0053 hours (21 July 2004) with a break from 1140 hours to 1200 hours, in connection with General discussion and voting on the Budget (General) for 2004-2005, Demands for Grants on Account (General) for 2004-2005 and Demands for Excess Grants (General) for 2001-2002. In the Fifteenth Lok Sabha, on 27 December 2011, the House sat for twelve hours nineteen minutes from 1121 hours to 2353 hours in connection with combined discussion on the Lokpal and Lokayuktas Bill, 2011 (Insertion of new Part XIV B) and the Public Interest Disclosure and Protection to Persons Making the Disclosures Bill, 2010.

85. For instance, extension was recommended by the Committee in these reports: 22R, 24R, 26R, 27R (BAC-1LS); 1R, 3R, 8R, 9R, 15R, 37R, 52R, 62R, 63R, 65R, (BAC-2LS); 1R, 2R, 6R, 10R (BAC-3LS); 28R, 32R, (BAC-5LS); 5R(BAC-6LS); 1R, 12R, 21R (BAC-8LS); 12R, 17R (BAC-9LS); 4R, 6R, 14R, 17R, 24R(BAC-10LS); 4R, 6R, 12R (BAC-13LS) and 12R, 29R (BAC-14LS); 21 R, 33R (15LS).

A secret sitting has so far been held only once on 27 February 1942, in the Central Legislative Assembly<sup>90</sup>. Following a written representation by a large number of members, the Leader of the House, on 23 February 1942, made a request to the Speaker of the Assembly to fix 27 February 1942, as the day for a secret sitting of the Assembly to discuss the war situation.

After taking the pleasure of the House, the Speaker announced that all the Galleries except the Gallery for the Council of States would be cleared on the appointed day and directed that the proceedings of the secret sitting will not be taken down, recorded or published<sup>91</sup>.

The following announcement was made by the Speaker of the Central Legislative Assembly before the motion to discuss the war situation was moved on 27 February 1942:

Before I call upon Mr. Aney to move the motion which stands in his name, I ought to make it quite clear that the further proceedings of the House will be in secret session. Therefore, all the Galleries excepting those occupied by the members of the Council of States will be cleared<sup>92</sup>.

Apart from the members of the two Houses, the only persons allowed to remain in the Assembly Chamber during the sitting were the Secretary, the Deputy Secretary and the Assistant Secretary of the Assembly and the Marshal.

The Speaker causes a report of the proceedings of a secret sitting to be issued in such manner as he thinks fit, but no other person present can keep a note or record of any proceedings or decisions of a secret sitting, whether in part or full, or issue any report of or purport to describe such proceedings<sup>93</sup>.

90. However, on 21 December 1946, the Constituent Assembly of India considered the Procedure Committee's Report by going into Committee and holding its proceedings in camera. The Assembly met again on the following day in camera to continue discussion on the draft rules framed by the Procedure Committee—Indian Annual Register, Ed. N.P. Mitra, Calcutta, 1946, Vol. II, p. 360. On 22 and 24 January 1947, the estimates of expenditure of the Constituent Assembly for the years 1946-47 and 1947-48 were also discussed by the House going into Committee—Ibid., 1947, vol. 1, pp. 311 and 314.

91. L.A. Deb., 23-2-1942, p. 405.

92. In pursuance of the direction, all Galleries and Lobbies were cleared of strangers and all doors leading to the various Galleries were securely bolted and locked. The Official Gallery and the Governor-General's Box were also cleared and locked. The door leading to the Council of State Gallery was closed but not locked and one member of the Watch and Ward staff was posted outside the door to admit members of that Chamber only. As regards the members' Lobby, no person, whether holding a Lobby pass or a session card was admitted; only the members of either Chamber of the Central Legislature were allowed. All doors leading to the members' Lobby were bolted and locked with the exception of one door which was closed but not locked and the Watch and Ward Officer was posted to sit outside the door to control the entry of members into the Lobby and the Chamber during the discussion of this motion. After all these precautions had been taken and a thorough search of the Chamber's Galleries and the Lobbies had been made by the Watch and Ward staff, the Watch and Ward Officer entered the Chamber and informed the Secretary who thereupon informed the Speaker that all the Galleries and the Lobbies had been cleared of strangers. The Watch and Ward Officer then went out and the Speaker called upon Mr. Aney, the Leader of the House, to move the motion standing in his name—L.A. Deb., 27-2-1942, pp. 617-18.

93. Rule 249.

No record of the proceedings of the secret sitting held on 27 February 1942 was prepared and published. For purposes of record, the only report which under the orders of the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly was printed in the debates was as follows:

“The remainder of the sitting was in secret session and the Assembly discussed the following motion moved by the honourable Mr. M.S. Aney:

‘That the war situation be taken into consideration’<sup>94</sup>.

The procedure in all other respects in connection with a secret sitting is in accordance with such directions as the Speaker may give<sup>95</sup>.

When it is considered that the necessity for maintaining secrecy in regard to the proceedings of a secret sitting has ceased to exist subject to the consent of the Speaker, a motion may be moved by the Leader of the House or any member authorised by him that the proceedings in the House during a secret sitting be no longer treated as secret. On adoption by the House of such a motion, the Secretary-General causes a report of the proceedings of the secret sitting to be prepared and, as soon as practicable, to be published in such form and manner as the Speaker may direct<sup>96</sup>.

Subject to what has been stated above, disclosure of proceedings or decisions of a secret sitting by any person in any manner is treated as a gross breach of privilege of the House<sup>97</sup>.

In regard to the disclosure of the proceedings or decisions of the secret sitting of the Central Legislative Assembly held on 27 February 1942, the Government of India had, in advance, by an amendment of rule 34 of the

95. Rule 250.

The following procedure was laid down in connection with the secret session of the Central Legislative Assembly held on 27 February 1942:

In case there was a division, two tellers from the Notice Office would attend but they were to clear out after the result of the division was announced by the Chair.

Official Reporters were to leave the Chamber as soon as the Speaker would direct that the Galleries be cleared as no record of the proceedings of the secret session was to be published.

A letter was to be sent to the Secretary of the Council of State informing him of the decision to hold the secret session on 27 February 1942, and intimating him that the Gallery of the Council of State would remain open for the use of those members of the Council of State who might like to hear the discussion. He was also to be requested to issue a circular letter to the members of the Council of State informing them of the fact and also impressing upon them the necessity of keeping the proceedings secret. (The members of the Council of State were subsequently allowed by the Speaker to occupy the Public Gallery on this occasion)

A letter was also sent to the Military Secretary to the Viceroy informing him that the Governor-General's Box would remain closed during the discussion of the motion.

96. Rule 251.

On 27 February 1942, after the motion regarding the war situation was discussed in secret sitting, the House adjourned. No motion was moved at any subsequent sitting of the House that the proceedings in the House during the secret sitting be no longer treated as secret.

97. Rule 252.

Defence of India Rules, 1939, made the publication or divulging of the proceedings of any secret meeting of either Chamber of the Indian Legislature a penal offence punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to five years (or with fine or with both), vide rules 34(2)(a) and 38 (5) of the Defence of India Rules, 1939. A similar provision was also made in the Defence of India Rules, 1962, for any secret meeting of Parliament, vide rules 35(2)(1) and 41(5) of the Defence of India Rules, 1962.

CHAPTER XVIII

Arrangement of Business and List of Business

Parliamentary business can be divided into two broad headings, viz. Government business and Private Members' business. Government business may be further sub-divided into two categories: (A) Items of business initiated by the Government; and (B) Items of business initiated by private members but taken up in Government time.

Government Business

(A) ITEMS OF BUSINESS INITIATED BY GOVERNMENT

Items of business initiated by Government are divisible into various forms. A brief account of these forms follows:

(i) Papers Laid on the Table

Ministers lay documents and papers on the Table under the relevant provisions of the Constitution, various enactments, Rules of Procedure or Directions issued by the Speaker and by practice or convention of the House. The purpose of laying such papers on the Table is to supply authoritative information for the use of members and to prepare ground for discussion.

A private member is generally not allowed to lay a document or paper on the Table unless he is authorised by the Speaker to do so<sup>1</sup>.

(ii) Statements and Personal Explanations

At the end of the Question Hour, Ministers make various types of statements and explanations, a brief description of which is given below:

Statements by Ministers on Matters of Urgent Public Importance<sup>2</sup>

In order to keep the House informed about matters of public importance or to state the Government's policy in regard to a matter of topical interest, Ministers make statements in the House from time to time with the consent of the Speaker.

A Minister who desires to make a statement has to intimate in advance the date on which he proposes to make the statement<sup>3</sup>. The intimation is required to be sent, as far as possible, at least one day in advance so that the item may be included in the List of Business<sup>4</sup>. The statement is made at the appropriate time, i.e., after the questions and other formal items of business are over. The Minister has to send in advance a copy of the statement for information of the Speaker, even if the statement is secret or confidential in nature. It is open to the Minister to alter the text of the statement before it is actually made in the House but, as far as possible, a copy of the revised statement should be made available to the Speaker in advance.

A Minister has a right to make a policy statement at any time<sup>5</sup>. When a Minister proposes to make a statement ex tempore in an urgent case, the requirement of providing an advance copy of the statement is not insisted upon<sup>6</sup> but he has to inform the Speaker in advance of the reasons for making the statement at short notice in writing or by meeting the Speaker personally<sup>7</sup>.

A Minister has a right to make a statement in the House to inform the House of a treaty or an agreement entered into by the Government with a foreign Government<sup>8</sup>. It is a tradition that Ministers inform the House of current foreign affairs. A Minister may make a statement about a treaty signed between two foreign countries. The Speaker may allow a Minister to make a statement without the item being entered in the List of Business<sup>9</sup>. An objection that the item regarding a major policy statement must always be entered in the List of Business is not valid<sup>10</sup>. However, when an important statement is made by a Minister without an entry in the List of Business, a Supplementary List of Business is circulated to members in the House if time permits; otherwise, an announcement is made by the Chair or a notice is displayed on the notice-boards for information of the members<sup>11</sup>.

As a rule, no questions are permitted after a statement is made by a Minister because there is no formal motion before the House on which debate may take place<sup>12</sup>.

However, there have been instances when, in exceptional cases, members were allowed to ask clarificatory questions<sup>13</sup>. The only settled exception is statement by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs regarding business for the next week when points regarding business of the House can be raised by members. Lengthy statements may be laid on the Table of the House<sup>14</sup> and copies thereof may be circulated to members. Instead of asking questions then and there, it is open to members to raise discussion on a Minister's statement by tabling a suitable notice<sup>15</sup>. When the statement is on an important matter, discussion may be allowed on the same day on which the statement is made<sup>16</sup>.

When a statement is made by a Minister on his own authority, members cannot ask him to verify the facts from some other authority<sup>17</sup>.

In order that the House may come to know at the earliest opportunity about all serious occurrences, a convention is being followed that Ministers make statements in the House regarding such occurrences suo motu<sup>18</sup>. The Speaker may also ask a Minister to make a statement on an important matter on which notice of calling attention and short notice questions have been tabled by members<sup>19</sup>. The Speaker has observed that a statement should be as comprehensive as possible covering all the points which might have been raised by members in calling attention notices and short notice questions on the subject tabled by them and copies of which have been received by the Ministers<sup>20</sup>. It has also been held that policy statements should first be made on the floor of the House when the House is in session before releasing them to the Press or the public<sup>21</sup>. But Ministers cannot be prohibited from making statements outside the House if such statements are not contrary to the declared policy of the Government<sup>22</sup>. The Speaker has, however, observed that where a statement is made outside the House even clarifying the policy already enunciated, the Minister should also make a statement about that in the House at the earliest opportunity<sup>23</sup>. No impropriety is involved when a Minister makes a statement before his Party to clarify his position regarding certain allegations made against him in the Press unless it involves some important statement of public policy<sup>24</sup>. The Speaker has held that

In deciding what statements should be made first in the House, a distinction has to be drawn between matters of policy and news. In matters of policy, Government should first inform the House. But in the case of news, information can be given to Press before informing the House—L.S. Deb., 3-12-1971, cc. 204-09 and 325-28; 3-3-2006, cc. 254-58; 7-3-2007; cc. 470-77; 20-3-2007; cc. 362-65.

24. Ibid., 4-4-1963, cc. 7688-95.

Ministers should make statements in the House about the outcome of their official visits abroad<sup>25</sup>.

There is no legal or constitutional requirement compelling the Government to make a statement in the House about the outcome of the visit to India of the Prime Minister of a foreign country or to lay on the Table of the House agreements or treaties signed by the two Governments during that visit. However, if some important talks have taken place and an agreement is reached between the two Governments during such a visit and if the leader of any Party or Group in the House or a fairly large number of members write to the Speaker, the Speaker, in turn, might ask the Government to make a statement in the House or lay on the Table a report, joint communiqué and agreement(s) entered into by the two Governments, as desired by the members<sup>26</sup>. There have been instances when the Ministers have made suo motu statements with respect to progress of various schemes pertaining to their Ministries.<sup>27</sup>

Statements in Response to Calling Attention Notices by Members

(See Chapter XX Calling Attention to Matters of Urgent Public Importance under the Heading 'Procedure for Calling Attention')

Statements to Correct Inaccuracies

When a Minister finds that an incorrect information has been given to the House by him in answer to a starred/unstarred/short notice question or a supplementary question, or during a debate, he may make a statement or lay it on the Table correcting his earlier reply or information. The Minister has to give to the Secretary-General an advance notice of his intention and to furnish a copy of the proposed statement for information of the Speaker<sup>28</sup>. In case a delay has occurred in making the statement, reasons for delay for the same, have to be furnished.

A member is also at liberty to point out any mistake or inaccuracy in a statement made by a Minister or any other member, but he has to write to the Speaker seeking his permission to raise the matter in the House<sup>29</sup>. In support of his allegation, the member is required to furnish particulars of the mistake or inaccuracy and may also place before the Speaker such evidence as he may have in his possession<sup>30</sup>. Speaker, in his discretion, may bring the matter to the notice of the Minister or the member concerned, who has made the statement for the purpose of ascertaining the factual position in regard to the allegation made. Where the member is permitted by the Speaker to raise the matter in the House, the member is required before doing so, to inform the Minister or the member concerned about his intention to raise the matter. The item is included in the List of Business for the day in consultation with the Minister or the member concerned. Not more than one such item may be admitted for the same sitting<sup>31</sup>.

When a member points out a discrepancy in a statement made by a Minister and desires that it be corrected, the member may be permitted to raise the matter in the House only if the matter challenged has a direct relation to his own statement or arises out of a question asked by him<sup>32</sup>.

If a Minister, whose statement is sought to be corrected, himself seeks permission to make a statement suo motu clarifying/correcting his earlier statement, then the member who has given notice to raise the matter may not be permitted to make a statement<sup>33</sup>.

With a view to ensuring that the member does not utilize the opportunity to refer to extraneous matters, i.e., matters which were not mentioned in the particulars of the mistake or inaccuracy earlier furnished by him, the Speaker has observed that before the matter is brought before the House, the member should invariably supply an advance copy of the statement which he proposes to make to point out the mistake or inaccuracy and should confine himself to the text of the statement approved by the Speaker<sup>34</sup>. A copy of the approved statement is supplied to the Minister concerned to enable him to come prepared to reply to the specific points that are likely to be raised in the House.

In explanation of the inaccuracy pointed out in the House, the Minister or the member concerned may make a statement then and there<sup>35</sup>, or on a subsequent date after duly informing the member who had raised the matter in the House<sup>36</sup>. If the statement of the member and the Minister's reply thereto are lengthy<sup>37</sup> or to save the time of the House, the Speaker so decides,<sup>38</sup> the statements may be laid on the Table.

If there are interruptions and a Minister is not allowed to complete his statement, the Speaker may ask the Minister to lay the statement on the Table<sup>39</sup>.

A Minister can also, with the permission of the Speaker, make a statement pointing out any mistake or inaccuracy in the information given by a member in the House<sup>40</sup>.

Statement by a Member who has Resigned the Office of Minister

(See under Chapter XXVIII—‘Motions of Confidence and No-confidence in the Council of Ministers’).

Statement by Minister on Committee Reports

In order to keep the House informed of the action taken by the Ministries on recommendations/observations made by the Standing Committee in their Reports, the Speaker inserted a new Direction 73A<sup>41</sup> in the Directions by the Speaker regarding Statement by Minister on Committee Reports.

The Minister concerned shall make once in six months a statement in the House regarding the status of implementation of recommendations contained in the Reports of Departmentally Related Standing Committees of Lok Sabha with regard to his Ministry. The Minister desiring to make the statement intimates in advance the date on which the statement is proposed to be made and also sends a copy of the statement to the Lok Sabha Secretariat for the information of the Speaker.

The Minister concerned seeks permission of the Speaker in writing for making the statement and after his approval makes the statement in the House.

Where intimation from the Minister/Ministry for making the statement is received on the same day on which the statement is proposed to be made, it is put up for the orders of the Speaker for permission to make the statement. If permission is granted and time is available, a Supplementary List of Business containing the item is issued with the approval of the Secretary-General and circulated to Members in the House. Copies of the List of Business are also supplied to Reporters and Interpreters.

In case the Minister wants to make the statement immediately and the permission has been granted but there is no time to circulate the Supplementary List of Business, the item may be included at an appropriate place in the Speaker’s and Officers’ agenda sets as “N.A.” (Not included in the Agenda) item.

If the statement of the Minister is lengthy, or if, to have the time of the House, the Speaker so decides, the statement may be laid on the Table.

After the Minister has made/laid the statement in the House, a copy of the statement shall also be sent to the concerned Standing Committee and Coordination Cell for further examination of the statement.

Personal Explanation by Members

Members against whom comments or criticisms of a personal nature are made on the floor of the House are entitled to make, with the consent of the Speaker, personal explanations in their defence, although there is no question before the House<sup>42</sup>. A member has a right to make a personal explanation notwithstanding the fact that the allegations made against him in the House do not relate to him in his capacity as a member of Parliament but otherwise<sup>43</sup>. The forum of the House should not, however, be used to make personal explanations to contradict or clarify reports not connected with the proceedings of the House but published in the Press<sup>44</sup>.

Personal explanations may, therefore, be defined as a statement made by a member with the previous permission of the Speaker explaining his conduct in regard to a particular question or occasion, replying to an accusation made by another member, or correcting an alleged misrepresentation. Personal explanation is made before the main business of the day is taken up, unless the member in question was permitted by the Speaker to make it during the course of the debate when the allegations against him were made.

Normally, if a member during the course of debate makes any allegation in the House against another member or Minister without giving advance notice thereof to the Speaker as required under the rule on the subject, the member is called to order. However, where any such allegations have gone on record, the Minister or the member against whom allegations have been made is allowed, on his request, to make a personal explanation in the House with a view to clarify the position either on the same day or later on.

When the member is present in the House at the time the allegations are made, he is normally permitted to make a statement by way of personal explanation at the end of the speech of the member who makes the allegations or, if the latter gives way, immediately after the allegations are made<sup>45</sup>. But, he cannot make a long personal explanation in the midst of a speech; for that, he must seek permission and raise the matter separately<sup>46</sup>.

When the member in question does not wish to make a personal explanation on the spot or if he is not present at that time in the House, he is allowed to make a statement later on. In this case, the member seeking permission for a personal explanation either places personally the facts before the Speaker in his Chamber or

A Minister was permitted to refute then and there certain allegations made against him in his capacity as a Minister without being required to furnish written text of the statement to be made by him—L.S. Deb., 28-8-1974, cc. 216-17; 29-8-1974, cc. 153-64.

makes a written request to him enclosing a copy of the statement to be made by him by way of proposed explanation or a gist thereof. The advance copy of the statement is examined to see to it that it is in first person so that the member making the personal explanation takes full responsibility for facts mentioned therein and the statement is brief and concise and does not introduce any further controversial or debatable matter<sup>47</sup>. If any portion thereof is considered objectionable or beyond the scope of personal explanation, the member is asked to delete it before permission to make the statement is granted. The copy is to be submitted to the Speaker sufficiently in advance for his approval.

If the permission has been granted, the member makes the statement in the House on the date and time fixed by the Speaker, and the Minister or the member who is alleged to have made the charges is accordingly informed as to when the statement would be made<sup>48</sup>.

After the personal explanation has been made, no further questions are allowed on it. If the allegations are denied on the floor of the House, the denial is normally accepted by the member who made the allegations; even if the latter is not satisfied with the personal explanation, no further statement is allowed, the idea being not to convert it into a debate<sup>49</sup>. When a personal explanation is made by a member, it is not the practice to allow another member to make counter-explanation<sup>50</sup>. The matter is treated as closed with the statements of both sides being on record. However, after the personal explanation by a member, the Speaker may, in appropriate cases, permit the Minister or the member concerned to make a clarificatory statement for which also the submission of an advance copy is necessary<sup>51</sup>.

In cases where certain allegations were made in the other House against a member of Lok Sabha, the Speaker permitted the affected member to make a personal explanation in the House to clarify his position<sup>52</sup>. The Speaker also permitted members whose names were mentioned in the other House in connection with a certain inquiry being conducted by the Government, to make personal explanations in the House to clarify their respective positions<sup>53</sup>.

In the latter case, the Speaker, on suggestion of a member, wrote to the Chairman, Rajya Sabha, about the personal explanation. On 4 April 1970, the Chairman referred to this letter in the Rajya Sabha and asked members to exercise restraint while referring to members of the other House.

The Speaker also permitted members whose names were mentioned in the charge-sheet filed in connection with an espionage case to make personal explanation in the House to clarify their respective positions<sup>54</sup>.

Where allegations are made in the House against a particular political party, the leader or, in his absence, the whip<sup>55</sup> of that Party or Group in the House is permitted to make a statement in regard thereto. He has, however, to submit to the Speaker the text of the statement to be made by him, and he can make the statement only if the Speaker accords him the permission after going through the statement<sup>56</sup>.

When the conduct of a member, whether inside the House or outside it, has been mentioned in, and becomes the subject matter of a Report which is laid on the Table of the House, he may be permitted to make a personal explanation to clarify his position<sup>57</sup>. A member may also be permitted to make a personal explanation if the statement to which objection is taken can be attributed to him<sup>58</sup>.

Personal explanation can be made only by the member against whom any charges or allegations have been made during the course of the debate in the House; no other member can make an explanation on behalf of that member.

A member who desires to make a personal explanation should do so at the earliest opportunity<sup>59</sup>; he should restrict himself to the particular matter and not seek to reply to the debate or the criticism of a general nature levelled against him<sup>60</sup>; a personal explanation cannot be utilised for making another speech<sup>61</sup>; personal explanation with regard to a matter under adjudication, even though a Minister has referred to it in the House, is not permissible<sup>62</sup>; if a member quotes an extract in refutation of another member's argument, it is not a personal explanation<sup>63</sup>; it is also not permissible to make a personal explanation with respect to every small matter<sup>64</sup>.

On a personal explanation, a member is not expected to explain the reasons for not voting on a particular matter<sup>65</sup>.

Portions of a personal explanation held to be objectionable have been expunged<sup>66</sup>. Words, phrases and expressions which are not in the statement approved by the Speaker, if spoken, do not form part of the proceedings of the House<sup>67</sup>.

(iii) Motions for Election to Committees

Another formal item of business is the motion for the purpose of electing members to serve on a Committee, commission or body (other than a Parliamentary Committee) which is to be constituted either under the provisions of the Constitution, or under an Act of Parliament and rules framed thereunder, or in accordance with the terms of any Government resolution<sup>68</sup>. In consultation with the Minister concerned a date on which the Minister is to move the motion is fixed and the item included in the List of Business for that day after the questions and before the main business.

(iv) Motions for Introduction or Withdrawal of Bills

The motion for leave to introduce or withdraw a Bill is treated as a formal item of business<sup>69</sup> and is disposed of before the main business for the day is taken up.

An Appropriation Bill may be permitted by the Speaker to be introduced later in the day after the Demands for Grants have been voted by the House. The annual Finance Bill is usually introduced immediately after presentation of the General Budget<sup>70</sup>.

In the case of a Bill seeking to replace an Ordinance, the item regarding the requisite statement of the Minister explaining the circumstances which had necessitated immediate legislation by Ordinance is included in the List of Business after the entry regarding motion for leave to introduce the Bill<sup>71</sup>.

It is also permissible to include in the List of Business a motion or motions for leave to introduce a Bill or Bills notwithstanding the fact that the day is allotted for the transaction of financial business or for discussion on Motion of Thanks on the Address by the President<sup>72</sup>.

(v) Motions for Adoption of Reports of Committees

Motions for adoption of reports of certain Parliamentary Committees are moved in the House after presentation of the reports<sup>73</sup>. Such a motion is also treated as a formal item of business and is disposed of before the main business of the day is taken up.

(vi) Financial Business

The financial business transacted by the House<sup>74</sup> consists of:

Presentation of the Railway and General Budgets and Statements of Supplementary/Excess Demands for Grants; General discussion on the General and Railway Budgets; Voting on the Demands for Grants on Account in respect of the General and Railway Budgets; Discussion and voting on the Demands for Grants in respect of the General and Railway Budgets; Discussion and voting on Supplementary and Excess Demands for Grants and Votes of Credit; Discussion and passing of the Appropriation Bills in respect of the various Demands passed by the House; Discussion and passing of Finance Bill; and Presentation and discussion of Budget, supplementary and excess grants of States and Union territories which are under the President's rule, and introduction, consideration and passing of connected Appropriation Bills.

Entries in respect of all the items mentioned above are made in the List of Business.

(vii) Legislative Business

Bills may be introduced and piloted in the House by Ministers as well as private members<sup>75</sup>. But only those Bills for which notice has been given by Ministers can be introduced and considered during the Government time.

(viii) Motions

A motion to discuss a matter of public importance may be moved with the consent of the Speaker. The discussion on such a motion takes place during the Government time irrespective of the fact whether the notice is given by a private member or a Minister<sup>76</sup>. Out of the admitted motions given notice of by private members, the motions recommended by the Business Advisory Committee for discussion are normally taken up. There is no fixed time for taking up these motions.

Formerly, the convention was that one motion initiated by a private member was taken up in the House every week from 1600 hours to 1800 hours, except during the period when the Budget was discussed. However, in some cases the time for discussion on such a motion was provided even earlier during the day<sup>77</sup>. When a motion was to be moved by a Minister, it was normally taken up immediately after the Question Hour, and in case, there was an item of business which was urgent, or part-discussed, then immediately after the disposal of that item. Since 1971 (Fifth Lok Sabha), the Business Advisory Committee itself has been selecting and allotting time to such motions for discussion in the House. In a number of cases, the Committee has also fixed dates for discussion on those motions.

(ix) Resolutions

Resolutions are moved in the House by the Ministers as well as private members<sup>78</sup> but, as in the case of Bills, only the resolutions moved by Ministers are taken up during Government time. However, discussion on statutory resolutions tabled by private members—such as a resolution disapproving an Ordinance promulgated by the President or a resolution seeking to modify statutory rules and orders laid on the Table—takes place during the time allotted for transaction of Government business<sup>79</sup>. Other private member's resolutions are taken up during the last two and a half hours on alternate Fridays or such other day as may be allotted for discussion thereof<sup>80</sup>.

(B) ITEMS OF BUSINESS INITIATED BY PRIVATE MEMBERS AND TAKEN UP IN GOVERNMENT TIME

Apart from the private members' business, i.e. Bills and resolutions which are discussed for two and a half hours on every Friday or such other day as the Speaker may fix, there are certain items of business which, though initiated by private members, are transacted during the time allotted for the transaction of Government business<sup>81</sup>.

Besides the two items, viz., statements pointing out mistakes or inaccuracies in statements made by a Minister or another member and personal explanations by members, described earlier in this Chapter, the other items of business which fall under this category are the following<sup>82</sup>:

Questions and Short Notice Questions; Adjournment Motions; Calling Attention to matters of urgent public importance; Motion of Thanks on the President's Address; Questions of Privilege; Discussion on Matters of Urgent Public Importance for Short Duration; Motion of No-confidence in the Council of Ministers; Resolution for the removal of Speaker or Deputy Speaker; Motions for amending regulations, rules, sub-rules, by-laws, etc., which have been laid on the Table and which are framed in pursuance of the Constitution or the legislative functions delegated by Parliament to a subordinate authority; Motions for Discussion on Matters of Public Interest; Motions to reduce Demands for Grants, i.e. Cut Motions; Half-an-hour Discussion on matters arising out of questions and answers<sup>83</sup>; Statutory Resolutions; and matters under Rule 377.

Entries regarding all the above items are made in the List of Business. In the case of questions and short notice questions, separate lists showing the text of questions are printed and as such text of questions are not included in the List of Business. Similarly, in the case of motions seeking to amend rules, regulations, etc., when their number is large, the text of the motions is not included in the List of Business. The motions are published in the Bulletin or in a separate list which is circulated to members in advance of the day for which the entry regarding the motions is made in the List of Business.

In addition, following are the other items of business which are taken up in Government time in pursuance of constitutional provisions or established conventions:

Oath or affirmation; Obituary references; References on solemn occasions; and Announcements by the Speaker.

Oath or Affirmation

Every member of Lok Sabha, returned either in the general elections or at any subsequent bye-election, or nominated by the President, is required to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation in accordance with the Constitution<sup>84</sup>. Although there is no bar on a member to make and subscribe the oath or affirmation before the President or any other person appointed in that behalf by him, outside the House, it has been the established practice that members do so only at a sitting of Lok Sabha. As it is necessary for members to take seat in the House before they can function, the two functions relating to making and subscribing of oath or affirmation and taking the seat are combined in order to facilitate the early functioning of members and to give solemnity to the occasion. This item is accorded the first place in the List of Business for that day, i.e., at the commencement of the Question Hour. On rare occasions, oath or affirmation by a member may be made and subscribed at the end of the day or at some other convenient time during the day<sup>85</sup>.

Obituary References

It is customary to make obituary references in the House on the passing away of sitting members, former members, outstanding personages and heads of friendly foreign States. This item is taken up during Government time under the established convention of the House and is accorded priority over other business, i.e., it is taken up before questions<sup>86</sup>. The time taken over it is not made good by extending the Question Hour beyond the scheduled time<sup>87</sup>.

If before issuing the List of Business for a day, it is known that an obituary reference is to be made in the House, an entry is made in the List of Business before "Questions" but after "Oath or Affirmation", mentioning the name of the deceased and the particulars of his membership. However, if intimation regarding death is received after the List of Business for the day has been issued, an entry regarding the obituary reference is made in the agenda papers of the Speaker. If the death of a sitting member or Minister occurs in New Delhi while the House is sitting, further business might be suspended and the House adjourned after the obituary reference is made<sup>88</sup>, or adjourned immediately without transacting further business on that day and the obituary reference in that case is made at the next sitting<sup>89</sup>.

On the death of a sitting member, an obituary reference is made by the Speaker in the House at the first available opportunity<sup>90</sup> on coming to know about the demise of the member. However, in the case of the death of a Minister or a member with a conspicuous place in public life, the Leader of the House breaks the news to the House and leaders and spokesmen of the various political Parties or Groups associate themselves by making short references and the proceedings are wound up by the Speaker<sup>91</sup>. Similarly, on the demise of outstanding personages commanding great silence for a short while. Thereafter, the House adjourned sine die at 1454 hours as it was the last sitting of the Third Session of the Fourteenth Lok Sabha. Formal obituary reference in Lok Sabha was made on 25 February 2005 when the House met at its first sitting in the Fourth Session.

However, during the major part of the Fourteenth Lok Sabha, the Speaker only made the obituary references, irrespective of the person's position in public life.

On 30 November 2012, Leader of the House, Sushil Kumar Shinde informed the House that former Prime Minister, Inder Kumar Gujral passed away at a Hospital in Gurgaon at 15.30 hours on that day. The House was adjourned to meet again on 3 December 2012.

On 3 December 2012, the House was adjourned after making obituary reference to the passing away of Inder Kumar Gujral.

However, on the demise of Kim-II-Sung, President of DPR Korea, King Hussein of Jordan, Sheikh Zayed bin Sultan Al Nahyan, President of UAE; Mr. Yasir Arafat, President National Authority and Chairman Palestine Liberation Organisation; His Holiness Pope John Paul-II of Vatican; His Majesty King Fahd Bin Abdul Aziz Al Saud of Saudi Arabia; Sheikh Jaber Al-Ahmad Al Jaber Al-Sabah, Amir of Kuwait; Mr. Boris Nikolaevich Yeltsin, Former President of the Russian Federation, Lech Kaczynski, President of Poland, Hugo Chavez, President of Venezuela, Mohammad Zillur Rahman, President of Bangladesh, Lady Margaret Thatcher, Former Prime Minister of United Kingdom the House continued with the listed business after the obituary references were made.—L.S. Deb., 25-7-1994, cc. 1-2; 25-3-1998, 1-12-2004, cc. 1-4; 19-4-2005, cc. 1-2; 2-8-2005, cc. 1-2; 16-2-2006, cc. 1-3; 27-4-2007, cc. 1-3; 15-4-2010, cc. 1-3; 11-03-2013, c.1; 21-03-2013, c.1; and 22-04-2013, cc. 1-2.

Obituary references are also made on the demise of former members of Lok Sabha, Provisional Parliament, Constituent Assembly and the Central Assembly, and former Secretaries/Secretaries-General of the House<sup>94</sup>. In connection with the death of a former member of the Central Assembly who at the time of his death was not a national of India, no reference was made in the House.

Obituary references were, however, made in the House on 5 November 1952, and on 9 May 1958, to the passing away of Sir Abdul Rahim (former Speaker of the Central Legislative Assembly) who died at Karachi, and Dr. Khan Saheb (member of the Central Assembly) who died at Lahore.

No obituary reference is normally made in Lok Sabha on the demise of members of Rajya Sabha unless the deceased happens to be a former member of Lok Sabha. There have, however, been exceptions when references were made on the passing away of sitting or former members of Rajya Sabha<sup>95</sup>. Lok Sabha was also adjourned for the day in certain cases as a mark of respect to the deceased<sup>96</sup>.

When a former or sitting Minister passes away, references are invariably made in Lok Sabha even if the Minister had been a member of Rajya Sabha<sup>97</sup> and in certain cases Lok Sabha also adjourned for the day without transacting any business<sup>98</sup>.

As a special case, on the passing away of Violet Alva, former Deputy Chairman of Rajya Sabha, not only obituary references were made but the House was also adjourned<sup>99</sup>.

No obituary reference is made in Lok Sabha on the demise of ex-member if the news of his demise is received very late. Condolence letter is, however, sent to the next of kin of the deceased by the Speaker or the Secretary-General<sup>100</sup>.

On 13 March 1979, the Speaker addressed a condolence letter to the wife of Banmali Kumbhar about whom obituary reference could not be made in Lok Sabha as the information was

In certain cases, on the demise of a sitting member, Lok Sabha adjourned in the past after obituary references had been made. It is the practice now that the House is adjourned only when it is necessary to enable members to take part in the funeral procession of a sitting member irrespective of the fact whether the deceased held the Office of a Minister or not<sup>101</sup>.

On the opening day of a session it is customary to make obituary references to the passing away of sitting members, etc., if deaths have taken place in the preceding inter-session period, but the House is not adjourned thereafter.

However, on the opening day of the Eleventh Session of the Fourth Lok Sabha, the House was adjourned, as a special case, without transacting any business after obituary references had been made to the passing away, in the preceding inter-session period, of P. Govinda Menon, Minister of Law and Social Welfare D. In March 1987 the Secretary-General, on behalf of the Speaker and members, addressed a condolence letter to the son of Shaligram Ramchandra Bharatiya, member of First Lok Sabha about whom obituary reference could not be made in Lok Sabha as the information was received very late. On 3 March 2008, the Secretary-General, on behalf of the Speaker and members, addressed a condolence letter to the wife of S.V.L. Narasimhan, member of First Lok Sabha about whom obituary reference could not be made in Lok Sabha as the information was received very late.

On 4 April 2013, Secretary General on behalf of the Speaker and members, addressed a condolence letter to the grand son of M.S. Gurupadaswamy, a member of First Lok Sabha about whom obituary reference could not be made in Lok Sabha as the information was received very late.

Normal Sessions in a Year

Normally there are three sessions of Lok Sabha in a year<sup>129</sup>. The first session commences in the first or second week of February<sup>130</sup>, and lasts till the first week or middle of May. This session has its own importance in as much as the President addresses members of both Houses of Parliament assembled together at the commencement of the session. After the President's Address, a day is fixed for moving the 'Motion of Thanks' on the President's Address. On this motion which is discussed for three or four days, members are afforded an opportunity to discuss the policies of the Government outlined in the President's Address as well as any other matter which the Address fails to take into account<sup>131</sup>. Another important feature of this session is the presentation and discussion of the Railway and the General Budgets. On this account, this session is popularly known as the Budget Session.

In addition to the passing of the Railway and the General Budgets, other items of business like Bills, motions and resolutions are also taken up in this session, whenever the Government so desire.

The total number of actual sittings in the Budget Session generally ranges between 30<sup>132</sup> and 40 days. Prior to the Constitution of the Departmentally Related Standing Committees, the sittings of the Budget Session varied between 50 to 60 days.

129. During the years 1957 and 1962 when general elections to Lok Sabha were held, in addition to three sessions of the new Lok Sabha, one session each of the preceding Lok Sabha was also held after elections to new Lok Sabha had taken place and results thereof had been announced, but before the new Lok Sabha was duly constituted. These were popularly known as "lame duck" sessions. The purpose of these sessions was to pass the Vote on Account to enable the Government to carry on till the new Lok Sabha was constituted.

However, there was no "lame duck" session of the Third Lok Sabha as the Fourth Lok Sabha was constituted on 16 March 1967, soon after the result of the Fourth General Elections had been announced. Similarly, there were no "lame duck" sessions of the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth and Fourteenth Lok Sabha. The Vote on Account was passed in the first session of the respective new Lok Sabha.

130. During the election year, this schedule may not be adhered to.

131. For details, see Chapter X—President's Address, Messages and Communications to the House.

132. The Seventh Session of the Fifteenth Lok Sabha which commenced on 21 February 2011 was to conclude on 21 April 2011. However, on account of Assembly Elections in the States of Assam, Kerala, Tamil Nadu and West Bengal and Union territory of Puducherry, the session was accordingly rescheduled and it held 23 sittings before being adjourned sine die on 25 March 2011

The second session of the year which is known as the Monsoon Session generally commences in July/August and lasts till the first or second week of September. This session is comparatively of shorter duration and is mainly confined to legislative business, discussion on motions<sup>133</sup> and discussion on matters of urgent public importance<sup>134</sup>. These motions and discussions on matters of urgent public importance provide opportunities to members to focus the attention of the Government on current matters of national and international importance and also to discuss the reports of Autonomous Bodies and other Public Undertakings. The financial business during this session may consist of discussion and voting of the Supplementary Demands for Grants or Excess Demands for Grants but only a few hours are allotted therefor. The number of sittings in this session is around 30<sup>135</sup>.

The third session in the year which is known as the Winter Session commences in November and lasts till the third week of December. Like the Monsoon Session, this session is also devoted mainly to legislative business and discussion on motions and matters of urgent public importance. The number of sittings in this session also is around 30<sup>136</sup>.

Regulation of Time available during a Session

Sittings of Lok Sabha ordinarily commence at 1100 hours, and conclude at 1800 hours, with a break for lunch between 1300 and 1400 hours. The hours of sittings are notified in the relevant Bulletin from time to time. The Speaker has the power to dispense with the lunch hour or to extend the usual hour of conclusion of the sitting but when the House has to sit late, consent of the House is normally taken.

Time for Government Business

The first hour of every sitting is normally devoted to the asking and answering of questions<sup>137</sup>. However, if a Minister at the end of the Question Hour represents to the Speaker that a particular question which did not reach for oral answer is one of special public interest to which he desires to give a reply, the question may be allowed to be taken up<sup>138</sup>. About half-an-hour is taken in the disposal of formal items

---

133. Motions admitted under Rules 184, 189 and 342.

134. Under Rule 193.

135. The Fifteenth Session, i.e. the last session of the Fourteenth Lok Sabha, which commenced on 12 February 2009 to pass the interim budget and concluded on 26 February 2009, held in all 10 sittings only.

136. The Fourteenth Session of the Fourteenth Lok Sabha which commenced on 21 July 2008 continued till 23 December 2008 without prorogation, thereby became the longest session so far. However, during the period it held only 18 sittings. Also see, chapter XVII—Sittings of the House.

137. On rare occasions, when members in whose names questions have been admitted are absent, less than one hour may be devoted to questions. Consequent upon amendment in Rule 48(3) in 2010, if a question on being called, is not asked or the member in whose name the question stands is absent, the Speaker may direct that the answer to it be given, and other members are allowed to ask Supplementary Questions.

138. Rule 46, Proviso.

of business<sup>139</sup>. Thus, out of six hours of a normal sitting only four and a half hours are actually available for transacting Government business on any day, and on the days allotted for the transaction of private members' business, the time available for transacting Government business is only two hours.

It is for the Government to suggest the duration of a session after taking into account the quantum of business they propose to transact. However, the Speaker watches the interest of members and makes sure that private members get a proper share in the time available during a session<sup>140</sup>. On occasions, although rare, the House has adopted motions that only Government business be transacted during the session<sup>141</sup>.

Time for various items of Government business and such other items as are taken up during the Government time is recommended by the Business Advisory Committee, reports of which are presented to the House from time to time and are adopted by the House on motions moved by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs<sup>142</sup>.

Time for Private Members' Business

On every Friday or such other day as may be allotted for the purpose, the last two and a half an hours are spent on private members' business.

In 1922, a provision was made for the first time for allotment by the Governor-General of "so many days as may, in his opinion, be possible compatible with the public interest for the business of non-official members"<sup>143</sup>. This provision continued in force almost without any modification till 1948 when the Speaker was empowered to allot time for the non-official, or the private members', as the term now began to be referred to, business<sup>144</sup>. However, till 1953, no separate day in a week was earmarked for the transaction of private members' business in Lok Sabha. On an ad hoc basis, only two or three or sometimes four days in a full session of two months were so allotted. In 1953, an amendment was made in the Rules of Procedure providing for the last two and a half hours of a sitting on Friday for the transaction of private members' business<sup>145</sup>.

Up to the Fourth Session of Third Lok Sabha in 1963, resolutions and Bills were put down alternately starting with resolutions on the first Friday of the session. In order to give maximum notice of private members' resolutions to the Ministers, from the Fourth Session, 1963, Bills are put down on the first Friday of the session and resolutions on the second Friday and so on.

Arrangement of Government Business

The Secretary-General is required to arrange Government business to be transacted on days fixed for Government business in such order as the Speaker may, after consultation with the Leader of the House, determine<sup>146</sup>.

The Leader of the House is required to intimate the probable Government business for the first two or three days of a session at least ten days in advance. Thereafter, the List of Business is immediately drawn up and circulated to members so as to give them sufficient time to table amendments to the items of business included therein. A day or two before the commencement of the session, the List of Business for the first day is revised and the items of business<sup>147</sup>, like calling attention notices, papers to be laid on the Table, statements by Ministers, presentation of reports, etc. which do not find place in the advance list, are included in the revised list.

145. Rule 26.

On occasions, private members' business has been carried on beyond the normal duration of two and a half hours. For instances, see L.S. Deb., 20-7-1956, cc. 483-84; 1-8-1969, cc. 284-85; 16-2-1968, cc. 1530-35; 21-8-1970, cc. 327, 337-38; 20-11-1970, cc. 335-36 and 366; 30-8-1974, c. 252.

146. Rule 25.

147. Items of business which are normally not received from the Leader of the House are arranged in the List of Business in the following order laid down by the Speaker (See Direction 2):

Oath or affirmation; President's Address to both Houses of Parliament to be laid on the Table; Obituary references; Questions (including short notice questions); Leave to move motions for adjournment of business of the House; Questions involving a breach of privilege; Papers to be laid on the Table; Communication of messages from the President; Communication of messages from the Council of States (Rajya Sabha); Intimation regarding President's assent to Bills; Communications from Magistrates or other authorities regarding arrest or detention or release of members of the House; Announcements by the Speaker regarding leave of absence of members from the sitting of the House; Announcements by the Speaker regarding various matters, e.g., resignations of members of the House, nominations to Panel of Chairmen, Committees, etc.; Rulings by the Speaker; Presentation of reports of Committees; Laying of evidence before Select/Joint Committees on Bills; Presentation of petitions; Statements by Ministers; Motions for elections to Committees; Motions for extension of time for presentation of reports of Select/Joint Committees on Bills; Calling Attention Notices; Personal statements by ex-Ministers in explanation of their resignation; Statements under Direction 115; Personal explanations under Rule 357 (if not made during the debate); Motions for adoption of reports of Business Advisory Committee; Motions for leave to move resolution for removal of Speaker/Deputy Speaker; Motions for leave to make a motion of no-confidence in the Council of Ministers; Presentation of Supplementary/ Excess Demands for Grants (General, Railways and in respect of a State under President's Rule); Bills to be withdrawn; Bills to be introduced; Laying of explanatory statements giving reasons for immediate legislation by Ordinances; Raising of matters under Rule 377, which are not points of order; and Consideration of reports of Committee of Privileges.

After the session has commenced, the Leader of the House sends, through the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, intimation from day to day regarding Government business to be transacted. If the List of Business for a day has been issued and any fresh item of business to be taken up on that day is received from the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, a supplementary List of Business containing that item is issued or the item is included in the Revised List of Business, if one is to be issued. Where the time is short, the supplementary List of Business may be circulated to members in the House on the same day<sup>148</sup>.

In order to give members advance information of the Government business to be transacted by the House during the following week, the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, on behalf of the Leader of the House, makes a statement in the House at the last sitting in each week<sup>149</sup>. After the statement is made, not more than ten members other than those who serve on the Business Advisory Committee, may be permitted to make two brief submissions each suggesting subjects to be included in the next week's agenda. The names and inter se priority of such members is determined by ballot. The text of submissions is required to be brief and specific and should not ordinarily exceed 50 words each. The text of such submissions, duly approved by the speaker, is only allowed to go on record<sup>150</sup>. If any change is necessitated in the programme of business already announced for a week, the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, on behalf of the Leader of the House, makes a statement to that effect.

Normally business is arranged in the same order in which it is furnished by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs on behalf of the Leader of the House. This order may, however, be varied under directions of the Speaker or in accordance with the decisions of the House<sup>151</sup>. A new item of business may also be included in the List of Business by order of the House<sup>152</sup>.

149. The weekly statement regarding business of the House was made for the first time on 10 May 1956. For details regarding the decision taken by the Speaker asking Government to make the statement regarding business, see L.S. Deb., 4-5-1956, c. 7244; 9-5-1956, cc. 7723-26.

The weekly statement regarding business of the House as also any change in the programmes is published in the Bulletin for the information of members.

150. Minutes of R.C.; 9-5-1988.

In order to save time of the House over the submissions by members regarding next week's business, the Speaker observed on 9 January 1976, that members desiring to make any suggestions might approach the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs in advance to enable him to consider their requests before making the statement in the House regarding business for the next week—L.S. Deb., 9-1-1976, cc. 130-33.

151. See for instance, L.S. Deb., 20-8-1956, cc. 2829 and 3847.

152. On 24 August 1956, after the motion for reference to Select Committee of the Women's and Children's institutions Licensing Bill by a private member was adopted, the House agreed to the suggestion made by the Speaker that the Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women and Girls Bill and the Children Bill, as passed by Rajya Sabha, might be referred to the same Select Committee and that the motion in respect of these Bills might be included at shorter notice on 25 August 1956. Accordingly, entries for reference of these two Government Bills were included in the List of Business for that date with the following note: 'Included by Order of the House'.

It is an established practice that a part-discussed item of business is put down before any other fresh item<sup>153</sup>.

However, a part-discussed item of business may not be given priority over other items if the Speaker, on a request made by the Minister concerned or the Leader of the House, so directs or where it has been announced in advance that discussion of a particular item will be taken up on a particular day<sup>154</sup>.

If no reasons are furnished by the Government for not including a part-discussed item in the List of Business for the following day, the Speaker has directed that item be put down in the list as the first item after formal business<sup>155</sup>.

However, an item of business like consideration and passing of an Appropriation Bill, on which practically no time is taken in the House, may be put down in the List of Business before the part-discussed item.

153. L.S. Deb., 21-11-1956, cc. 301-02; c. 61. see also Revised Supplementary List of Business for 17-2-1961.

154. In the following cases, for instance, on requests made by the Minister concerned or the Leader of the House, part-discussed items were not given precedence over other items of business:

Further discussion on the motion regarding the Second Five-Year Plan was normally to continue on 11 November 1957. The item was instead included in the List of Business for 20 November 1957. Discussion of the resolution regarding disapproval of the Reserve Bank of India Ordinance and consideration of the Reserve Bank of India (Second Amendment) Bill were to be resumed on 25 November 1957. Instead, the Naga Hills Tuensang Area Bill was given precedence over these two items.

On 9 December 1957, the Preventive Detention (Continuance) Bill, 1957, was given precedence over further consideration of the Payment of Wages (Amendment) Bill, 1957. In the Revised List of Business for 5 May 1961, the motion for reference to Select Committee of the Indian Railways (Amendment) Bill was included before the part-discussed motion regarding the Report of the University Grants Commission.

In the Lists of Business for 16 and 17 September 1963, the motion regarding International Situation was included before the Drugs and Cosmetics (Amendment) Bill, which was part-discussed on 13 September 1963. This was done as it had been announced in advance that the motion regarding International Situation would be discussed on these two days. In the Revised List of Business for 29 July 1975, Delhi Sales Tax Bill was given precedence over the Defence of India (Amendment) Bill which was part-discussed. On an enquiry by a member, the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs explained the circumstances for altering the order of business—L.S. Deb., 29-7-1975, cc. 11-26; 24-8-1976, c. 258. In the Revised List of Business for 24 November 1987, the Constitution (Fifty-sixth Amendment) Bill was given precedence over further consideration of the Regional Rural Banks (Amendment) Bill.

In the Revised List of Business for 15 December 1987, the Direct Tax Laws (Amendment) Bill and the Chandigarh (Delegation of Power) Bill, were included before the All India Council for Technical Education Bill which was part-discussed.

In the Revised List of Business for 18 December 1991, the Constitution (Seventy-fourth Amendment) Bill and the Government of National Capital Territory Bill were included before the Family Courts (Amendment) Bill which was part-discussed. In the Revised List of Business, for 22 December, 1993, the Kalakshetra Foundation Bill was given precedence over further consideration of the Sick Industrial Companies (Special Provisions) Amendment Bill.

155. The Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Amendment Bill, which was part-discussed on 29 August 1963, was excluded by the Government in the List of Business for 2 September 1963, without giving any reasons. The order of business as furnished by the Government was changed and the part-discussed Bill was included in the List for 2 September 1963.

Normally, the order of business cannot be varied on the day that business is set down for disposal unless the House agrees or the Speaker is satisfied that there is sufficient ground for such variation<sup>156</sup>. The Speaker has ruled that an item of business fixed for a particular day should normally not be postponed<sup>157</sup>. However, on a request made by a Minister and agreed to by the House, the order of an item of business as set down in the List of Business may be changed<sup>158</sup> or the item may not be taken up<sup>159</sup>.

When an item of business included in the List of Business is sought to be deleted through a corrigendum, the Minister concerned has to explain to the Speaker the reasons for which deletion is sought<sup>160</sup>. An item of business which is included in the List of Business for a day may, however, not be taken up owing to thin attendance in the House<sup>161</sup>. Similarly, certain items of formal business may not be taken up if that day is assigned for disposal of some important business<sup>162</sup>.

After an item of business fixed at a particular hour is disposed of before the normal hour of adjournment of the House, any earlier item in the List of Business which had remained undisposed may be taken up.

The Speaker has ruled that an item of business which has been included in the advance List of Business cannot be taken out on the ground that it may not meet with approval of all sections of the House; that if an item, including the one with which both Houses are concerned, stands on the List of Business, it shall not be taken out of the List on account of any objection raised in the other House, as the appropriate time for the other House to express its views is when the item is brought before that House on a message sent from the House<sup>163</sup>.

If the House adjourns without transacting any business on account of the death of a sitting member or a former member or an outstanding personage or for any other reason, the formal items of business included in the List of Business for that day may be put down in the List of Business for the following day<sup>164</sup>. If it is decided that the House would adjourn after obituary references, no other business is put down in the List of Business<sup>165</sup>.

For instance, on 30 August 1969, the order of legislative business as set down in the Revised List of Business for that day was varied twice with the consent of the House, to enable the House to dispose of certain Bills without any discussion—L.S. Deb., 30-8-1969, c. 3; 22-3-1974, cc. 204-05; and 2-9-1976, cc. 171-77.

On a motion moved by the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs and adopted by the House, the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes Orders (Amendment) Bill, was postponed before the Minister in whose name the item stood moved the motion for consideration of the Bill. L.S. Deb., 24-5-1976, cc. 39-48.

LIST OF BUSINESS

A List of Business is the list of items of business, Government and private members<sup>166</sup>, which are scheduled to be taken up in the House on a particular day or a number of days in the order as indicated therein. The Secretary-General causes the List of Business to be prepared which is made available to each member before the commencement of the sitting of the House on that day<sup>167</sup>. The first item in the List of Business is generally "Questions". However, items like oath/affirmation by new members, obituary references and introduction of new Ministers to the House precede "Questions"<sup>168</sup>. The item "Questions" is included in the List of Business but the lists of Starred, Unstarred and Short Notice Questions set down for answer on the day are printed and circulated separately. Similarly, the amendments to be moved to a Bill, motion, resolution, etc., and cut motions are printed separately. The List of Business, the list of questions, the list of amendments, the list of cut motions, and the Bills, all combined, form the Order Paper for the day.

No business not included in the List of Business for the day is permitted to be taken up at any sitting unless the Speaker gives previous permission to do so<sup>169</sup>. In case a member desires to raise a matter not included in the List of Business, he has to write to the Speaker stating the matter that he wishes to raise and if the Speaker gives the permission, only then the member can raise it in the House.

The following items of business may, however, be taken up in the House without any entry in the List of Business:

Oath or affirmation by a member returned in a bye-election; obituary reference on the demise of a sitting member or a former member or other leading personality; adjournment motion; communication of a message from the President; announcement or ruling by the Speaker; question of privilege; announcement of a communication regarding arrest, etc., of a member; announcement regarding resignation of a member; and motion regarding the suspension of a rule.

166. The List of Business for a day on which Private Members' Business is also to be taken up by the House is divided into two parts-Part I, indicating Government Business and Part II, indicating Private Members' Business.

For details regarding Private Members' Business, see relevant portions of Chapter XXII and XXV—Legislation and Resolutions, respectively.

169. Rule 31(2); L.S. Deb., 13-3-1961, cc. 4632-36.

Special references on certain solemn occasions are also made in the House without any entry in the List of Business<sup>170</sup>. Secret Bills are allowed to be introduced, with the prior approval of the Speaker, without an entry being made in the List of Business<sup>171</sup>. In special circumstances, an emergent bill has been allowed to be introduced even though prior entry regarding that item was not made in the List of Business for the day<sup>172</sup>. Similarly, a Minister may be allowed to make a statement on a matter of urgent public importance which cannot be delayed, provided the Minister has made a request to the Speaker previously<sup>173</sup>.

In the exercise of his discretionary powers, the Speaker may also permit consideration of an item of business not included in the List of Business<sup>174</sup>, giving due consideration to the wishes of the House and urgency of the business to be transacted.

Entry in the List of Business regarding an item which is contingent on the passing of some other item of business is made under the heading 'Contingent Notice of Bill, Motion or Resolution', etc.<sup>175</sup>

Items of business requiring notice under the rules are put down in the List of Business only after the notice period has expired<sup>176</sup>. An item of business is also not included in the List of Business unless the provisions of the rules relating to that class of business have been complied with. If a member or Minister concerned intimates that he proposes to move for the suspension of a rule or a part of a rule in relation to a particular item of business, that item, along with necessary motion for suspension of the rule, is included in the List of Business<sup>177</sup>.

CHAPTER XIX

Questions

The development of question procedure in Parliament is intimately associated with the constitutional changes that have taken place from time to time in the composition, functions and powers of the Legislature. With every instalment of constitutional reforms which the British Parliament introduced in India, the scope for asking questions widened.

The first Legislative Council set up under the Charter Act of 1853 was primarily meant for making laws and regulations. The Charter Act did not define the powers of the Legislative Council, but the Council showed some degree of independence by asking questions as to, and discussing the propriety of the measures of the Executive Government<sup>1</sup>.

The Indian Councils Act of 1861, which explicitly circumscribed the functions of the Legislative Council to purely legislative matters, was retrograde in many respects and this led to a demand for reform of the Legislative Council so as to allow its members to elicit information by means of questions. This was conceded under the Indian Councils Act of 1892.

The rules framed under the Indian Councils Act of 1892 laid down that a member who wished to ask a question should give at least six clear days' notice in writing to the Secretary in the Legislative Department<sup>2</sup>. The Speaker of the Council<sup>3</sup> could allow a question to be asked with shorter notice than six clear days and could in any case require longer notice, if he thought fit, or extend the time for answering a question, if necessary<sup>4</sup>. The questions permitted to be asked by the Speaker were entered in the Notice Paper for the day and were asked in the order in which they stood therein. The questions were taken up as the first item of business<sup>5</sup>. A question had to be read by the member by whom it was framed, or in his absence, if he so desired, by some other member on his behalf, and the answer was given by the member-in-charge of the Department concerned, or by any other member whom the Speaker of the Council designated for the purpose<sup>6</sup>.

  2. Rules for the Conduct of Business in the Legislative Council, framed under the Indian Councils Act, 1892, Rule 6.
  3. Until 1921, the Governor-General used to preside over the deliberations of the Legislative Council. In that year, the Council gave place to the Legislative Assembly and its deliberations began to be conducted by an officer known as President. In 1947, the designation was changed to Speaker. The term "Speaker" has, however, been used throughout in the text.

  5. Ibid., Rule 10.
  6. Rules for the Conduct of Business in the Legislative Council, op. cit., Rule 11.

No discussion was permitted in respect of an answer given to a question<sup>7</sup>. The question asked and the answer given were entered in the proceedings of the Council<sup>8</sup>.

The next stage in the development of the question procedure was reached with the framing of rules under the Indian Councils Act, 1909. The minimum period of notice was extended from six to ten clear days<sup>9</sup> and, for the first time, a provision was made for the asking of supplementary questions; a member who had asked a question could now put a supplementary question seeking further elucidation of any matter of fact regarding which a request for information had been made in his original question<sup>10</sup>. The member-in-charge of the Department concerned could, however, decline to answer a supplementary question, in which case the supplementary question could be asked in the form of a fresh question at a subsequent meeting of the Council<sup>11</sup>. Moreover, any supplementary question could be disallowed by the Speaker without giving any reason therefore<sup>12</sup>.

The rule regarding the form of question was also made more comprehensive. It was laid down that questions of excessive length or those containing arguments, inferences, ironical expressions or defamatory statements, or referring to the conduct or character of persons except in their official or public capacity, or questions asking for expression of an opinion or the solution of a hypothetical proposition were not admissible<sup>13</sup>.

The rule regarding disallowing of questions by the Speaker was simplified: the power vested hitherto in the Speaker to disallow any question without giving any reason therefore, other than that in his opinion it could not be answered consistently with the public interest, was amplified to vest in the Speaker the power to disallow any question, or any part thereof, if, in his opinion, the nature of the question was as such that it should be asked in the Legislative Council of a Local Government<sup>14</sup>.

No discussion was permitted in the Council in respect of any orders of the Speaker regarding admissibility or otherwise of a question<sup>15</sup>.

7. Ibid., Rule 13.

8. Ibid., Rule 14.

The questions were, however, not as frequent or numerous as these are today. The questions and the replies thereof were sometimes regular speeches, both the questions and answers running into two or three foolscap-pages. See Abstract of the Proceedings of the Council of the Governor-General of India, 1895, Vol. XXXIV, pp. 165-68.

Hitherto, the Speaker could rule that an answer to a question entered in the List of Business might be given on the ground of public interest although the question was not asked; now it was provided that the Speaker could direct that an answer be given on the ground of public interest even though the question might have been withdrawn<sup>16</sup>.

The next significant stage in the development of the question procedure came with the coming into force of the Montague-Chelmsford Reforms of 1919. The Rules and the Standing Orders framed at that time introduced certain notable changes.

Hitherto, no fixed time for questions had been provided; the Speaker could assign such time as, with due regard to the public interest, he might consider reasonable for asking or answering of questions. Under the new rules, the first hour of every meeting was earmarked for this purpose<sup>17</sup>. No business except obituary references or other purely formal business with the permission of the Speaker could precede questions<sup>18</sup>.

Though the rules provided that the Speaker could allow a question to be asked with shorter notice than ten clear days under the new rules, he could reduce the normal period of notice only with the consent of the Government member concerned with the question<sup>19</sup>.

Where a member desired to have a question answered at short notice he gave 'private notice' both to the Speaker and the Member-in-charge<sup>20</sup>. Such questions, if admitted, were taken up after the Question Hour had expired or after the questions included in the List of Business had been answered, as the case might be, if the latter did not consume the first hour of proceedings<sup>21</sup>.

Ordinarily, the Speaker did not consent to waive the ten-day period of notice; but when notice was given within ten days of the probable end of the session, it was the practice, without prejudice, to suggest to the Department concerned the desirability, where possible, of waiving the period of notice and answering the question<sup>22</sup>.

A question addressed to a member of the Government was required to relate to the public affairs with which he was officially concerned, or to a matter of administration for which he was responsible<sup>23</sup>. Questions could also be addressed to a non-official member provided they related to some

Bill, resolution or any other matter connected with the business of the Assembly for which that member was responsible<sup>24</sup>.

In September 1921, a practice was introduced under which a question to which a member desired an oral answer was distinguished by him with an asterisk. These were known as 'Starred Questions'. Questions not marked with an asterisk were printed on a separate paper and the answers to them were circulated subsequently and printed in the Official Report in a section separate from the Starred Questions. Where a Starred Question called for a long answer, the practice was to lay the answer on the Table of the Assembly<sup>25</sup>.

The Rules and Standing Orders laid down no limit to the number of questions which a member might ask on one day. Questions were printed in continuous order and were called in the order in which they stood on the list. Those remaining unanswered at the end of the Question Hour were carried over to the next day and so on<sup>26</sup>.

If on a question being called, it was not asked or the member in whose name it stood was absent, the Speaker, at the request of any other member, could direct that the answer to the question be given<sup>27</sup>.

The rule regarding supplementary questions was also amplified; not only the member who had given notice of a question but any member could now ask a supplementary question<sup>28</sup>. There was no limit, except that liable to be imposed at the discretion of the Speaker, to the number of supplementary questions. Ordinarily, the Speaker intervened only when the questioning of a member of Government by supplementaries had proceeded for some time. In no circumstances were questions permitted to expand into a debate<sup>29</sup>.

A member who had not taken the oath could not ask a question, nor could any other member ask it on his behalf<sup>30</sup>. The rule that the Speaker could enforce the answering of a question which had been withdrawn by the member concerned was omitted from the new provisions.

In 1937, certain radical amendments were made in the Rules<sup>31</sup>, which are as follows:

A member had to specify the official designation of the Government member to whom the question was addressed and if addressed to a non-official member, the name of such member<sup>32</sup>. In case a member wrongly addressed a question, it was left to the Department to whose representative the question had been addressed to inform the Legislative Assembly Department as to which Government member was responsible for answering that question. The Legislative Assembly Department without further reference to the member placed the question on the paper for the first day appointed for the answer of questions by the Government member concerned for which the question list had not already been issued, provided that the member asking the question had not exhausted his quota of questions for that day. Where he had exhausted his quota for that day, he had to give fresh notice of the question<sup>33</sup>.

A member had to specify the date on which the question was proposed to be placed on the list of questions for answer<sup>34</sup>. In the case of a question which was addressed to the concerned Department but the member inadvertently gave a wrong date and wanted a reply thereto on a day not reserved for the Department which was concerned with the subject-matter thereof, the question was put down on the next day available for that Department.

No question was placed on the list of questions for answer until five clear days' notice of the admission of a question by the Speaker was given to the Government by the member concerned, except in the case of Short Notice Questions<sup>35</sup>.

Not more than five questions admitted in the name of the same member were called for answer on any one day<sup>36</sup>. However, members could give notice of more than five questions which, if admitted, were all printed in the final list of questions. But members were not free to ask any of their five questions printed in the list; instead, the questions were called in the order in which they stood on the list<sup>37</sup>. No limit was, however, prescribed for unstarred questions to be asked on any one day by a member.

The Question Hour was allotted on different days in rotation for the answering of questions by such Department or Departments as the Speaker (then designated as the President) provided from time to time, except in the case of questions addressed to non-official members<sup>38</sup>. Members could not give notice of any question until allotment of days to the various Departments for answering questions had been made<sup>39</sup>.

39. The Departments were classified in three groups and questions relating to each group were answered on an allotted day.

Questions were arranged in the list of questions according to priority of notice. Thereafter, questions relating to each Department were grouped together; the order of the Department inter se was arranged subsequently according to the days allotted to a Department or a group of Departments.

In case any question placed on the list of questions for answer on any day was not called for answer within the time available for answering questions on that day, the Government member to whom the question was addressed laid forthwith on the Table of the Assembly a written reply to the question; no oral reply was required to such question and no supplementary questions were asked in respect thereof<sup>40</sup>.

A member was given the choice of withdrawing his question or postponing it to a later day provided he gave a notice in writing any time before the commencement of the sitting for which his question was placed on the list. In the case of postponement, the question was placed on the list after all the questions which had not been so postponed and two clear days had expired from the time when such notice had been given<sup>41</sup>. In practice, the information regarding postponed questions was sent to the Departments concerned on that very day on which they were postponed, and printed supplementary lists were supplied to them.

The members could not enter into correspondence with the Speaker about their questions before they had been admitted or disallowed by him. In the case of questions which were referred back to members or on which correspondence ensued, they were treated as fresh notices and in such cases, members had to suggest a new date for answer. If a question was in order, it appeared in the list of questions for answer in the same form in which it was framed by the member and without any corrections.

In order to enable members to abstain from giving more notices of questions than could be disposed of ordinarily within one hour, an up-to-date list showing the total number of notices of questions pending, date-wise, was put up on the notice board every day<sup>42</sup>.

Thereafter, no change in the question procedure was effected, until the country attained Independence in 1947. Having become responsible to the Legislature, Government was obliged to place before Parliament information on all matters of administration. The most significant change was the abrogation of the rule relating to questions on foreign affairs, tribal and excluded areas and Indian States, etc., which were previously allowed to be asked only at the discretion of the Governor-General.

The Provisional Parliament which continued until the General Elections of 1952 framed an elaborate set of rules for the conduct of business which

Question Hour

Answers to oral questions are given only on the floor of the House. Till November 1969, it was an established practice in the Lok Sabha not to supply copies of answers in advance to members. The only exception in this regard had been that when long statements had to be laid on the Table in reply to starred questions, copies of the statements were made available to the members concerned on request, half-an-hour before the commencement of the Question Hour<sup>52</sup>. Similarly, when answer to a question referred to reply given to an earlier question or a document placed in Library, the same was made available to members for reference at least half-an-hour before the commencement of the sitting. From November 1969 till 1981, answers to Starred Questions were kept in the Notice Office and the Lobby for reference by members in both Houses. It was an informal arrangement but in 1981, after the Rules Committee approved it<sup>53</sup>, members were informed formally of the arrangement through the Bulletin.

Suggestions have been made from time-to-time by members that it would be helpful to them in framing supplementaries if copies of answers to questions were supplied in advance.

The first such suggestion was made in the Central Legislative Assembly on 1 March 1921, but it was not accepted because there was no provision in the Standing Orders or Rules under which answers could be supplied beforehand and also because there were obvious objections to the introduction of any such practice.

On 13 September 1935, a Select Committee was appointed to consider the desirability of amending the Standing Order relating to questions<sup>54</sup>. In its report, presented to the House on 6 March 1936, the Committee did not favour the procedure for supplying of answers to questions in advance because it would, inter alia, largely detract from the importance and interest of Question Hour and would tend to make the proceedings unreal.

The matter was again raised on 7 February 1946, when a member suggested that answers to questions might be placed on the Table an hour or so before the commencement of a sitting. The matter was considered at length by Speaker Mavalankar. While conceding that the introduction of the practice would not only save time but would also tend to make the supplementaries to the point, he, in his note recorded on 14 February 1948 for consideration of the Leader of the House, however, observed:

I feel that the atmosphere of viva voce proceedings of the House will be considerably lost, and it is possible that a large part of the House, who do not care to read the answers, may lose all interest in the supplementaries.

The Leader of the House agreed with the Speaker that printed answers would “take away considerably the interest and liveliness of the proceedings”.

The matter was settled finally in favour of the existing practice when on the issue being raised in the House on 25 February 1953, the Deputy Speaker who was in the Chair, observed:

That matter was considered a number of times and it was decided that the importance of the Question Hour would disappear if printed answers are distributed beforehand.

As per announcement made by the Speaker in Lok Sabha on 12 August 1969, arrangements were made from November 1969 on an experimental basis, for placing five sets of answers to starred and short notice questions in Parliamentary Notice Office half-an-hour before the commencement of the sitting.

In August 1982, on a representation made by a member, the matter was referred to the Rules Committee. The Committee discussed thread-bare the merits and demerits of the proposal. After taking note of the difficulties pointed out by Government which could arise, for example, if the answer was changed by the Minister concerned on the morning of the day on which the question was listed for reply or the question was withdrawn by the member at the last moment, the Committee recommended continuance of the practice of providing copies of answers to starred questions to the Parliamentary Notice Office about half-an-hour in advance before the sitting of the House and a few copies to be kept in the Outer Lobby. The Committee did not agree to the suggestions for making available copies of answers to questions either to members at their residence or to offices of Parties and Groups before these were actually answered in the House or laid on the Table of the House<sup>55</sup>.

In the Rajya Sabha, the issue was raised in 1968. During the discussion, it was pointed out that under the present procedure, a Minister could make changes in the answer to a question, which he had the right to do, till he stood up to give his oral answer; by that time he might receive some latest information or he might consult some document at the last minute and all this could make material difference to his answer. Hence, if answers were supplied in advance to members, besides diminishing the liveliness of the Question Hour, the Ministers would thereby be put to great embarrassment<sup>56</sup>.

However, the present practice in Rajya Sabha also is that answers to starred questions are available for perusal by members in the Notice Office about half-an-hour before the commencement of the sitting.

Unless the Speaker otherwise directs, the first hour of every sitting of the House is available for asking and answering questions<sup>57</sup>.

There is no Question Hour on a Saturday even if a sitting of the House is fixed on a Saturday for any special reason like presentation of Budget.

When, however, in the midst of a session a sitting of the House is fixed at short notice for a day which had not been originally included in the Calendar of Sittings, no time for asking and answering of questions is allotted for that day. Similarly, no question time is usually allotted when a session is extended by a day or a few days beyond the originally scheduled date of termination of the session. When, however, the decision to extend the session by a number of days is taken sufficiently in advance of the last date for giving notices of questions for the originally scheduled dates, Question Hour is allotted for the additional days of the session<sup>58</sup>.

The making and subscribing of oath or affirmation by any newly-elected member and making of any obituary references are the items of business which precede the asking and answering of questions<sup>59</sup>.

The time spent on the ringing of the quorum bell and taking a count of the House<sup>60</sup>, making and subscribing of oath or affirmation by members<sup>61</sup>, obituary references<sup>62</sup>, announcements made by the Chair<sup>63</sup>, or any other matter<sup>64</sup> is counted in the time allotted for questions and the Question Hour is not extended beyond the first hour so that no inroad is made into the time fixed for other business before the House. However, on occasions, though rare, questions may be answered even after the Question Hour is over, with the permission of the Speaker if — the Minister represents to the Speaker that the subject-matter of the question is one of special public interest<sup>65</sup>; or the member represents to the Speaker that the question is of public interest and the Minister indicates his willingness to answer the question<sup>66</sup>.

On very rare occasions, the Question Hour may collapse before time<sup>67</sup>. This happens mostly due to absence of members in whose name questions stand in the list of questions for oral answer.

67. The Question Hour collapsed before time on 17-8-1976; 22-4-1985; 24-3-1986; 29-4-1987; 8-5-1987; 7-3-1988; 10-5-1988; 2-12-1988; 19-4-1989; 8-5-1989; 6-3-1991 and 30-11-2009.

In very exceptional cases, Question Hour may be dispensed with for making available more time to other business or to take up some other urgent business, only if the House unanimously agrees<sup>68</sup>. The Speaker has rarely exercised the power vested in him under the Rules of directing non-allotment of the first hour of any sitting(s) for asking and answering of questions<sup>69</sup>. The only exception in the normal course is the first session of each year and the first session after general election of Lok Sabha when Question Hour is not provided on or upto the day of President's Address. The other occasions when the Speaker used this power were in 1975 and 1976 when at the request of the Government, the Speaker directed that there would be no Question Hour during the Fourteenth and Eighteenth Sessions of the Fifth Lok Sabha<sup>70</sup>. In both the cases, on commencement of the sessions, motions were moved on behalf of Government and adopted by the House which inter alia provided for suspension of the Question Hour<sup>71</sup>. The Speaker used this power also during the Fourth and Fifth Sessions of Ninth Lok Sabha convened on 7 and 16 November 1990, respectively. On both the occasions, the sessions were convened for a specific purpose, viz. to enable the Council of Ministers to seek a vote of confidence of the House. As such, no Question Hour was fixed on both occasions. Also, during the Fourteenth Lok Sabha, a session was convened on 21 and 22 July 2008, to enable the Government to seek a vote of confidence in the House. No Question Hour was held on these dates too.

There are instances when the Speaker did not agree to suspend the Question Hour<sup>72</sup> or did not allow a member to raise point of order for dispensing with the Question Hour<sup>73</sup>. Similarly, in some cases, the Speaker withheld his consent to the moving of the motion for suspension of the rule regarding Question Hour<sup>74</sup>. There have also been instances when motion for suspension of rule regarding Question Hour was moved but negated by the House<sup>75</sup>.

In the event of Question Hour having been dispensed with, the normal practice is that all starred questions for the day are treated as unstarred and their answers, together with answers to the unstarred questions, if any, are printed in the debates of that day. There have, however, been instances when such questions (both starred and unstarred) were, with the agreement of the House, transferred in toto to another date for which no question time had been allotted<sup>76</sup>.

When the Question Hour is not dispensed with, but questions are not taken up for answer orally owing to uproarious scenes and continuous interruptions, all the starred questions listed for the day are treated as unstarred and their answers, together with answers to other listed unstarred questions, are printed in the debates of that day<sup>77</sup>. When the Question Hour is suspended after some questions have been orally answered, all the remaining starred questions are treated as unstarred and their answers, together with answers to unstarred questions, are printed in the debates of the day<sup>78</sup>.

When the Question Hour is dispensed with owing to the cancellation of one or more sittings of the House or its adjournment without transacting any business, questions entered in both starred and unstarred lists of questions for the days are deemed to be unstarred questions for the next sitting, and such questions with their answers are deemed to have been laid on the Table and are included in the debates of the next sitting day<sup>79</sup>. There have been instances, although very rare, when such questions were transferred to next<sup>80</sup> or earlier<sup>81</sup> day on which a sitting was fixed in lieu of a cancelled sitting. In case the House adjourns after obituary reference or otherwise without taking up the questions and meets again after sometime the same day, the replies to starred as well as unstarred questions are deemed to have been laid on the Table and printed in the proceedings of that day<sup>82</sup>. When sittings of the House towards the end of the session are cancelled and it is decided to conclude the session earlier,

Also on 3 March 1969, the Speaker informed the House, “since the Holi festival falls on the next day i.e. 4 March 1969, the House would not sit on that day and the business including Question Hour scheduled for 4 March 1969 would also be taken up on 5 March 1969”—*L.S. questions listed for such cancelled sittings lapse<sup>83</sup>.

Period of Notice

Unless the Speaker otherwise directs, a member is required to give not less than fifteen clear days' notice of a question<sup>84</sup>. For the purpose of counting, not less than fifteen clear days, the date on which the question, if admitted, will be put down for answer and the day on which the notice is received, are both excluded. Till Fourth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha, the period for notice of a question was 'not less than ten days and not more than twenty one clear days' before amendment of the Rule 33<sup>85</sup>. Normally, the Speaker does not agree to shorten the notice period. But in exceptional circumstances and in the interest of the members, he may relax the notice period. During Eleventh Session of Fourteenth Lok Sabha, Summons for commencement of Lok Sabha from 10 August 2007 were issued at a very short notice i.e. on 28 July 2007 (Saturday). The date of holding the ballot, the last date of receipt of notices of Starred and Unstarred Question for 10 August 2007 was the same i.e. 30 July 2007. The next date after issue of Summons, i.e. 29 July 2007 being Sunday, sufficient time was not left for members to give notices of questions for the first sitting i.e. 10 August 2007. As an exceptional case, for the convenience of members who were out of station, Notices of questions for the first sitting of the session, i.e. 10 August 2007 received upto 1300 hours on 30 July 2007 were included in the ballot and the ballot for that date was held at 1600 hours.<sup>86</sup> Similarly, the summons for the Twelfth Session of the Fourteenth Lok Sabha which was to commence from 15 November 2007, were issued late, i.e. on 5 November 2007. The minimum period of notice of ten clear days as was required under the then provisions of Rules 33 and 35, in respect of the sittings of the House to be held on 15 and 16 November 2007 could not be adhered to. In order to protect the interests of members, the Speaker relaxed the above conditions and fixed the Question Hour for 15 and 16 November 2007 with a notice period shorter than the minimum stipulated ten clear days and the Ministries concerned were informed accordingly. Printed lists for starred and unstarred questions for 15 and 16 November 2007 were circulated to the Ministries and members on 10 and 12 and 16 November 2007, respectively. Consequently, for the Question

83. During the Tenth Session of Fourteenth Lok Sabha, the House was adjourned sine die on 17 May 2007 and consequently, the notices of question for oral as well as written answers for 18, 21 and 22 May 2007 were treated as lapsed. Also in the Eleventh Session of Fourteenth Lok Sabha, the questions listed for answer on 11,12,13 and 14 September 2007 stood lapsed consequent upon the early adjournment of session on 10 September 2007. Similarly during the Thirteenth Session of Fourteenth Lok Sabha, the List of Business for oral and written answers for 6, 7, 8 and 9 May 2008 were treated as lapsed as the Session was adjourned sine die on 5 May 2008 instead of 9 May 2008. Further, during Thirteenth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha also, the questions in the list of questions for oral as well as written answers on 9 and 10 May 2013 were treated as lapsed consequent upon adjournment of the Thirteenth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha on 8 May 2013.

84. Rule 33. Also see 2R (RC-4 L.S.) Min. 30 August 1974. On the recommendations of the Rules Committee, the procedure for giving maximum 21 days' notice of a question was relaxed and then revived on 28 August 1968, and 29 August 1969, respectively. However, from Fifth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha (2010) the notice period for questions has been fixed as fifteen clear days.

Hour fixed for 15 and 16 November 2007, the Ministries were actually given only three clear days' time to reply to the questions instead of the normal requirement of five clear days' time<sup>87</sup>. In yet another instance, during the Thirteenth session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha, Speaker in exercise of power vested under Rule 33 of the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in the Lok Sabha had relaxed the notice period for giving notices of questions for 22 February 2013. The relaxation in the notice period for the said date was thirteen clear days. Accordingly, the notices of question for the said day received upto 1300 hours on 8 February 2013 were balloted at 1600 hours on the day<sup>88</sup>.

The notices can be given from the day following the day on which summons are issued, but notices received more than fifteen days in advance are balloted along with notices received on fifteenth day.

Notices of questions for the last days of a session which fall short of ten clear days are returned to the members and are not accepted as notices for the next session.

A chart showing dates of receipt of notices of questions in respect of each sitting is circulated to members along with summons.

Unless the Speaker otherwise directs, no question is placed on the list of questions for answer until five days have expired from the day when notice of such question was sent to the Minister to whom it is addressed<sup>89</sup>.

The printed lists of questions for answer on a particular day are supplied to the Minister concerned five days before the due date of answer so that he may know the admitted version of the questions and prepare the answer for the same.

Till November 1962, with a view to enabling the collection of material for preparation of replies to questions, advance copies of notices of all questions after receipt in the Secretariat were sent to the Government under an informal arrangement. As a result of simplification of the question procedure agreed to by the Third Lok Sabha in 1962, the practice of sending advance copies of notices of all questions to Ministries was dispensed with. Instead, it was decided to make available to Ministries advance copies of only admitted questions soon after a decision regarding their admission was taken<sup>90</sup>. Advance copies of questions soon after admission are collected by the representatives of Ministries from the Lok Sabha Secretariat under an informal arrangement with a view to enabling the Ministries to have more time to prepare their replies, but authentic text of a question, as admitted by the Speaker, is to be taken only from the final printed list. The advance copy is superscribed at the top as "Provisionally Admitted Question".

The practice of sending advance copies of all notices of questions was started in 1937 when some heads of Departments represented to the Speaker that five clear days' notice of admission of questions given to them involved extreme pressure and the risk of questions receiving insufficiently considered replies, and suggested that advance copies of questions might be made available to them at as early a stage as possible after the receipt of the notice by the Legislative Assembly Department<sup>91</sup>.

On receipt of the advance copy, the Ministry concerned could, and very often did, furnish factual information of the following nature for the consideration of the Speaker—whether the question was covered either as a whole or in part by an earlier question or answer; whether the requisite information was already available in an accessible document or in ordinary works of reference;

whether the subject-matter of the question was not primarily the concern of the Government of India; and any other factual information relevant to the disposal of a question.

Form of Notices of Questions

Notice of a question is given by a member in writing addressed to the Secretary-General and besides the text of the question, it is required to specify—the official designation of the Minister to whom the question is addressed; and the date on which the question is proposed to be placed on the list of questions for answer<sup>92</sup>.

In order to enable members to address their questions to the Minister concerned correctly, a booklet showing subjects allotted to various Ministries for the purpose of answering questions is circulated to all members on the constitution of each new Lok Sabha, and as and when any changes take place in allotment of subjects, members are informed of the same either through the Bulletin or by issuing an addendum to the subjects' pamphlet.

Till the Fourth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha, there was no restriction on the number of notices of Starred and Unstarred Questions which a member could give under the Rule. But from the Fifth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha, a member is allowed to give not more than ten notices of questions both for oral and written answers, concerning that Minister(s) during the period of that session only. Members who intend to give notices for the entire session may do so by indicating their inter se preference. In case, no such preferences are indicated notices of questions in excess of ten per day are considered for subsequent day(s) on the basis of point of time of their receipt.<sup>93</sup>

Notices are received on all working days in the Parliamentary Notice Office and Distribution Branch between the hours notified from time to time, following the date

91. Indian Legislative Assembly Rules, 1937, Rule 8(ii).

92. Rule 34.

93. L.S. Deb., 24-9-1965, c. 7422.

on which summons for a session have been issued and a paragraph regarding allotment of days for answering questions by Ministers has been notified in the Bulletin. The inter se priority of such notices is determined by ballot<sup>94</sup>. Notices sent by post are also accepted but telegraphic notice of a question is not valid.

Ballots of notices of questions are held fifteen days in advance of each allotted day and all notices received upto 10.00 hours on the day of the ballot are included in the ballot. Where the gap between the date on which summons are issued and the first day allotted during the session for answering questions is so short that notices sent by members who are out of station cannot reach fifteen days in advance of the allotted day, dates for holding ballots for the first few days of the session are under orders of the Speaker, fixed for less than fifteen days in advance of the allotted day. At times, ballots for more than one allotted day may be held on the same day. Separate ballots are held for notices of starred and unstarred questions.

Where identical notices of a question are received at the same point of time from more than one member, a ballot is held to determine inter se precedence and notice from the member securing first position in the ballot is treated as valid and the notices from other members are disallowed.

All notices are arranged according to the time of receipt. After the priority of all notices received for a day has been determined, questions are serially diarized in the order of priority secured in the ballot. Notices of unstarred questions bear a different series of serial numbers than the one allotted to notices of starred questions. Typed copies of admitted questions only are forwarded in advance to the Ministers concerned.

Requests by members on the floor of the House to treat their supplementary questions as notices of regular questions for a future date have not been acceded to as these do not comply with the requirements of notices<sup>95</sup>.

Notice of each question is signed by a member separately, and in order to avoid any mistake in deciphering the signature, he has also to write down his division number and name in block letters<sup>96</sup>. Unsigned notices of questions are not accepted and they are returned to members concerned for signatures<sup>97</sup>. Similarly, where a member's signature on notices of questions does not tally with his specimen signature and their genuineness is in doubt, such notices are not treated as valid till the member owns that he has signed those notices. No other person can sign the notice of a question for or on behalf of the member.

Members are required to give notices of their questions in English or Hindi only, and in a legible form so as to obviate any chance of mistake in transcription. A member must specify only one date and not alternative dates for answer to a question. Requests from members that their questions bearing no dates for answers may be put down for answer on any date convenient to the Secretariat or the Minister concerned are not acceded to. In such cases, the member is requested to indicate the dates himself.

Notices of questions can be given by members on plain sheets of paper, provided the basic requirements of notices, i.e., date for answer, designation of Minister to whom the question is addressed, the signature and the division number of the member, etc., are complied with. However, standardized printed forms for giving notices of starred, unstarred and short notice questions are made available to members on request by the Parliamentary Notice Office<sup>98</sup>. A notice with the text of the question pasted thereon or notices bearing stamped signature of members or signed in pencil are not accepted as a valid notice and returned to the member. Notices of questions, whether starred or unstarred, received from a member under detention for unspecified period are treated as unstarred questions only and dealt with accordingly. It has been held that a member can table notices of questions but cannot participate before actually taking oath or making affirmation.<sup>99</sup>

If a question relates to more than one subject, it is split up into two or more separate and self-contained questions and are dealt with Ministry-wise so that the answers thereto are clear and unambiguous<sup>100</sup>.

If a question is wrongly addressed to a Minister, the Secretariat is informed by the Minister that the question is being transferred to another Minister within whose purview it falls. In such cases, the transfer of the question in the name of the appropriate Minister is effected by the Secretariat only on receipt of intimation of acceptance from the Minister to whom the question has been so transferred<sup>101</sup>. If at the initial examination of the question by the Secretariat it is clear that the notice of the question has not been addressed to the correct Minister, the notice is transferred to the correct Minister and the member is informed.

A question is normally admitted for answer on the date specified by the member in the notice. Where, however, it is found necessary to refer the notice of the question either to the Minister or to the member concerned to ascertain facts, the question, if found admissible, is put down for a date later than the one specified by the member in the notice<sup>102</sup>.

Status of Notices of Questions on Lok Sabha Website<sup>103</sup>

Since Twelfth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha, the status of Notices of Questions is made available on the Lok Sabha Website for information of members. As the information has been put under restricted circulation, a login page has been created for each member for the purpose. However, the practice of sending hard copies of ballot results to the Parliamentary Notice Office (PNO) of Lok Sabha still continues.

Questions for Oral Answer

A member who desires an oral answer to his question is required to distinguish it by an asterisk. If he does not so distinguish it, the question, if admitted, is printed in the list of questions for written answer<sup>104</sup>.

If in the opinion of the Speaker, any question given notice of for oral answer is of such a nature that a written reply would be more appropriate, he directs that it be placed on the list of questions for written answer. Before so directing, the Speaker, if he thinks fit, may ask the member who has given notice of a question for oral answer to state in brief his reasons for desiring an oral answer<sup>105</sup>.

In order to ensure that the list of questions for oral answer is manageable and important questions are reached for oral answer, the following types of questions are usually transferred to the list of questions for written answer:

- (i) questions asking for information of a statistical nature<sup>106</sup>;
- (ii) questions going into details where it is obvious that the reply will be long e.g., resolutions of a conference or recommendations of an expert committee and action taken thereon etc.;
- (iii) questions which raise only matters of local or parochial interest, e.g., the opening of level crossing, flag station or public call office<sup>107</sup>;
- (iv) questions relating to representation in the services of communities protected under the Constitution such as the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes in which no question of policy or administration is involved for elucidation on the floor of the House<sup>108</sup>;
- (v) questions relating to administrative detail, e.g., the strength of staff in a Government Office, Embassy, etc.<sup>109</sup>;
- (vi) questions on which prima facie there could be no scope for supplementaries, such as reports under consideration or matters under correspondence or diplomatic negotiations;
- (vii) questions asking for statements to be laid on the Table;
- (viii) questions generally not of sufficient public importance, but of interest only to a limited section of the people, e.g., provision of creches in mines or rest houses for ticket examiners on railways, etc.;
- (ix) questions on matters relating to a Statutory body, supplementaries to which might affect the autonomy of that body<sup>110</sup>;

- (x) question on a subject on which a number of questions have been answered in the same session and if admitted as starred, supplementaries thereon might be repetition of the same matters<sup>111</sup>;
- (xi) questions to elicit factual information with little scope for supplementaries<sup>112</sup>;
- (xii) questions on which a discussion under Rule 193 or Calling Attention under Rule 197, etc. has been fixed or already held<sup>113</sup>;
- (xiii) questions seeking information on defence purchases, defence preparedness, foreign relations or some such matters on which disclosure of information in reply to supplementaries might be prejudicial to the security of the country or relations with friendly countries<sup>114</sup>;
- (xiv) questions seeking factual information on matters sub judice or under investigation by statutory tribunals/other investigating agencies<sup>115</sup>;
- (xv) questions relating to elections and Election Commission, on the consideration that the supplementaries thereon could bring the conduct of the Chief Election Commissioner into discussion<sup>116</sup>;
- (xvi) questions seeking information about specific districts of a State<sup>117</sup>;
- (xvii) questions on matters where public interest may suffer if these are put down as starred<sup>118</sup>;
- (xviii) questions going into administrative details of a public undertaking/statutory body<sup>119</sup>; and
- (xix) questions seeking details of offers received in response to notices inviting tenders where Government takes the plea of public interest<sup>120</sup>.

A question, notice of which has been received as starred, but which has been admitted as unstarred and printed in the list of questions for written answer, is not reconverted as starred on representation from the member concerned. In such cases, the member is informed that he may give a fresh notice of question after taking into account the reply to be given to the unstarred question, for being considered for admission as a starred question. However, in a rare case, when notice of a starred question with first preference of the member was included in the list of questions for written answers and another question of the member was included in the list of questions for oral answer, on representation by the member, the Speaker agreed to his first preference question being included in the starred list. Accordingly, the question which had gone in the unstarred list was included in the starred list and the question which had earlier gone in the starred list was included in the unstarred list.<sup>121</sup>

Limits on the Number of Starred Questions

While a member can give a maximum of ten notices of questions both for oral and written answers, in all, for any day, not more than five admitted questions, both starred and unstarred combined, by one member are placed on the list of questions for any one day<sup>122</sup>. Out of these, not more than one question distinguished by the member with asterisk as starred, is placed on the list of questions for oral answer<sup>123</sup>.

The limit of one question in the name of one member for oral answer on any day does not include any short notice question of the member which may have been admitted for answer on that day. A member can also have more than one question in the starred list for a day when another question of the member included in the starred list of an earlier day has been included in the list on transfer or postponement.

The order in which questions for oral answers are to be placed is indicated by the member giving notice and if no such order is indicated, the questions are placed on the list of questions for oral answer in the order decided by the Speaker. However, the Speaker may not always go by the preference indicated by the member and select any one question of the member for inclusion in the starred list taking into account the public importance and urgency of the subject<sup>124</sup>.

In the list of questions for oral answer for any day, normally not more than twenty questions are included. This number may, however, be exceeded if transferred or postponed questions are added to the list. The remaining admitted questions in excess of twenty are transferred to the list of questions for written answer<sup>125</sup>.

Allotment of Days for Oral Answer to Questions

The time available for answering questions is allotted on different days in rotation for the answering of questions relating to such Ministry or Ministries as the Speaker may, from time to time, direct and on each such day, unless the Speaker with

123. From 12 November 1962 a limit of three questions was introduced to the number of questions by one member to be included in List of Starred Questions. The limit was further reduced to one question in 1974, L.S. Deb., 8-11-1962, c. 90; 9-11-1962, cc. 368-80; Bn. (II), 10-5-1974, para 1734.

the consent of the Minister concerned otherwise directs, only questions relating to the Ministry or Ministries for which time has been allotted on that day are placed on the list of questions for oral answer<sup>126</sup>.

As soon as the dates of commencement and conclusion of session of the House are fixed, days are allotted to the different Ministries for the answering of questions and are published in the Bulletin and issued along with the summons for the session. Information regarding allotment of days for answering questions is also included in the 'Provisional Calendar of Sittings'.

For the purpose of answering questions in the House, the Ministries of the Government of India were, till November 1962, divided into three groups and the Ministers answered questions by rotation. Since 1962, various Ministries have been divided into five groups instead of three so that questions relating to one Ministry are answered on a fixed day in a week<sup>127</sup>.

Based on past experience, the classification of Ministries into groups for the purpose of answering questions is done in such a way that each group of Ministries has, as far as practicable, approximately the same number of questions. It is also ensured that allotment of Ministries does not clash with the allotment decided for answering questions in the Rajya Sabha so that the Ministers are able to be present in both Houses on their respective days allotted for answering questions. It is also ensured that a Minister of Cabinet rank or a Minister holding independent charge is not required to come to either House for answering questions on more than one day in a week.

When in the middle of a session, a Ministry is bifurcated or a new Ministry is created, the dates for the asking and answering of questions relating to that Ministry are decided in consultation with the Ministry concerned and notified in the Bulletin.

Questions for Written Answer

If a Question is not distinguished by an asterisk or if a question placed on the list of questions for oral answer on any day is not called for answer within the time available for answering question on the day, a written answer to such questions shall be deemed to have been laid on the Table at the end of the Question Hour or as soon as the questions for oral answer have been disposed of, as the case may be, by the Minister to whom the question is address.<sup>128</sup> Till the Fourth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha, answers to starred questions were also laid on the Table when the member who had tabled the question is absent and had not given authority to any other member to ask the question on his behalf, or when called by the Speaker the member did not rise to ask his question.

From the Fifth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha onwards if the Question Hour on any day is despensd with for any reason, the answers to questions included in the lists of questions for oral as well as written answers for that day are deemed to have been laid on the Table by the Ministers to whom such questions are addressed and form part of the proceedings of the day. However, if the House does not continue with the sitting after dispensing with the Question Hour, the answers to questions included in the lists of questions for oral as well as written for that are deemed to have been laid on the Table after the Question Hour at the next sitting of the House and form part of the proceedings of that day.<sup>129</sup>

128. See Rule 39(1).

Written answers to questions are not formally laid by the Ministers, but are deemed to have been laid on the Table at the end of the Question Hour.

Not more than 230 admitted questions are included in the list of questions for written answer for any day. This number may be exceeded by twenty five at the most if there are questions pertaining to States under President's Rule. However, questions of a member in excess of five already included in the starred and unstarred lists of a day are treated as disallowed and not carried forward. The member concerned is informed about such questions. If he revives notices of these questions, the same are reconsidered for inclusion in subsequent available dates during the session. Admitted questions which do not find a place in a day's list, being in excess of 230 are automatically considered for inclusion in the subsequent available dates during the session. Notices of questions which, being in excess of 230 could not be included in any of the lists, lapsed at the end of the session<sup>130</sup>. Subsequently, from the Fifth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha, Notices of Questions which had gone in excess of 230 were returned to the member concerned and the member, if he so desired, tabled these notices of questions afresh<sup>131</sup>. However, this practice has undergone further change and now, the notices of questions in excess of 230 get lapsed and the copies of notices of such questions are provided to the members on request, if so desired by them<sup>132</sup>.

Answers to Questions

Answers to questions orally given in the House on any date are printed in the day's proceedings under the heading 'Oral Answers to Questions', while answers to questions for written answers, together with answers to such of the starred questions as have not been orally given in the House, are printed in the proceedings under the heading 'Written Answers to Questions'.

In the proceedings, answers to questions are shown in the name of the Minister who actually replies on the floor of the House. Written answers to questions as also replies in respect of such of the questions for oral answers as are laid on the Table are shown in the name of the Minister indicated in the replies.

When a question standing in the names of more than one member is answered, the names of all such members are shown in the printed proceedings of the House. Where, however, such a question is orally answered, the name of the member who actually asked it on the floor of the House is brought at the top and marked with the plus sign (+)<sup>133</sup>.

In the following cases, a question can appear in the list of questions in the names of more than one member—

When a large number of notices of questions are received from several members on the same or allied subjects and a consolidated question is admitted; and

When a question on a subject is admitted, the names of other members who have tabled questions on the same subject are added thereon. After the list of questions has been printed and circulated to members, if any question on the subject-matter already appearing in the list is received, the name of the member concerned is not added but his notice is disallowed and his attention is drawn to the question already admitted.

Where a question has been printed in the list of questions in the names of more than one member, the question is deemed to stand in the names of all those members.

An answer to a question in the Lok Sabha cannot refer to the answer to a question or proceedings in the Rajya Sabha during a current session and vice versa<sup>134</sup>. Therefore, there is no bar on similar questions being admitted in the two Houses in the same session.

If a question contains reference to a reply given to a question asked in the Rajya Sabha, such reference is omitted before admitting the question and the question is made self-contained.

When a statement is to be laid on the Table in answer to a question for oral answer or where reference is being made to an answer to a previous question, copies of the statement or the answer to the previous question are made available to the members concerned half-an-hour in advance in order to enable them to study the information contained therein for the purpose of asking supplementaries. Where a member other than the one who has tabled the question is keen to have a copy of the statement proposed to be laid on the Table in response to a question, he is supplied a copy thereof, subject to availability of spare copies. Copies of such statements or answers are considered confidential and are not released for publication till after the question is answered or the Question Hour is over, whichever is earlier. If for any reason such a statement is not laid on the Table or the answer is not given or the contents thereof are altered by the Minister while answering the question in the House, the original statement is not made public<sup>135</sup>.

133. The following footnote appears on the 'contents page' of the daily proceedings: "The sign+ marked above the name of a member indicates that the question was actually asked on the Floor of the House by him."

134. Rule 51.

135. Dir. 13(3).

Copies of printed 'Lists of Questions' are distributed to the accredited Press correspondents or sold to the public at a fixed price one hour before the Question Hour begins.

Correction of Answers to Questions or Statement made by Minister

When a reply to a question has been given on the floor of the House or laid on the Table and subsequently if it is found by the Minister that the reply furnished by him was incorrect, he cannot close the matter by clarifying the position direct to the concerned member, because after the reply is given in the House it becomes public and ceases to be a matter only between the Minister and the member. The Minister has, in such cases, either to make a statement or lay a statement on the Table correcting his earlier reply.

When a Minister wishes to correct any inaccuracy in the information which was given by him in answer to a starred or short notice or supplementary question or in debate, he gives notice of his intention to the Secretary-General and the notice is accompanied by a copy of the statement which he proposes to make to correct his earlier reply<sup>136</sup>. After such notice has been received from Minister, the relevant item is included in the List of Business for the appropriate day.

On the appointed day, when called upon to do so, the Minister makes the statement in the House<sup>137</sup>. The member, in response to whose question the answer was given earlier and which is sought to be corrected by the Minister, may be allowed to seek clarification after the Minister has made the statement<sup>138</sup>. If a member wants to ask a supplementary question about the correction made in answer to a question, he may write to the Speaker and seek his permission. If the Speaker permits, the item may be put down in the List of Business<sup>139</sup>.

In order to save the time of the House, lengthy statements are not permitted to be read out in the House, but are laid on the Table and are thus included in the printed debates of the day.

Since a statement correcting an earlier answer is in the nature of a fresh reply, it is open to members to ask supplementaries thereon<sup>140</sup>, though this option is seldom exercised. It may be argued that where a statement instead of being read out in the House, is directed to be laid on the Table, members would not be in a position to ask supplementaries thereon. To meet such contingency, arrangements exist whereby copies of the proposed statement correcting the answer to a starred/unstarred or short notice question are supplied by the Minister concerned to the Secretariat one day in advance.

140. Dir. 17(3).

A copy of the statement, together with a copy of the answer to which it refers, is made available to the member concerned through the Parliamentary Notice Office half an hour in advance of the sitting of the House in order to enable him to study the information contained therein<sup>141</sup> with the request that the same is to be treated as confidential till the matter is brought before the House<sup>142</sup>. On 25 April 2012, a statement was made by the Minister of Civil Aviation correcting the answer given to Starred Question No. 217 on 28 March 2012 regarding “Aircraft under EU emission trading”. Thereafter the Chair allowed the member, Asaduddin Owaisi, under Direction 17(3) to ask a supplementary question which was replied to by the Minister<sup>143</sup>.

If the notice of a Minister’s intention to correct any inaccuracy in the information furnished by him is received when Lok Sabha is not in session, the Secretary-General considers whether the statement can be made by the Minister during the next session, in which case the orders of the Speaker are taken. If the matter cannot wait till the next session, the statement is included in the official report of the proceedings of the House.

Where it is considered desirable not to publish the original answer, the revised answer alone is printed with a suitable footnote.

A private member may also seek the permission of the Speaker to correct an inaccuracy in a supplementary question asked by him. This is, however, rarely done, but where such permission is sought, the Speaker allows the member to correct the inaccuracy, provided it does not affect the answer already given by the Minister<sup>144</sup>.

Corrections to answers to questions/statements are required to be made as early as possible<sup>145</sup>, ordinarily within one week thereof<sup>146</sup>. The Speaker has ruled that in case of delay, the statement making correction should also contain reasons explaining the delay<sup>147</sup>. The Speaker may, however, on being satisfied with the reasons given, waive this requirement.

Questions to Private Members

A question may also be addressed to a private member provided the subject-matter of the question relates to some Bill, resolution or other matter connected with the business of the House for which that member is responsible, and the procedure in regard to such questions is the same as that followed in the case of questions addressed to a Minister with such variations as the Speaker may consider necessary or convenient. Supplementary questions are not generally permitted on such questions.

On being asked, clarifications may, however, be permitted<sup>148</sup>.

A notice of such a question is referred for comments to the member concerned to whom it is addressed. On receipt of the member's comments the question may be admitted or disallowed as the case may be. If no comments are received from the member, no further action is taken in regard to the question. A Chairman of a Committee when answering such a question replies on behalf of the Committee and not as a private member<sup>149</sup>.

Questions cannot be addressed to the Speaker in Lok Sabha<sup>150</sup>.

There have, however, been occasions when questions were addressed to the Presiding Officer of the Central Legislative Assembly and actually answered by him on the floor of the House<sup>151</sup>. Since 1937, there has been no instance where a question was asked of the Speaker.

It is now established that questions on matters which come under the administrative control of the Speaker are disallowed and the information, when so directed by the Speaker, may be supplied to the member orally<sup>152</sup>.

Conditions of Admissibility of Questions

A question is asked for the purpose of obtaining information on a matter of public importance within the special cognizance of the Minister to whom it is addressed. The right to ask a question is, however, governed by certain conditions which are described below<sup>153</sup>.

A question must be clearly and precisely expressed and must not be too general, incapable of any specific answer or in the nature of a leading question: Questions which are vague or too general or roving in nature or give information instead of seeking it are inadmissible. Questions, on matters of public importance which are of a roving character, too broad and vague are, however, amended with the approval of the member to make the same admissible. During the Ninth Session of Sixth Lok Sabha, a member B.C. Kamble gave notice of a question seeking to know the decision taken by the Ministry of Tourism and Civil Aviation about the purchase of new aircraft and accessories thereof. Since the question was too broad and vague for a specific reply, the question was amended accordingly after informing the member. But a question on similar subject was already admitted so the name of the member was clubbed to the already admitted question. However, on dissolution of the Lok Sabha on 22 August 1979, the question could not be taken up<sup>154</sup>.

152. Ibid., 24-9-1929, pp. 1328-29. There are several instances when questions were disallowed having been found to be under the administrative control of the Speaker. For example, questions seeking information regarding the Seminar organised by the Bureau of Parliamentary Studies and Training; displaying of portrait in the Central Hall of Parliament House; direct telecast of Parliamentary proceedings during session periods; use of Hindi as official language in the proceedings of Lok Sabha; policy/guidelines for allotment of houses to members of Parliament; occupation vacation of Government accommodation by ex-MPs; institution of Asian Parliament; visits of Secretaries of State Legislatures to attend Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference and Study Tours; Parliamentary delegations going abroad, etc.

A question must not bring in any name or statement unless strictly necessary to make it intelligible: While admitting a question, names of individuals appearing in the body of the question are ordinarily omitted, but in the case of an official, his designation may be mentioned, if necessary, to make the question intelligible. The Speaker has deprecated the practice of mentioning names of individuals in supplementary questions<sup>155</sup>. But, if a member has any particular names he thinks the Minister should be informed of, he has been asked to pass them on to the Minister concerned<sup>156</sup>. In exceptional cases, names have been allowed where it is considered necessary to make a question intelligible or self-contained<sup>157</sup>.

If a question contains a statement, the member shall make himself responsible for the accuracy of the statement: The responsibility envisaged under this condition is a moral and not a legal responsibility and the member concerned incurs the censure of the Chair if the statement eventually turns out to be untrue and unfounded. Where a member is asked to supply prima facie evidence in support of the statement made in a question and he is unable to do so, his question may be disallowed by the Speaker<sup>158</sup>. During the Fifteenth Session of Seventh Lok Sabha, a member, Chandra Pal Shailani gave notice of starred question regarding shifting of aromatic complex proposed to be set up in Salempur, UP to Kerala. The question was provisionally admitted after omitting reference to the news-item and also referred to the Ministry as tabled. The Ministry's note revealed that the question lacked factual basis. As a result the question was disallowed and facts conveyed to the member.

Where facts mentioned by a member in a question are substantiated by him to the satisfaction of the Speaker, the question is admitted in spite of the fact that the Minister to whom the question might have been referred for comments indicates a different view. A question regarding detention/arrest of some VIPs by Custom Officers at Mumbai Sahara Airport on 24 September 1988 for bringing banned items was referred to the Ministry of Finance which stated that no VIPs were detained or arrested on that date. Thereafter, the member who was also requested to furnish information in his possession in support of his statement in the question informed that the question was framed on the basis of reliable information provided by a well-known industrialist of Bombay orally and that he did not have any documents in this regard. In view of the Member's reply, the question was admitted.<sup>159</sup>

Questions based on Press reports are not ordinarily admissible unless the member takes responsibility for the facts, except in respect of external or foreign affairs and happenings in foreign countries having a bearing on India, as it is not considered possible for members to verify the truth or otherwise of the report of the speeches, measures or actions of foreign Ministers or Governments<sup>160</sup>. The Speaker has discouraged the practice of quoting or referring to newspaper reports during the course of supplementaries<sup>161</sup>. Questions otherwise self-contained and on matters of public importance are admitted after suitable editing and members are duly informed of the amended version<sup>162</sup>.

A question must not contain arguments, inferences, ironical expressions, imputations, epithets or defamatory statements: In asking questions members have to confine themselves to eliciting particular information<sup>163</sup>. If a notice of question contains words, phrases or expressions which contain arguments, inferences, imputations, epithets or collateral incidental matters or are defamatory, unparliamentary, ironical, irrelevant, verbose or otherwise inappropriate, the Speaker may, in his discretion, amend such notice before it is circulated<sup>164</sup>. It is not open to members to take advantage of the Question Hour for asking supplementary questions of the same character<sup>165</sup>. Members can only elicit information through questions and not argue with the Minister<sup>166</sup>. But where there is a difference of opinion on a question of fact between a Minister and a member, the Speaker has directed the member concerned to bring the matter specifically, in the first instance, to the notice of the Minister instead of raising it directly on the floor of the House<sup>167</sup>.

While asking and answering questions, attempts to cast reflections upon members or castigate Government or make other slanderous remarks or make use of ironical expressions or imputation of motives and the like have been deprecated by the Speaker<sup>168</sup>. As regards making allegations against persons, members have been directed to ensure the accuracy of their statements, for after a charge is made publicly, whether it is proved or not, it has an effect which cannot be undone, especially in view of the fact that persons against whom allegations are made have no chance to come before the House and explain their positions<sup>169</sup>. If in the course of supplementaries, allegations against persons, public servants or institutions are made, the Speaker has ordered expunction of the offending portions from the proceedings of the House and prohibited their publication in the Press<sup>170</sup>.

A question must not ask for expression of an opinion or a solution or a solution of an abstract legal question or of a hypothetical proposition: A question framed to make suggestions, to contain expression of opinion, or to elicit opinion of Government or to raise hypothetical issues is not in order<sup>171</sup>. The question which asks for an expression of opinion on an abstract legal issue is not admissible<sup>172</sup>. A question relating to the interpretation of the Constitution or laws or rules or containing suggestions for their amendment or seeking to know the details of such laws and rules is inadmissible<sup>173</sup>. During the Fifteenth Session of Seventh Lok Sabha, a question was disallowed as it sought a legal opinion on a given proposition.

A question must not ask as to the character or conduct of any person except in his official or public capacity: A member is at liberty to criticize an action of the Government, but when it comes to making allegations of a defamatory character against an individual, the freedom of speech in the House does not extend to the making of any defamatory statement against any person. During the Second Session of the Tenth Lok Sabha, a question was disallowed being allegatory and individual in nature<sup>174</sup>.

Questions containing personal insinuations and seeking either to support or to bring into disrepute an individual officer of Government or a person are inadmissible as it is not in the public interest that an individual officer's merits or demerits or the conduct of any person should be discussed in this manner<sup>175</sup>.

A question must not ordinarily exceed 150 words: A lengthy question is, wherever possible, suitably abridged or split up into two or more separate self-contained questions, if otherwise admissible. When this is done, the member giving notice and the Minister concerned are duly informed of the final form in which the question has been admitted.

A question which is unduly long but which is otherwise important may be admitted after deleting unnecessary parts and words, but keeping intact the substance of the question.

When a question is reached for oral answer, members are not allowed to put lengthy supplementaries. The supplementaries have to be brief and concise<sup>176</sup>. It has been held repeatedly that these are to be straight, direct, relevant and within the scope of the main question<sup>177</sup>. The Speaker has deprecated the practice of delivering a long speech in the guise of asking a supplementary question<sup>178</sup>, reading out from prepared material<sup>179</sup> and raising several issues or points in a single supplementary<sup>180</sup>.

A question must not relate to a matter which is not primarily the concern of the Government of India: Questions seeking information on matters falling within the competence and the field of a State Government, i.e., matters enumerated in the State List — List II of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution—are generally disallowed<sup>181</sup>. The discretion to allow a question which is not the primary concern of the Government of India is exercised by Speaker on the merits of each case. In such matters, the extent of public importance is the deciding factor—if it is a health hazard like spread of jaundice, AIDS, etc., where national health is at stake, or a matter of law and questions like atrocities on scheduled castes and scheduled tribes/minorities, communal disturbances, the Speaker may ask for admission of such notices. Questions simply requiring information without touching the policies on administration of a State are normally admitted. In certain cases, questions though touching the policies of a State may be admitted if they relate to: (i) matters of all-India importance or interest<sup>182</sup>; (ii) policies or matters where the Government of India gives grants or advice<sup>183</sup>; and (iii) all matters in respect of which State Governments act as agents of the Government of India, though details are left to be worked out by the State Governments as such agents<sup>184</sup>. Hence, questions of all-India importance even though the subject-matter falls within the scope of a State Government<sup>185</sup>, have been admitted<sup>186</sup>.

A member can ask for information on all matters arising out of the control, supervision or administration of Central grants or assistance to the States. Even though money is given by the Union to the States and the latter are responsible for spending it and for executing the schemes, implementing the programmes, etc. under their supervision, it is in order to ask a question as to how the money has been spent, on what projects or for what purposes, or whether economy or due care was exercised in such spending. Besides, members may also ask questions regarding enforcement of Central Acts/implementation of Centrally sponsored schemes, safety in railway travel (as ensuring passengers' safety is the concern of Railway authority), etc.

A question must not ask about proceedings in a Committee which have not been placed before the House: The proceedings of a Committee are treated as confidential and it is not permissible for anyone to communicate, directly or indirectly, to the Press any information regarding its proceedings, including its report or any conclusions arrived at, finally or tentatively, before the report has been presented to the House<sup>187</sup>. No question seeking information about the proceedings of a Committee is, therefore, admitted. Supplementary questions aimed at eliciting information regarding the proceedings of a Committee have been ruled out of order<sup>188</sup>.

A question must not reflect on the character or conduct of any person whose conduct can only be challenged on a substantive motion: In accordance with the provisions of the Constitution<sup>189</sup>, conduct of persons holding certain offices, e.g., the President, the Vice-President, the Speaker, the Judges of the Supreme Court or a High Court, the Chief Election Commissioner and the Comptroller and Auditor General cannot be discussed in the House except on a substantive motion. Therefore, questions are not admitted on such subjects.

A question must not make or imply a charge of a personal character: Insinuation and introduction of personal element in questions and answers have been deprecated by the Speaker<sup>190</sup>. During the Seventh Session of the Sixth Lok Sabha, disallowing a question, the Speaker observed that the question was highly personal and reflected on the conduct of the person, against whom the question was directed. A portion of the proceedings of Lok Sabha was expunged by order of the Speaker where a supplementary question asked by a member was of an insinuating character and implied charges of a personal character against some responsible persons<sup>191</sup>.

A question must not raise matters of policy too large to be dealt with within the limits of an answer to a question<sup>192</sup>: Matters of policy which can more appropriately be discussed during discussion on the Budget or raised by means of a resolution or motion cannot form the subject matter of questions<sup>193</sup>. Moreover, questions seeking a change of policy which has already been adopted by the House are not permitted<sup>194</sup>.

A question must not repeat in substance questions already answered or to which an answer has been refused: Repetition of questions which have already been fully answered is treated as an abuse of the right of questioning or calculated to obstruct or prejudicially affect the procedure of the House. Questions which have been substantially answered are not admitted. In cases where some parts of a question are substantially covered by the replies given earlier in the House, such parts are omitted while admitting the question, and references to such earlier questions are supplied to the members concerned for information. If there is any question which appears to be in substance a repetition of a question answered earlier, it is for the Ministries concerned to bring that fact to the notice of the Secretariat<sup>195</sup>.

When a Minister has refused to answer a question, subsequent notices of questions on the same subject are disallowed.

A question is not generally disallowed merely on the ground that it is not in the public interest to disclose the information. It is for the Minister to refuse to answer on the plea of public interest<sup>196</sup>. However, in exceptional circumstances, a question may be disallowed by the Speaker if it seeks information which is not in national interest to be given publicly such as deployment of armed personnel, process of manufacture of weapons, etc.<sup>197</sup>.

A question must not ask for information on trivial matters: Questions seeking information on petty matters or asking for minor details or relating to purely local matters are discouraged<sup>198</sup>. The Chair has advised that such questions should first be taken up by the members with the local authorities or the Minister or Consultative Committee concerned and only as a last resort brought before the House<sup>199</sup>.

A question must not ask for information on confidential matters: No question can be asked on a confidential letter or correspondence, but if the letter or correspondence becomes public, a notice is in order and the Speaker may admit it on the merits of the case.

A question must not ordinarily ask for information on matters of past history: Questions going into past history or based on matters which are historical or academic in nature have not been admitted<sup>200</sup>.

A question must not ask for information set forth in accessible documents or in ordinary works of reference: Questions seeking information which is available in gazettes, reports, documents, books and papers are not admitted. Such references should ordinarily be available in the Library where members can consult them at their convenience. The proceedings of the Rajya Sabha of earlier sessions are treated as accessible documents and questions are not generally admitted in the Lok Sabha if the answers are found in such proceedings, and vice versa.

A question must not raise matters under the control of organizations or persons not primarily responsible to the Government of India: Questions relating to the work of private companies/non-official organizations and autonomous bodies not in receipt of any grant from the Government are not ordinarily admitted, though questions can be asked insofar as they relate to actions of the Government<sup>201</sup>. However, questions relating to non-official organizations are admitted in cases where the Government have made grants to such organizations<sup>202</sup>.

Questions based on statements made by persons not primarily responsible to the Government of India may be admitted in special cases on the ground of public importance<sup>203</sup>.

A question must not ask for information on a matter which is under adjudication by a court of law having jurisdiction in any part of India: Supplementary questions going into details of a case being tried in a court of law have been ruled out of order<sup>204</sup>. A question on a matter under police investigation may not be disallowed on the ground that the matter is sub judice; however, the Speaker has discouraged asking of such questions and has advised the members that in case they have any particular and reliable information about a matter under police investigation they should pass it on to the authorities<sup>205</sup>. Similarly, questions on matters under departmental inquiry which cannot strictly be disallowed on the ground of being sub judice have been discouraged<sup>206</sup>. Questions regarding undertrial prisoners have also been ruled out of order<sup>207</sup>. However, questions asking for mere statistics or factual information in a particular case and not about the merits of the case, even though relating to a matter sub judice, have been admitted as disclosure of such information does not affect the trial of the case<sup>208</sup>.

In 1988, a question seeking to know whether a five member Ohio state delegation visited India recently, was disallowed under Rule 2 (viii) as the visit was arranged by Punjab, Haryana and Delhi Chamber of Commerce, a non-official body and the responsibility of the Government of India was not involved.

A question should not ordinarily ask about matters pending before any statutory tribunal or statutory authority performing any judicial or quasi-judicial functions or any commission or court of inquiry appointed to inquire into, or investigate, any matter but may refer to matters concerned with the procedure or subject or stage of inquiry, if it is not likely to prejudice the consideration of the matter by the tribunal or commission or court of inquiry: Questions relating to matters under inquiry are ordinarily not admitted<sup>209</sup>. It has been ruled that it would not be proper to ask a question relating to any inquiry which is in progress as it may affect the results of the inquiry<sup>210</sup>. Questions asking for information about the progress made in the prosecution of a person of public standing and not about the merits of the case have been permitted to be raised. Similarly, questions seeking to know as to how the Government were acting in regard to a particular inquiry and about the presentation of the report of the inquiry have been admitted<sup>211</sup>. Questions relating to matters concerned with the procedure or subject or stage of inquiry, when admitted, are usually admitted as unstarred to elicit factual information only.

A question should not ordinarily ask for information on matters which are under consideration before a Parliamentary Committee: Ordinarily, no question on a matter under the consideration of a Parliamentary Committee is admitted for answer<sup>212</sup>. Matters are deemed to be under consideration of the Committee till the Committee has made a report informing the House of the action taken by the Government on the original recommendations made by the Committee<sup>213</sup>. The Speaker has, however, ruled that members could ask questions regarding recommendations made by a Parliamentary Committee if their implementation has been unduly delayed by the Government<sup>214</sup>.

Questions pertaining to the recommendations of the Committee on Estimates, Public Accounts or Public Undertakings and also the other Standing and Joint Committees may be admitted in special cases. Where a question makes no direct reference to the recommendations of a Committee though the subject thereof may have been considered by the Committee, it will be admissible only if it asks for some factual information which is not readily available in the reports of the Committee<sup>215</sup>.

Questions asking for information in respect of specific recommendations contained in Chapters I and IV (i.e. the report proper, and replies of the Government that have not been finally accepted by the Committee and are being pursued) of “Action taken by Government on the Recommendations contained in the Report” of a Committee are admissible.

Questions asking for information in respect of specific recommendations of a Committee which have remained outstanding for long and in respect of which the Committee have not been informed by Government of the action taken within a reasonable time, are admissible<sup>216</sup>.

Normally no question on the Audit Report is permitted to be raised in the House until the Public Accounts Committee has considered the report. However, questions based on the Audit Report relating to matters which are yet to come up before the Public Accounts Committee may be admitted by the Speaker if they relate to grave instances of fraud or defalcation of public funds.

Where a question is based on the Audit Report and the information is contained therein, it is normally disallowed, the attention of the member being drawn to the relevant passages in the report.

Where a question seeks to have more information than is contained in the Audit Report, and the matter is not important, it is normally admitted as unstarred, so that the information is brought on record.

Where a question, though based on the information contained in the Audit Report, raises a matter of public importance and it is desirable that information must be given in oral answer so that supplementaries are asked, such question is admitted as starred. In a case of this character, the question is dissociated from the Audit Report, i.e., reference thereto is omitted and the question is kept on its own to avoid a conflict with the general ruling that normally questions should not be asked on matters contained in the Audit Report<sup>217</sup>.

Matters discussed in a Consultative Committee of Members of Parliament are not allowed to be raised or its proceedings referred to in the House during Question Hour<sup>218</sup>. However, where a news item regarding matters discussed in Consultative Committee has appeared in the Press, or there has been Press briefings on behalf of the Committee, such matters can be referred to in the House during Question Hour<sup>219</sup>.

A question must not relate to a matter with which the Minister is not officially concerned: Questions about anything said or done by a Minister in his non-official capacity are not permitted.

A question must not refer discourteously to a friendly foreign country: Questions relating to the administration of, and matters concerning a foreign Country about which the Government of India have no executive authority, are not admitted.

The Speaker has ruled that foreign experts invited by the Government of India should not be criticized<sup>220</sup>. A question regarding criteria applied by the Government before granting recognition to a new Country has been held inadmissible<sup>221</sup>.

A question should not ask for information regarding Cabinet discussions or advice given to the President in relation to any matter in respect of which there is a constitutional, statutory or conventional obligation not to disclose information: Questions asking for information about the internal working of the Cabinet, its committees or sub-committees, which, in its very nature, is secret, are not admitted. A question relating to composition of a Cabinet Committee on a matter given wide publicity may, however, be admitted to elicit factual information<sup>222</sup>. Any differences among the Ministers in a Cabinet discussion in regard to the merits of a particular proposal cannot form the subject-matter of a question since the Cabinet as a whole is responsible to the House<sup>223</sup>. Similarly, supplementary questions aimed at eliciting information regarding difference of opinion between two Ministers on a matter in an internal discussion have been ruled out of order<sup>224</sup>. But questions relating to a difference of opinion stated in public between two Cabinet Ministers on a matter of public importance may be admitted so as to clear misapprehensions<sup>225</sup>. Questions about advice given by officials to a Minister are also not admissible<sup>226</sup>.

A question relating to the Head of the State is not answered in the House: Questions relating to the Head of the State are not ordinarily admitted for answer on the floor of the House. If question is admissible, the requisite information may be obtained from the Secretary to the President and passed on to the member. Questions, which seek information of purely factual character, e.g., visits of the President abroad, the President's Estate, and the expenditure incurred thereon fall in this category. A question regarding appointment of Governors, directions given to Governors by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister to resign, or the President's prerogative in respect of mercy petitions is inadmissible, because apart from the constitutional provisions, they also seek to bring in a discussion on the conduct of the President. However, a question seeking factual information regarding such matters may be admitted.

Since the Governors are Heads of respective States, questions about them or containing or implying reflections on them or regarding their discretionary powers and guidelines specifying the areas of discretion are likewise not admitted. Questions can, however, be asked if the Governor is functioning in a State which is under the Questions relating to the guidelines issued to the Governors by the State Government in regard to making nominations to the State Legislative Councils<sup>227</sup> and regarding consultations with Chief Ministers<sup>228</sup> before appointment of Governors may also be admitted to elicit factual information.

Questions regarding discussions held between Heads of States, questions involving expression of opinion on a statement made by the Head of another State, and questions regarding diplomatic negotiations, correspondence or informal talks are not ordinarily admitted.

A question about the Vice-President, who is also the ex-officio Chairman of the Rajya Sabha, is not admitted.

A question on matters falling within the jurisdiction of the other House is not admissible: Each House is independent of the other so far as its jurisdiction is concerned. No question on any matter falling within the jurisdiction of a House can, therefore, be asked in the other House. Even quotations from the Rajya Sabha proceedings during the course of supplementaries have been deprecated by the Speaker<sup>229</sup>.

Questions on Matters under Correspondence between Government of India and States

In matters which are or have been the subject of correspondence between the Union Government and the Government of a State, no question is permitted except as to a matter of fact, and the answer to such a question is confined to a statement of facts<sup>230</sup>.

Questions which ask for statement of views expressed by a State Government on a particular reference made by the Union Government are not usually admitted.

Questions seeking reply of the Union Government to a communication or request from the State Government pending consideration of the former are also not admitted as the means of questions is not to be used to elicit the reply of the Union Government which is required to be given to the State Government first and not to be disclosed on the floor of the House.

Similarly, where the matter is at a negotiation stage, questions are not ordinarily admitted. However, where undue delay is involved on the part of the Union Government<sup>231</sup> in clearing a proposal of a State Government or the matter is pending for a long time, questions are admitted to enable the House to have requisite information in the matter.

Questions Concerning Allegations of Corruption against Ministers of State Government

A question to be admissible should relate to a matter of public importance, the administrative responsibility of which is primarily the concern of the Union Government. The Constitution defines and delimits, in the main, the administrative jurisdiction of the Union and the State Governments. There are cases where the respective jurisdiction has either been not clearly defined in the Constitution or the matter is such that it involves mixed responsibility. There is no specific provision in the Constitution or in the Rules of Procedure which has a direct bearing on the admissibility of questions relating to allegations of corruption against Ministers of State Governments. However, through a number of decisions and precedents in the Lok Sabha, certain principles have been evolved under which the admissibility of such questions is determined.

Questions relating to allegations of corruption against Ministers of State Governments may be categorized as under:

Questions which relate to charges of corruption against State Ministers other than the State Chief Ministers.

Such questions are not admissible as the authority for ensuring the observance of the Code of Conduct prescribed for Ministers of State Governments rests with the Chief Minister concerned, who in turn, is answerable to the State Legislature.

However, questions about allegations of corruption against such Ministers can be admitted and answered in the Lok Sabha where the matter is being investigated by an Agency of the Union Government like the Central Bureau of Investigation or the Special Police Establishment<sup>232</sup>.

Questions which relate to charges of corruption against the State Chief Ministers.

According to the Code of Conduct for Ministers, it is the Prime Minister to whom complaints against a State Chief Minister can be made and it is the Prime Minister who would institute an enquiry into charges of corruption against a Chief Minister. As such, the Union Government becomes answerable to the House for all matters connected with the subject. Questions regarding alleged charges of corruption against the Chief Ministers of States are, therefore, admitted and answered in Lok Sabha<sup>233</sup>, excepting in the case of the Chief Minister of Jammu and Kashmir as article 162 of the Constitution has not been made applicable to the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

Questions which simply seek information about the cases of corruption against Ministers and the action taken against them by the various State Governments.

Such questions may be admitted for a written answer<sup>234</sup> as under the Constitution it is the duty of the Union Government to ensure that the Government of every State is carried on in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution<sup>235</sup> and the House, therefore, has a right to be informed of the action taken by both the Union and State Governments. But since the primary responsibility is that of the State Governments and the State Legislatures to take action in the matter, the Lok Sabha does not call the Union Government to account in individual cases and, therefore, questions for oral answer are not generally admitted. Questions seeking information about the procedure evolved by the Union Government for the guidance of State Governments for investigation into charges of corruption against the various Ministers may be admitted for oral answer<sup>236</sup>.

Questions relating to Statutory Corporations, other Organisations and Companies in which Union
Government have Financial or Controlling Interest

Admissibility of questions relating to statutory corporations and limited companies with full or partial Government financial interest is regulated generally in the following manner on the merits of each case. Where a question relates to a matter of policy, or refers to an act or omission of an act on the part of a Minister, or raises a matter of public interest although seemingly it may pertain to a matter of day-to-day administration or an individual case, it is ordinarily admitted for oral answer.

A question which calls for information of statistical or descriptive nature is generally admitted as unstarred.

Questions which clearly relate to day-to-day administration and tend to throw work on the Ministries, Corporations or Government Companies incommensurate with the results to be obtained therefrom are normally disallowed<sup>237</sup>.

The rule<sup>238</sup> framed under the Government of India Act, 1919 provided that the Speaker could disallow any question or any part of a question on the ground that it related to a matter which was not primarily the concern of the Governor-General in Council. In actual practice, the rule restricted the scope of questions relating to institutions which were substantially autonomous. The admissibility of questions relating to these institutions continued to be governed by the principles set out in Manual of Business and Procedure<sup>239</sup>.

However, after independence and with the extension of governmental activities to the industrial and commercial fields, various statutory corporations and Government companies for managing industrial and commercial undertakings of the Government came into existence. The procedure that has since been evolved regarding admissibility of questions in relation to them is described in subsequent paragraphs.

Statutory Corporations

In the case of statutory corporations which are set up under enactments of Parliament, the extent of ministerial responsibility in the affairs of a corporation is generally set out in a definite section of the statute<sup>240</sup>. The admissibility of questions relating to such corporations largely depends on the interpretation and application of the provisions of the statute<sup>241</sup>. Questions relating to administrative details may be admitted in case matters of principle or of public importance are involved.

Financial Corporations and Banks

Questions seeking information about the functioning of Financial Corporations and nationalised banks are examined keeping in view the confidentiality of the relationship between the financial institutions, banks, etc. and the customers. Questions asking for information on the following aspects have been held admissible:

1. Appointment of Chairman and Board of Directors where vacancies exist for a long time or there are allegations of irregularities in appointment provided it has some factual basis<sup>242</sup>.
2. Reservation of posts for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes and filling up of backlog<sup>243</sup>.
3. Robberies/dacoities/looting in banks<sup>244</sup>.
4. Frauds in banks or alleged unsound advances involving huge amounts, provided these have basis<sup>245</sup>.
5. Allegations of malpractices against officers and staff, where factual basis are known depending upon the merits of each case<sup>246</sup>.

7. General deterioration in customer services in the nationalised banks<sup>248</sup>.
8. Opening of State-wise Branches of nationalised banks or State-wise disbursement of loans<sup>249</sup>.
9. Control of Reserve Bank over nationalised banks with regard to guidelines and implementation thereof<sup>250</sup>.

Questions seeking information relating to profit and loss in various corporations, banks, etc. which is available in the Annual Report are not admitted. However, questions seeking information for the period for which the Annual Reports have not been laid before Parliament or comparative figures for various years have been held admissible<sup>251</sup>.

Limited Companies

Private limited companies wherein the Government hold all the shares do not stand on the same footing as statutory corporations. Hence, greater latitude is allowed in the matter of admissibility of questions relating to such companies.

The same principle applies to private companies where the majority of the shares are held by the Government and which are managed by the Government.

With respect to other private companies in which Government have invested monies but have no controlling interest, such questions can be asked as a share-holder can. In addition, questions on matters of public importance can be asked.

Members may, in certain circumstances, obtain information direct from corporations or Government Companies: Such information as is normally permissible through a question in respect of the working of statutory corporations and limited companies in which Government have financial or controlling interest can be obtained by the members direct from the corporations or the companies concerned. For this purpose, the Ministries issue directions to the statutory corporations or organisations and limited companies functioning under them to supply the requisite information to the members direct<sup>252</sup>. In case the Statutory Corporation or Government Company does not give reply to a request from a member for any reason, no representation or appeal shall lie from the member either to the Government or to the Speaker. In such cases, the member may avail of the normal parliamentary opportunities available to him under the Rules.

Autonomous Organisations, Universities, etc.

Questions with regard to a substantially autonomous organisation are admissible only if they are confined to such matters as would call for interference on the part of the Government of India under the provision of the relevant Act creating the organisation and if they are of general character. Hence, questions regarding the ordinary administration of such organizations are not admissible.

The Speaker has observed:

One of the principal aims in this House should be to elicit information— but, though sovereign it is and it may go into any question in any part of India, yet under the scheme of our Constitution, we have created certain autonomous bodies; and if we want that the spirit of self-government should increase then that autonomy should be least interfered with by asking question in this House<sup>253</sup>.

As regards Centrally controlled Universities, detailed questions of administration are not admitted on the ground that Universities are autonomous and their administration should not ordinarily be the subject of questions in the House except where (i) the Government have express statutory powers of control and superintendence; (ii) some important question is raised on which the Government should make its views known to the University and if necessary, enforce these views by the threat of withdrawal of the grant; and (iii) important statistical information, involving no question of internal policy or administration, is required.

The subject of admission of questions relating to Universities was discussed at the Conference of Presiding Officers held at Srinagar in June 1954. The Chairman of the Conference (Speaker Mavalankar) summed up the position as follows:

Where autonomous bodies are receiving money from the public treasury, it cannot be maintained that no question can be asked. On the other hand, questions about day-to-day administration, the details of internal administration, should not be permitted. The bodies are given autonomy for better and efficient working and that autonomy should not be interfered with by any kind of pressure of public opinion, or opinion in the Legislature. These are two extremes of the proposition. As regards cases falling between these two, I think it will be difficult to give any general rule. Every question will have to be decided on its own facts and merits. It will all depend upon the nature of the question, the nature of the allegation implied in the question, and then it will have to be decided as to whether the question should or should not be allowed.

Statutory Organisations

No hard and fast rules have been laid down as regards questions concerning statutory organisations such as the Union Public Service Commission, the Election Commission, etc. Each question is examined on merits. Ordinarily no question which seeks to interfere with the discharge of statutory functions by these organisations is admitted.

Questions pertaining to the Comptroller and Auditor-General are regulated in such manner that only questions on matters which have a bearing on policy or which are of wide public importance are admitted, as also questions which merely ask for supply of factual data or statistics. What powers the Comptroller and Auditor-General should exercise and whether he can go into administrative details or matters like efficiency, economy, etc., cannot be taken up during the Question Hour<sup>254</sup>.

Admissibility of Questions

The conditions of admissibility of questions mentioned in the preceding paragraphs do not cover all categories of questions. The admissibility of questions not covered by the specific provisions in the Rules is determined in the light of past precedents and well-established parliamentary practices, conventions and usages. In these and other cases, the Speaker decides whether a question or a part thereof is or is not admissible under the Rules and may disallow any question or a part thereof when in his opinion it is an abuse of the right of questioning or is calculated to obstruct or prejudicially affect the procedure of the House or is in contravention of the Rules<sup>255</sup>.

In effect, the Speaker has discretionary power, conferred by the rules and inherent in him, to admit or disallow a question without any reason being assigned, which no one can question<sup>256</sup>. There is no right of representation to the Speaker against his decision on a question. Facts may, however, be placed before him or he may himself call for facts, but it is entirely within his discretion to give such decision as he may think fit after taking all the facts and circumstances of the case into consideration<sup>257</sup>.

List of Questions

Questions which have been admitted by the Speaker are entered in the List of Questions for the day for oral or written answer as the case may be<sup>258</sup>.

Questions in the List of Questions for oral answer on a day, under Rule 37, shall be arranged in accordance with the priority secured by each member at the ballot held for the purpose<sup>259</sup>.

257. Ibid., 4-7-1923, pp. 4262-63.

258. Rule 45.

259. Dir. 11.

The preparation of the lists is subject to the following restrictions—

- (i) The total number of questions on any day should not be more than 20 for oral answers<sup>260</sup> and 230 for written answers. This limit may, however, be exceeded by the number of postponed or transferred questions. The total number of questions in the list for written answers may be further exceeded by 25 questions, at the maximum, if there are questions pertaining to States under President's Rule.
- (ii) When several notices of questions are received on the same or allied subject, they are either consolidated or one of the questions is admitted according to the priority secured at the ballot and admissibility. The names of other members are clubbed thereon. However, only two names can appear on a starred question<sup>261</sup>.
- (iii) 'One member one question' is the rule for the list of oral answers whether a member's name appears exclusively or is clubbed with another member. A postponed or transferred question can, however, be in addition.
- (iv) No member can have more than 5 questions both for oral and written answers for one day. This limit excludes the postponed or transferred questions.
- (v) All questions admitted as starred, i.e., for oral answers, but not included in the list for oral answers owing to aforesaid restrictions, are treated as unstarred questions and included in the list for written answers subject to other restrictions mentioned above. It is ensured that out of questions admitted, each member has at least one question in the list for written answers.

The questions admitted for oral as well as written answers for any day often exceed the limits mentioned above and have, therefore, to undergo a process of rounding which means selection and elimination in accordance with the decisions of the Rules Committee of Lok Sabha. The process of rounding is held separately for preparation of the Lists of Questions for oral and written answers.

The process of rounding for unstarred questions, i.e., questions for written answers undergoes the following stages:

- (i) The question to be considered for this rounding are of three categories namely: (a) questions for which notices were originally given as unstarred, i.e., for written answers, and such notices were received upto 10 a.m. on the fifteenth day preceding the day on which the answers are desired; and (b) questions for which original notices were given for oral answers but could not be included in the Starred list, i.e., list for oral answers;
- (ii) Out of the whole lot of the admitted questions mentioned in (i) above, in the first rounding, one question each of every member will be taken out for inclusion in the list for written answers but excluding the members whose questions have already been included in the list for oral answers. The exclusion of the members will confine not only to those members whose names appear in the starred list exclusively but also those whose names have been clubbed with another member.

- (iii) In the second and subsequent rounds, one question of every member will be included in each round, subject to the limit of 5 questions of a member as well as the overall limit of 230 questions.
- (iv) The process of rounding is stopped as soon as the number of questions reaches the limit of 230, irrespective of the fact whether the particular round is complete at that stage or not<sup>262</sup>.

Questions found in excess of 230 questions in the list of unstarred questions for a day were considered for inclusion in the list of unstarred questions on subsequent available relevant dates without asking the members to give fresh notices for the same. Notices of questions which being in excess of 230 could not be included in any of the lists for subsequent dates lapse at the end of the session<sup>263</sup>. Subsequently, from the Fifth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha, notices of questions which had gone in excess of 230 were returned to the member concerned and the members, if they so desired, table these notices of questions, afresh<sup>264</sup>. However, this practice has undergone further change and, now the notices of questions in excess of 230 get lapsed and the copies of notices of such questions are provided to the members on request, if so desired by them.

Questions for oral and written answers are numbered separately. Numbers are allotted separately for each list beginning from 1 at the commencement of each session and run on consecutively until the end of the session.

The list of questions for oral answer is printed on green paper and that for written answer on white paper.

The names of the Ministries in respect of which questions are included in a particular list are indicated on the top of the list, as also the total number of questions included in each list.

Each question included in the list of questions is given a suitable heading and the name of the member who has tabled the question together with the designation of the Minister to whom it is addressed is indicated in bold print.

A question is deleted from the list of questions on its being withdrawn or postponed or transferred to a later date by issuing a corrigendum.

During the last few days of a session, supplementary lists of admitted questions may be issued in respect of such of the admitted questions as could not be included in the regular lists due to paucity of time.

262. The Practice started from the Fourth Session of the Tenth Lok Sabha.

263. The Practice was followed till Fourth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha.

264. L.S. Bn. (II), 9-7-2010, Para 1593.

Questions in the supplementary list of starred questions are arranged strictly according to their priority of receipt vis-a-vis the questions on the original list by suffixing the letters 'A', 'B' 'C' etc., after the number of the questions.

Questions in the supplementary list of unstarred questions are shown in continuation of the original list.

In the case of admitted questions, the notices of which are given in Hindi, separate lists for starred and unstarred questions are prepared in Hindi with the same serial numbers as appear in the English version. The Hindi lists of questions are also circulated to the members and the Ministers along with the English version of the list of questions.

Mode of Asking Questions

Questions for oral answers are called in the order in which they stand on the list of questions<sup>265</sup>.

The Speaker calls successively each member in whose name a question appears on the list of questions for oral answers. The member so called rises in his place and asks the questions by reference to its number on the list of questions.

Priority is not accorded to any question out of its turn on request from a member<sup>266</sup>. It is only in very exceptional cases that questions lower down in the list have been permitted to be answered out of turn in view of their importance. Only one such question may be taken towards the end of the Question Hour<sup>267</sup>.

A question appearing in a day's list of questions for oral answer which is not likely to be reached for oral answer during the Question Hour might be given out of turn priority in view of its importance if the member concerned writes to the Speaker before the commencement of the Question Hour and the Speaker, after taking the sense of the House, agrees to it. Such questions are answered towards the end of the Question Hour<sup>268</sup>.

If, on being called, a member states that he does not intend to ask his question, the question is treated as having been withdrawn<sup>269</sup>. However, there was an instance when the member in whose name the question was cited for oral answer did not want to ask the question and the Speaker allowed the other members to ask supplementaries in view of the importance of the Question<sup>270</sup>.

When a member is called and is absent, the question is treated as unstarred and its answer is printed in the debate<sup>271</sup>.

If, on a question being called, it is not asked as the member in whose name it stands is absent, the Speaker may, at the request of any other member, direct that the answer to it be given. However, the prerogative of allowing starred questions of members absent in the first round has been exercised by the Speaker very sparingly; that is only when he is satisfied about the importance of the question<sup>272</sup>. From Fifth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha, if on a question being called it is not asked or the member in whose name it stands is absent, the Speaker may direct that the answer to it be given.<sup>273</sup> On 9 May 2007, when SQ No. 483 appearing in the name of a member Anantkumar Hegde reached, the Speaker called the member who was present in the House to ask the question. The member stated that he did not want to ask the question. Thereafter, the Speaker sought to know if any other member was interested in putting supplementaries as he would allow them because of the importance of the subject and the keen interest of members in the subject. In response, many members expressed their willingness and were permitted by the Speaker to ask supplementaries<sup>274</sup>.

When a question appears in the names of two members and one of them is absent, the other member, if present in the House, may ask the question as and when taken up for oral answer<sup>275</sup>.

Till the Fourth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha, the following provision was in force which has now been omitted.

When all the questions for oral answer have been called, and, if time remains in the expiry of the Question Hour, the Speaker may in the second round call again any question which has not been asked by reason of the absence of the member in whose name it stands, and may also permit a member to ask a question standing in the name of another member if so authorised by him<sup>276</sup>. The Speaker may at his discretion, also direct the answer to a question of a member who remains absent and has not given a letter of authority to another member to ask such question on his behalf, to be given, if in his opinion or that of the Minister concerned, the subject matter of the question is of such importance as to warrant an answer being given in the House<sup>277</sup>.

A question not reached for oral answer during the time made available for questions may be answered after the end of the Question Hour with the permission of the Speaker if the Minister represents to the Speaker that the question is one of special public interest to which he desires to give a reply<sup>278</sup>.

Where two or more questions on the same or allied subject addressed to a Minister for oral answer appear on the list of questions for any particular day and when the first of these comes up for answer, the Speaker may himself, or on the request of any member, direct that two or more such questions be taken up together for answer, irrespective of the order in which they stand on the list<sup>279</sup>.

Withdrawal or Postponement of Questions

A question which has already appeared on the admitted list of questions for a day may be withdrawn or postponed to a later day by the member by notice given at any time before the sitting for which the question has been placed on the list<sup>280</sup>. The question can also be withdrawn if the member makes a statement to that effect in the House when his question is called by the Speaker<sup>281</sup>.

When a member desires the postponement of his question, the date to which the question is desired to be postponed has to be specified in the notice, and on such later day, provided it is a day allotted to the Minister to whom the question is addressed, it is placed on the list after all the questions which have not been so postponed<sup>282</sup>.

In cases where members request the postponement of the notices of their questions, the questions will lose the priority accorded to them in ballot.

With a view to enabling advance intimation being given to Ministers, a postponed question is not placed on the list until two clear days have expired from the date when the notice of postponement was received<sup>283</sup>.

A question postponed from the printed list of questions bears in the new list the same number which it had in the list for the earlier date from which it has been transferred. It is printed below all the other admitted questions for that day under the heading 'Postponed Question'<sup>284</sup>.

284. Rule 47.

The right to ask for postponement of a question after it is placed on the printed list of questions for a day is conceded to the member concerned and not normally to the Minister who is to answer the question. However, there was an instance when a question printed in the Unstarred List was withdrawn under the directive of the Speaker, on a request being made to this effect by the Minister concerned on the ground that it was not in the interest of the country and also its security to divulge any information<sup>285</sup>.

The Speaker has agreed to a request of the Prime Minister to the postponement of particular questions as he desired to answer them personally<sup>286</sup>. The requests from other Ministers are also agreed to by the Speaker when they want more time to collect the information necessary to answer the question or for some such other justifiable reason. When a question is postponed at the request of the Minister, it retains its priority secured at the ballot and is put down in the list of the next day at the same place which it occupied in the list from which it is postponed<sup>287</sup>. For instance five questions printed in the Starred Question List were postponed due to non-participation of members of Opposition in the proceedings of the House under Direction of the Speaker. Starred Question Nos. 221, 222, 225, 226 and 227 listed in the List of Questions for Oral Answers for 8 August 2006 were postponed by the Speaker during the Question Hour due to absence of members of Opposition from the House. The Speaker did not accede to the request of a member. Ramdas Athawale for allowing his question No. 221 where his name appeared at second position. All the five questions were enlisted at the same position in the List of Questions for Oral Answers dated 22 August 2006. The list consisted of twenty-five questions<sup>288</sup>. Due to unavoidable circumstances, the Minister of Civil Aviation was not able to attend the House on 16 May 2012. The Speaker decided that all the questions listed in the name of Minister of Civil Aviation would stand postponed to the next date in the next Session. Accordingly, all the four questions were enlisted at the same position in the List of Questions for Oral Answers dated 17 August 2012. The list consisted of twenty four questions<sup>289</sup>. Convenience of the member is also taken into account when fixing the next day.

When in reply to a question it is stated that a statement will be made on the subject on a subsequent day, the question is deemed to have been answered and cannot be postponed<sup>290</sup>.

291. Rule 48(3); Bn. (II), 19-3.2010, Para 1265.

Fourteenth Session of Fifteenth Lok Sabha, the provision was that when all questions for which oral answers are desired had been called and the Question Hour is not exhausted, the procedure was to call again any questions which could not be asked earlier by reason of the absence of the members in whose names they stood<sup>292</sup>. This also enabled the asking of questions of an absent member who had authorized another member to ask questions on his behalf.

The authority was to be given in writing by a member to another to ask questions in his absence must be in writing<sup>293</sup> and specify the question and the date on which was to be asked. A general authority for a number of days or for the entire session had not been recognized<sup>294</sup>. Letters of authority were required to be sent to the Secretariat at least a day in advance of the date on which such questions were put down for answer. If, however, such authorizations were made on the same day on which questions were due for answer, the members who had such letters of authority in their favour were required to pass them on to the officer at the Table at the latest by 11 a.m. A member authorised to ask question of an absent member could not further delegate that authority to any other member.

In the absence of any authorisation from the member who was absent, his questions were treated as unstarred questions and, along with their answers, were printed in the debates of the day for which they were put down<sup>295</sup>.

If a member in whose name a question stood was absent and he had not given a letter of authority to another member to ask it on his behalf, the Speaker might permit the question to be answered in the second round, if, in his opinion or that of the Minister concerned, the subject matter of the question was of such importance as to warrant an answer being given in the House<sup>296</sup>.

In rare cases, judging the importance of a question, the Speaker might permit the question to be answered in the first round itself<sup>297</sup>.

Questions of members granted leave of absence are included in the list of questions for written answers for the period for which they have been granted leave of absence. The questions of members who are on tour abroad are not put down in the list of questions during the period of their such absence<sup>298</sup>.

Supplementary Questions

The member who asks the question listed in his name gets a chance to ask two supplementary questions after the Minister has replied his question. Thereafter, the second member, if any, whose name appears on the question, gets a chance to ask one supplementary question. Thereafter, any member when called by the Speaker may ask a supplementary question arising out of the main question and answer thereto, for the purpose of further elucidating any matter of fact<sup>299</sup>. But a supplementary question framed with a view to asking the Government to lay down certain policy<sup>300</sup> or if its purpose is to get an assurance from a Minister<sup>301</sup> or to seek opinion of a Minister on a matter<sup>302</sup> or to seek information regarding the correctness of a decision taken by the Government after the Minister has clarified the position fully<sup>303</sup> or to raise a matter without ascertaining its basis<sup>304</sup> are inadmissible. Supplementary questions should seek information rather than give information or make suggestions for action<sup>305</sup>. They should not precede with introduction, and the Minister's reply thereto should also be brief<sup>306</sup>. Supplementary questions should be brief, specific, relevant and within the scope of the subject matter of the main question<sup>307</sup>. Where the supplementary does not arise from the main question, the Speaker may direct the Minister to send the information in writing to the member<sup>308</sup>.

Chits sent in the House by members asking for an opportunity to put supplementary questions are not taken notice of<sup>309</sup>. Asking of supplementary questions by members who have not been called by the Chair has been deprecated<sup>310</sup> no member can claim a right to be called to ask a supplementary with respect to a particular question<sup>311</sup>. It is left to the discretion of the Chair to call upon any member to ask supplementary questions. Precedence in the matter of asking supplementaries is given to the member who has tabled the main question and to the member whose name is clubbed<sup>312</sup>. Unless there is none to ask a supplementary question from any other Party/Group, not more than one member from the same Party/Group is normally permitted to ask a supplementary question after the member who has tabled the main question and the member whose name is clubbed on that question have asked supplementary questions<sup>313</sup>. However, the discretion as to when and in what order the Speaker should call the members to ask supplementaries vests in him<sup>314</sup>.

A supplementary question has to be asked and must not be read<sup>315</sup> or quoted from report of Inquiry Committee/Commission<sup>316</sup> and must not repeat parts of the main question, if any, disallowed by the Speaker<sup>317</sup>. The number of supplementaries on a particular question is determined by the Speaker; asking of too many supplementaries has generally been discouraged<sup>318</sup>.

A Minister can ask for notice if he is not in a position to answer at once a supplementary question<sup>319</sup> but he cannot be forced to answer in a particular way.<sup>320</sup>

Supplementary questions are governed by the same rules of admissibility as are applicable to the main questions<sup>321</sup>.

Short Notice Questions

A question relating to a matter of urgent public importance may be asked for oral answer by a member with notice shorter than ten clear days, and the member has to state briefly the reasons thereof. Where such reasons are not stated in the notice, the question is returned to the member<sup>322</sup>.

If a notice is signed by more than one member, it is deemed to have been given by the first signatory only<sup>323</sup>. Where two or more members give short notice questions on the same subject and one of the questions is accepted for answer at short notice or where the Speaker has directed that all the notices be consolidated into a single notice as it would be desirable to have a single question covering all the important points raised by members, names of not more than four members other than the one whose notice has been admitted as determined by ballot, are shown against the admitted question<sup>324</sup>.

322. Rule 54(1) (5).

323. Rule 54(3A).

324. Rule 54(4), as amended.

If the Speaker accepts the urgency<sup>325</sup>, the Minister concerned is asked whether he is in a position to reply to the question at short notice and, if so, on which date. It is for the Minister to accept or not to accept short notice of a question<sup>326</sup>, but it is within the discretion of the Speaker to disallow a question even if the Minister is prepared to answer it. If the Minister refuses to accept short notice and the Speaker is of the opinion that the question is of sufficient public importance to be orally answered in the House, he may, while admitting the question in the ordinary course, accord it the first priority in order to enable members to raise supplementaries on it<sup>327</sup>. However, this procedure is followed in exceptional cases and only one such question on the list of questions for any one day can be accorded such priority<sup>328</sup>.

In cases where the matter referred to in a question is not considered to be urgent, the Speaker may admit a short notice question for answer in the ordinary course with minimum ten clear days' notice as a starred or unstarred question<sup>329</sup>.

When a short notice question is admitted and placed on the agenda, it is called immediately after the Question Hour or immediately after the starred questions for the day have been disposed of<sup>330</sup> and if the Question Hour has either been dispensed with or has not been provided for, it may be called for answer as the first item of business and if there is a new member to take oath or affirmation, then immediately thereafter<sup>331</sup>.

On being called, if the short notice question is not asked by the member, or the member concerned is absent and he has not authorised another member to ask the question on his behalf, the Speaker has caused a written reply to be laid on the Table<sup>332</sup>. In such cases, if the Minister has expressed a desire to give a reply on the ground of its public importance, the Speaker has permitted the question to be asked by any other member or allowed the Minister to read out the question and the answer<sup>333</sup>.

A short notice question put down on the list of short notice questions may be postponed to a later date at the request of the Minister and with the concurrence of the member concerned<sup>334</sup>.

The conditions of admissibility of short notice questions are the same as are applicable to questions in general, but every short notice question should, in addition, relate to a matter of public importance of an urgent character<sup>335</sup>.

325. The Ministry concerned is asked, where necessary, to furnish facts to enable the Speaker to consider the admissibility of the question.

335. Rule 54(7).

Not more than one short notice question is normally put down for answer on any one day. Where more than one such question has been accepted by Ministers for answer on any one day, only one of them is put down and the rest are either postponed to later dates or disallowed if no other date is available. In exceptional cases, the Speaker may allow more than one short notice question to be answered on any one day<sup>336</sup>. On the Lok Sabha adjourning without transacting normal business on a particular day, a short notice question admitted for that date is not postponed but answer thereto is deemed to have been laid on the Table on the next sitting and printed in the debates of that day<sup>337</sup>.

Short notice questions addressed to private members are inadmissible.

Lapse of Notices of Questions

Sometimes notices of questions are vague or indefinite. In such cases, references are made to the members to clarify the points to enable the Speaker to decide the admissibility of the questions. If replies to those references are not received from members in time and the House is later prorogued, the notices are treated as having lapsed<sup>338</sup>.

Publicity of Answers to Questions in Advance

Answers to questions which Ministers propose to give in the House are not released for publication until answers have actually been given on the floor of the House or laid on the Table<sup>339</sup>.

The rule prohibits publicity being given to any question until the day on which the question is answered in the House<sup>340</sup>.

Half-an-hour Discussions

A member may give notice to raise discussion on a matter of sufficient public importance which has been the subject of a recent question, oral or written, and the answer to which needs elucidation on a matter of fact<sup>341</sup>. If a notice is admitted, the discussion is limited to half-an-hour and is held in the last thirty minutes of a sitting<sup>342</sup>. However, there are instances when Half-an-hour discussions continued beyond the stipulated period of 30 minutes<sup>343</sup>. Half-an-hour discussions are normally held on three sittings in a week, namely, Monday, Wednesday and Friday. However, during the Budget Session, no half-an-hour discussion is till the disposal of Financial Business.

A member wishing to raise such a discussion has to give notice in writing to the Secretary-General normally within three days of the answering of the question, and at least three days in advance of the day on which he desires to raise the matter. Such a notice is also required to be accompanied by an explanatory note stating the reasons for raising discussion on the matter<sup>344</sup>. The Speaker may, however, waive the requirement concerning the period of notice with the consent of the Minister concerned, but there has been no such instance so far.

It is the Speaker who decides whether the matter sought to be raised is of sufficient public importance to be put down for discussion. He may, however, before admitting a notice, send a copy of the same to the Minister concerned for his comments.

After a notice has been admitted, the exact date on which the discussion is to be held is settled in consultation with the Minister and the member who gave notice.

Where more than two notices are admitted by the Speaker for the same date, a ballot is held to determine their priority for inclusion in the List of Business. An item put down for discussion on a particular day and not disposed of on that day is not set down for any other day, unless the member so desires. In such a case, the item is again included in the ballot for the next available day.

Not more than one half-an-hour discussion is put down in the name of any individual member in a week, subject to the condition that a member shall not raise more than two half-an-hour discussions in the same session. If one discussion in the name of the member is held, his notices are not ballotted for the remaining sitting(s) of the week. Further, where a member has already raised two half-an-hour discussions in the same session, his notices are not ballotted for the remaining sittings of the session<sup>345</sup>.

When there is no time for the Minister to give a full reply to the debate, the Minister may, with the permission of the Speaker, lay a statement on the Table<sup>346</sup>. Where a half-an-hour discussion has already taken considerable time, the Speaker directs the Minister to lay on the Table a statement in reply to points not covered in his reply<sup>347</sup>.

If the member in whose name a half-an-hour discussion is put down in the List of Business is absent, discussion is not taken up<sup>348</sup>. The Speaker has on request postponed the discussion to some other day either when the member concerned is unavoidably absent on the day on which the half-an-hour discussion is scheduled to be held<sup>349</sup> or at the request of the Minister or if the House so decides.

344. Earlier, the notice was required to be signed, in support, by at least two other members. The procedure was changed vide Bn. (II). 8-8-1967, para 303.

To provide time for disposal of urgent business, the Speaker may direct that a half-an-hour discussion put down in the agenda for a day may be postponed to the following day which need not necessarily be the day for taking up half-an-hour discussion<sup>350</sup>.

In exceptional cases, when time is not available during a session, the Speaker has ordered the discussion of an admitted notice which was included in the List of Business to be postponed to the next session<sup>351</sup>. In such a case, fresh notice is required to be given by the member concerned in the next session for raising the discussion.

Usually only one half-an-hour discussion is put down in the List of Business for any particular day, but during the last few days of a session more than one such discussion may be included in the day's List of Business. Two discussions, if put down in the List of Business for a single day, the subjects of which are interrelated, though addressed to different Ministers, have been taken up together<sup>352</sup>.

The procedure regarding initiating a discussion is that the member giving notice makes his point<sup>353</sup> and the Minister concerned then replies in short. Thereafter, the members who have given prior intimation to the Speaker are permitted to ask a question each for the purpose of further elucidating any matter of fact. However, not more than four members can be permitted to ask a question each<sup>354</sup>. In case more than four members seek permission to ask a question, a ballot is held to select four members. There have been instances when those members who had not given prior notices were permitted to ask a question in addition to the members who gave prior notice<sup>355</sup>. A member though not raising a half-an-hour discussion or participating in it, may be permitted to make personal explanation if charges are levelled against him during the discussion<sup>356</sup>. After that, the Minister concerned replies to the questions asked. Then the discussion ends, there being no formal motion before the House and consequently no voting.

A half-an-hour discussion put down on the List of Business for a day can be withdrawn by the member concerned at any time before the discussion is held<sup>357</sup>.

In exceptional cases, where a matter is important, the Speaker may, at his discretion, convert a half-an-hour discussion into a short duration discussion under Rule 193<sup>358</sup>.

CHAPTER XX

Calling Attention to Matters of Urgent Public Importance

A member may, with the prior permission of the Speaker, call the attention of a Minister to any matter of urgent public importance and the Minister may make a brief statement or ask for time to make a statement later<sup>1</sup>.

Mode of Giving Notice

A notice to call the attention of a Minister must be addressed by a member to the Secretary-General, and according to the practice, which is now well established, a copy thereof is endorsed separately to the Speaker and the Minister concerned<sup>2</sup>. The purpose of endorsing copy of the notice to the Minister is to give the Minister advance intimation and also to enable the Minister to apprise the Speaker, if necessary, of the facts of the matter raised therein in order to assist him in deciding the admissibility of the notice. The notice addressed to the Secretary-General and copies thereof endorsed to the Speaker and the Minister concerned are received in the Parliamentary Notice Office. The copy intended for the Minister is collected by the Ministry concerned themselves from the Lok Sabha Secretariat. Before the commencement of a session, the notices can, at the earliest, be given only with effect from a day (which is usually the third working day of the Secretariat before the date of commencement of the session) fixed in advance and notified in the Bulletin. The Speaker considers these notices only few days in advance of the commencement of the Session. Notices received in advance of the date notified in the Bulletin for receipt of notices are returned to the members concerned. However, after the commencement of the Session, the notice has to be given by 1000 hours on the day on which the matter is proposed to be raised in the House. A notice received after that hour is treated as notice given

---

1. Rule 197.

This rule was embodied in the Rules of Procedure on 1 January 1954. Prior to this, there was considerable feeling that no precise procedure was available to a private member to raise an important matter at a short notice. The procedure of adjournment motion was frequently used for such purposes. Since an adjournment motion being in the nature of a censure motion and its scope considerably restricted, its use for other purposes was deprecated. See also Chapter XXI—Motion for Adjournment on Matters of Urgent Public Importance.

The concept of 'Calling Attention Notices' is of Indian origin. It is an innovation in the modern parliamentary procedure and combines the asking of a question for answer with supplementaries and short comments in which all points of view are expressed precisely and the Government has adequate opportunity to state its case. Sometimes it gives opportunity to members to criticize the Government directly or indirectly, and to bring to the surface the failure or inadequate action of Government on an important matter.

2. During the years 1971, 1975 and 1976, when the Proclamation of Emergency was in operation, the House had for certain periods, dispensed with the calling attention matters in view of the urgency and importance of Government business—see L.S. Deb., 4-12-1971, cc. 163-64; 21-7-1975, cc. 26-72; 25-10-1976, cc. 24-47.

for the next sitting<sup>3</sup>. When notices from more than five members are received on the subject selected by the Speaker for admission, a ballot is held to determine the relative priority of each such notice. Where the number of members giving notice on a subject selected by the Speaker is five or less, their inter se priority is determined with reference to the date and time of receipt of the notices<sup>4</sup>.

All notices received during a week, commencing from the first sitting of the House till 10.00 hours of the last day of the week, on which the House is to sit, are valid for that week. It is not necessary that notices given for a particular day may be considered for that day only. These may be considered for any day during the period of their validity or thereafter also, depending upon the importance of the subject involved. Notices which are not taken up during the week for which they have been tabled are deemed to have lapsed at 10.00 hours on the last working day of the week unless the Speaker has admitted any of them for a subsequent sitting or has kept the same pending till receipt of facts from the Minister concerned.

After the Speaker has selected a subject, members who have tabled notices thereon are verbally informed. The Minister concerned is also informed verbally through the principal officers followed by a written communication. Where no information is communicated to a member, it has to be presumed that notice has not been selected by the Speaker.

A member cannot give more than two notices for any one sitting. Notice on the same subject can be given by more than one member, but names of not more than five members, as determined by ballot, are shown in the List of Business<sup>5</sup>. Where a notice is signed by more than one member, it is deemed to have been given by the first signatory only.

Conditions of Admissibility

Urgency and public importance are the main tests of admissibility of a calling attention notice<sup>6</sup>. The admissibility of such a notice is decided by the Speaker<sup>7</sup>.

---

3. Rule 197(2)(ii) and Dir. 113B.

4. Rule 197(2)(iv).

5. Rule 197(1) and (2). This Rule was amended on 23 June 1967. Previously, neither was there any limit to the number of notices that a member might table nor to the number of members who might table notices on the same subject.

Though no limits had been imposed under the Rules, the Speaker discouraged the practice of giving a number of notices by the same member and observed that a member might not give more than two notices for a particular sitting—see L.S. Deb., 23-8-1965, cc. 1236-38; Bn. (II), 23-8-1965, para 1380.

6. Rule 197 (1).

7. Ibid., L.S. Deb., 19-8-1965, c. 993.

The Speaker has firmly declined to give reasons for disallowance of the notices or to enter into arguments in that regard with the members in the House—see L.S. Deb., 5-8-1959, cc. 661-62; 17-2-1961, c. 611; 21-2-1961, cc. 1100-01.

It is, however, open to the members to meet the Speaker in his Chamber and place before him their points of view. The Speaker may review his orders on good and sufficient grounds—see L.S. Deb., 3-5-1962, cc. 2457-68; 11-11-1965, cc. 1346-50; 1-9-1966, c. 8466.

The Speaker's power to allow or disallow a notice is unlimited<sup>8</sup>. The decision of the Speaker is final and members cannot raise question of admissibility of calling attention notices in the House<sup>9</sup>.

The Speaker may decide to admit a calling attention notice in place of an adjournment motion on the same subject<sup>10</sup>. A calling attention notice usually renders a notice of an adjournment motion infructuous and unnecessary<sup>11</sup>.

Before deciding the admissibility of a notice, the Speaker may call for facts and comments from the Minister concerned, because a notice is inadmissible if it lacks factual basis<sup>12</sup>. Where necessary, the Minister is also asked to furnish information on specific points such as the responsibility of the Union Government, its nature, extent, etc.<sup>13</sup>. A notice after admission may be taken up the same day provided a calling attention notice has not already been fixed for the day in the List of Business. In that case, depending upon the urgency of the matter, the Speaker may allow another notice to be taken up later at an hour fixed by him which is generally at the end of the day<sup>14</sup>.

A calling attention notice may be disallowed even though such a notice on the same subject has been admitted in the other House and the Minister concerned has made a statement in reply<sup>15</sup>. It is not necessary that if a notice has been admitted in

8. The Speaker is not bound by any precedents strictly, although he has laid down for himself such obvious rules or conventions, as for example, whether the matter falls within the cognizance of a Minister of the Union Government, whether the matter is trifling, involves argument or is vague or general or whether it can be appropriately dealt with by other parliamentary procedures. Admission of a notice is not a precedent, for a similar matter in another context may be disallowed. It is the feeling, the judgement of the Speaker, and the surrounding circumstances in the context of the information available to him on the day the notice is received, that are vital in determining whether a notice is admissible or not. At times it so happens that a matter, at its initial stage, may not appear to be that important and urgent, so no significance is attached to it. But, on a later date, the matter may, due to subsequent developments, assume significance and, consequently the Speaker may admit it then. The Speaker admits or selects a notice purely on the importance and the urgency of the matter raised therein. Although sometimes he judges the importance of a matter by the number of members who are interested in it or by the national interest behind it, these are factors like others which he takes into consideration; by themselves they are not conclusive.

9. L.S. Deb., 18-11-1962, c. 308; 22-11-1985, cc. 293-94; 12-8-1986, c. 560.

12. Ibid., 11-4-1960, c. 10904.

13. The facts, to be placed by the Minister before the Speaker, have to reach the Speaker within 24 hours of the reference failing which the admissibility of the notices may be decided by the Speaker independently of the facts called for.

14. See L.S. Deb., 17-12-1963, cc. 5162-66 and 5884-95; 24-11-1965, cc. 3605-12 and 3722-26. It is, however, now a settled practice that a calling attention notice is admitted at least one day in advance and an entry about it is made in the printed List of Business. There have been instances when more than one calling attention notice was admitted on the same day. L.S. Deb., 19-11-1963, cc. 380-94 and 531-36; 27-11-1963, cc. 1703-11 and 1711-20; 17-12-1963, cc. 5162-66, and 5284-94; 17-5-1966, cc. 17289-98 and 17441-57; 4-8-1978, cc. 285-310 and 408-36; 20-2-1977, cc. 330-38; 15-5-1979, cc. 266-89 and 396-416; 16-5-1979, cc. 247-50, 387-401 and 402-16; 21-3-1980, cc. 244-63 and 380-92; 10-5-1983, cc. 316-29 and 405-17; 8-5-1984, cc. 319-37 and 446-68, 27-11-2007, cc. 477-507.

one House, an identical or similar notice should also be admitted in the other House, as the Presiding Officer of each House takes decisions independently<sup>16</sup>.

As a rule, a notice must be given on the same day on which a matter has arisen or become publicly known. If it is given a little later, the notice may be rejected on the ground that it has not been raised at the earliest opportunity<sup>17</sup>.

Only those matters which are primarily the concern of the Union Government can be raised through a calling attention notice<sup>18</sup>. There have, however, been instances

16. Ibid., 1-3-1966, cc. 5042-43; 17-11-1966, c. 3787-88.

17. The members' chief source of information for tabling calling attention notices is the daily newspaper. Sometimes the notice may be based on information communicated to a member in writing by his constituents, but such notices are few in number.

A notice based on newspaper reports about which it was represented to the Speaker that they were not correct was allowed in view of a statement on the subject made by the Minister in the other House—L.S. Deb., 12-3-1970, cc. 221-31; 13-3-1970, c. 225.

18. (a) Notices regarding the following matters have generally been admitted by the Speaker—
- (i) Incidents which involve a question of national security and unity of the country;
  - (ii) Serious food, drought or flood situation in the country or any part thereof;
  - (iii) Issues involving maintenance of essential services;
  - (iv) Incidents involving a matter of law and order in a Union territory over which the members and the public are greatly agitated;
  - (v) Serious developments in States or Union territories involving proper functioning of the constitutional machinery;
  - (vi) Serious issues involving production of important commodities like oil, fertilizers, textiles, sugar, etc.;
  - (vii) Issues involving action on the part of a foreign Government which would adversely affect the interests of India;
  - (viii) Border incidents with a neighbouring country which are of a serious nature or where loss of life is involved;
  - (ix) Matters involving important issues pertaining to relations between the Union Government and the State Governments;
  - (x) Serious incidents in foreign countries involving Indian diplomats or Indian nationals.
- (b) Matters mentioned in the above list are not exhaustive and the Speaker can, in his discretion, admit a notice to call attention on any matter not covered by the above mentioned categories, keeping in view the urgency and public importance of the matter. Calling attention notices on the following matters are usually not admitted—
- (i) Law and order matters in States [A calling attention notice relating to a matter of law and order in a State having been disallowed, the Minister was asked to make a factual statement after collecting the information from the State Government, on the understanding that the members who had tabled the notice would not be allowed to ask questions on the statement—L.S. Deb., 18-4-1966, cc. 11395-96; 20-4-1966, cc. 11985-86];
  - (ii) Strikes, lock-outs, fasts and agitations;
  - (iii) Terms and conditions of service of employees;
  - (iv) Accidents;
  - (v) Matters likely to be debated in the near future or discussion on which has already been fixed;
  - (vi) Matters which do not involve the primary responsibility of the Union Government;

where notices regarding certain matters which though not primarily the concern of the Union Government were admitted by the Speaker in view of their special significance and public importance<sup>19</sup> or because of the fact that they involved revenues of the

- (vii) Day-to-Day administrative matters;
  - (viii) Frivolous or trivial matters;
  - (ix) The arrest of an individual cannot form the subject matter of a calling attention notice – see, rulings of the Speaker, L.S. Deb., 24-3-1964, cc. 7145-47.
  - (x) Minor matters involving normal relations between the Union and the States or between the States inter se;
  - (xi) Matters relating to autonomous corporations and local bodies;
  - (xii) Arrests, searches, confiscation of goods or issue of prohibitory orders under the normal process of Law;
  - (xiii) International conventions or agreements entered in the normal course;
  - (xiv) Isolated border incidents with neighbouring countries;
  - (xv) Communication or messages exchanged between the Government of India and Governments of foreign countries in the normal course;
  - (xvi) Statements about India made by foreign dignitaries or individuals of which no special note need be taken;
  - (xvii) Minor developments about a continuing matter on which a statement has already been made;
  - (xviii) Visits of foreign dignitaries or on talks held between foreign dignitaries and Ministers of the Government of India about which communiques are issued in the normal course;
  - (xix) Appointments of Governors or formation of Ministries in States unless a grave violation of the constitutional machinery is involved;
  - (xx) Incidents or speeches in a State Legislature. [A calling attention notice regarding violation of the sanctity of a State Legislature was, however, allowed as a special case even though law and order is a State subject—L.S. Deb., 1-8-1969, cc. 236-37; and 6-8-1969, cc. 231-43];
  - (xxi) Incidents in foreign Parliaments;
  - (xxii) Other matters of unimportant nature—see Min. (R.C. 4 L.S.), 10-7-1967.
19. A notice regarding the situation in the Middle East arising out of the presence of foreign troops in Lebanon and Jordan was admitted and a statement in response thereto was made in the Lok Sabha on 14 August 1958—see L.S. Deb., 14-8-1958, cc. 857-70.
- A notice on the alleged harassment of a marriage party of Scheduled Caste people in a village in Tehri (U.P.) on 14 January 1959, though primarily the concern of the State Government, was admitted by the Speaker in view of its special significance and a statement in response thereto was made in the House on 20 February 1959—see L.S. Deb., 20-2-1959, cc. 2176-77.
- A notice regarding members of the Uttar Pradesh Legislative Assembly not being allowed to take oath in Urdu language was admitted not with a view to discussing the action of the Presiding Officer but to consider the constitutional issues arising therefrom and national importance of the matter—L.S. Deb., 20-3-1969, c. 201.
- A notice regarding violation of sanctity of a State Legislature premises was allowed even though law and order is a State subject—L.S. Deb., 1-8-1969, cc. 232-239; 4-8-1969, c. 236; and 6-8-1969, cc. 231-43.
- A notice regarding the reported effort by the Congress President to bring pressure and undue influence on members of the Bihar Assembly in connection with the Presidential election was admitted in view of the public importance of the matter—L.S. Deb., 7-8-1969, cc. 227-51.

Union Government or assistance and grants by the Union Government<sup>20</sup>.

A notice is normally disallowed or may be kept pending if an intimation has already been received from the Minister that he will make or lay on the Table a statement on the subject suo motu<sup>21</sup> or if the subject is likely to be raised on another motion which has been admitted for discussion<sup>22</sup>. However, the Speaker has the discretion to admit a notice even when the Minister has informed that he would make a statement on the subject suo motu<sup>23</sup>. In view of the urgency of the matter and the demand for an immediate statement being made in the House the Chair may permit the Minister to make the statement suo motu and disallow the calling attention notice on the subject already admitted for the following day<sup>24</sup>. A notice regarding the reported hunger strike by the Chief Minister of a State over the widespread violence and lawlessness in the State was admitted because the House, as the Speaker observed, was entitled to know the reasons behind such a fast which was an unusual thing—L.S. Deb., 3-12-1969, cc. 194-212.

A notice regarding reported incident of burning alive of some Harijan women and children in a village in U.P. was admitted. When the item was taken up on 2-8-1972, the Minister made a statement that the State Government had no information of such an occurrence and that a statement would be laid on the Table on receipt of a report from the State Government. On the request of the members, the item was postponed and on 9-8-1972, the item was taken up again when the Minister made the statement and answered clarificatory questions—L.S. Deb., 2-8-1972, cc. 172-76 and 9-8-1972, cc. 182-94.

20. Calling Attention Notices on the following subjects were admitted—

(i) A bogus payment of Rs. 3.77 crore from the revenues of the Union Government for transportation of fertilizers as disclosed in the Third Report dt. 16-3-1970 of P.A.C., Andhra Pradesh Legislature—L.S. Deb., 13-4-1970, cc. 210-31. (ii) Reported stoppage of grant by the U.G.C. to several colleges in Punjab and Haryana resulting in the closure of these colleges—L.S. Deb., 5-12-1972, cc. 199-223. (iii) Reported lack of assistance to Rajasthan by the Union Government to tide over famine conditions prevailing in 12,500 villages there—L.S. Deb., 15-12-1972, cc. 203-321.

21. Two calling attention notices were received on 11 January 1960, regarding the Dakota Crash on the Indo-Tibetan border on 3 January 1960. Notices of 21 questions were also received on the same subject. All the notices were kept pending in view of the intimation received from the Ministry of Transport and Communications that the Minister would make a statement suo motu on the subject in the House on 10 February 1960, and, thereafter, the calling attention notices and notices of questions were disallowed.

At the time the statement was being made by the Minister, the Speaker, however, made a reference in the House that he had received two calling attention notices and notices of 21 questions on the subject.

22. L.S. Deb., 14-8-1963, c. 412.

23. Two calling attention notices were received on 20 April 1960 regarding the strike of road transport operators in Bombay. The Ministry of Transport and Communications informed that the Minister would make a statement on the subject suo motu in the House on 27 April 1960. The Speaker directed that the statement should be made in response to the calling attention notice.

On 6 April 1985, twenty members tabled notices on several Railway accidents and particularly the one involving Howrah-Amritsar Mail and the Howrah-Amritsar Express on 5 April 1985. The Minister of Railways informed on the same day that he would make a statement suo motu on the subject on 8 April 1985. It was decided that the statement should be made by the Minister in response to the calling attention notices. Accordingly, calling attention notices were admitted and the Minister made the statement on 8 April 1985—L.S. Deb., 8-4-1985, cc. 459-60.

importance, Ministers are expected to make statements in the House suo motu<sup>25</sup>.

Notices on a subject which have either lapsed or have been disallowed may be revived by tabling fresh notices<sup>26</sup>.

Procedure for Calling Attention

When a notice is admitted by the Speaker on the same day, an entry showing the position at which the item will be taken up is inserted in the List of Business for the use of the Speaker, and the text of the matter to be raised is prepared for the use of the Speaker, member concerned, Minister and officers at the Table. In case the notice is admitted for the following or any subsequent day, an entry of the admitted text is made in the printed List of Business.

Admitted notices are normally taken up in the House at the stage laid down in Direction 2 but, in special cases they may be taken up later in the day<sup>27</sup>.

On being called by the Speaker, the member in whose name the item has been put down in the List of Business rises in his place and calls the attention of the Minister concerned to the matter and requests the Minister to make a statement thereon<sup>28</sup>. A member, in whose name a calling attention notice appears in the List of Business, cannot authorise another member to call attention on his behalf.

On his attention being called, the Minister may make a statement if he is in possession of all the facts of the case. Where the information asked for is not available with the Minister at the time, it is open to him to ask for time to make a statement at a later hour or date<sup>29</sup>. The Speaker may direct the statement to be made at the end of the day, or, in his discretion, give time more than once to make a statement if the

25. On 26 July 1977, a member raised a point of order in the Lok Sabha that on an important matter like the visit of the External Affairs Minister to Nepal, who according to the member, should have made a statement on his own instead of doing so only in response to a calling attention notice. The Speaker agreed with the member's contention and observed that it would have been proper for the Minister to come forward with a statement on his own.

26. In Dir. 2, the order of Precedence of such notices is xxii.

28. If a notice is received in Hindi, it is usually the practice that the statement should be in Hindi—See L.S. Deb., 20-11-1963, cc. 661-62. After the installation of the simultaneous interpretation system, it is now left to the Minister to make the statement in a language of his own choice, Hindi or English.

29. Rule 197(1). For instances where a Minister asked for and was given time to make statement at a later date, see L.S. Deb., 22-8-1963, cc. 2076-77 and 26-8-1963, cc. 2600-02; 13-9-1963, cc. 6007-12 and 16-9-1963, cc. 6254-60; 1-5-1964, cc. 13587-59 and 4-5-1964, cc. 1466-70; 22-9-1964, cc. 3049-55 and 24-9-1964, cc. 3494-3500; 2-12-1964, cc. 2891-92 and 3-12-1964, cc. 3266-70; 16-12-1964, cc. 5328-30 and 17-12-1964, cc. 5425-30; 2-8-1972, cc. 172-76 and 9-8-1972, cc. 182-94.

Under Directions of the Speaker, statement had been made later on the same day and question asked thereon. L.S. Deb., 7-3-1968, cc. 2215-17 and 2341-55.

Minister makes a request to that effect. The expression “ask for time to make a statement at a later hour or date” in the Rule has been held not to preclude the extension of time being asked for or given more than once<sup>30</sup>.

A statement promised to be made on a particular day on a matter to which the attention of the Minister concerned had been called by a member earlier is not postponed to a later day at the request of that member, if other signatories to that notice are not in favour of its postponement<sup>31</sup>.

If the statement is short, the Minister usually reads it out to the House. This is followed by questions by members whose names appear in the List of Business. Replies thereto are given by the Ministers, at times by other Ministers, including the Prime Minister, depending upon the question asked and allowed by the Speaker<sup>32</sup>. But if the statement to be made is lengthy, the Speaker may ask the Minister to read out a synopsis of the statement and lay the complete statement on the Table<sup>33</sup>. In such cases, the usual practice, for the members, is to study the statement and to ask questions thereon at a later hour, usually at the end of the day, if so fixed by the Speaker, or during the next sitting of the House<sup>34</sup>; where a statement is lengthy and is normally to be laid on the Table, Ministers are required to supply copies thereof in advance to Table Office latest by 1030 hours, on the day, with a view to making them available to the members concerned<sup>35</sup>. When copies of the statement are made available to members in advance, questions are asked and answered by the Minister<sup>36</sup>, when the statement is laid on the Table. Even if copies of the statement to be made by the Minister have been made available to members in advance, which is now done in almost every case<sup>37</sup>, the Minister has a right to amend his statement till he makes it in the House but he has to give prior information to the Table<sup>38</sup>.

If the statement does not give full information, the matter is kept pending to enable the Minister to make a further statement on the subject, and the members who have tabled the notice are permitted to ask questions when further statement is made<sup>39</sup>.

Questions by way of clarification on a calling attention statement are to be restricted to the subject matter of the admitted notice<sup>40</sup>, and should not reflect upon conduct of persons in high authority<sup>41</sup>, nor seek an assurance<sup>42</sup>. Where a statement is based on the first information report lodged with the police or a matter under judicial enquiry, questions on the statement may be allowed to a restricted degree confining to procedure, subject and stage of inquiry<sup>43</sup>; questions on the merits of the case are not permitted<sup>44</sup> and no individual allegedly involved in the incident is allowed to be referred by name.

If the first member in whose name the item has been put down is not present when called by the Chair, the next member in the List may call the attention of the Minister. If the members in whose name the matter has been put down in the List of Business are not present in the House when the item is reached, the Minister does not make a statement but, with the permission of the Speaker, may lay the statement on the Table. The statement so laid is shown in the proceedings and the Bulletin as not having been laid in response to the calling attention but as one laid by the Minister suo motu<sup>45</sup>. Where the matter is very important, the Speaker may permit a Minister to make the statement in the House but in this case also the statement is treated as having been made suo motu and not in response to the calling attention notice<sup>46</sup>. However, it is not obligatory on the part of a Minister to make or lay the statement if the member/members concerned either decline to call his attention or are not present in the House when the item is reached<sup>47</sup>.

There cannot be any debate on a statement at the time it is made by the Minister<sup>48</sup>. There is, however, no bar on a notice being given for a debate on a subsequent date on a matter contained in the statement<sup>49</sup>.

Only one clarificatory question can be asked on a calling attention statement by each member whose names appear in the List of Business. If the question so asked is disallowed, the member cannot normally ask another question<sup>50</sup>. No questions may be permitted to be asked if such is the desire of the House<sup>51</sup>. Members whose names do not appear in the List of Business are not permitted to ask questions. However, there are occasions when the Speaker has allowed the members to ask clarificatory questions even if their names did not appear in the List of Business<sup>52</sup>.

Clarificatory questions asked by members should not be so lengthy as to convert the calling attention into a debate. Generally, a calling attention matter should take not more than half-an-hour and, in exceptionally important cases, not more than 30 to 45 minutes. The member calling attention can take ten minutes and other members 2-5 minutes each. The Minister replies at the end to all questions asked by the members in whose names the item is listed. The Chair cannot compel a Minister to answer each and every clarificatory question in a particular way<sup>53</sup>.

In the event of more than one matter being presented for the same sitting, priority is given to the matter which, in the opinion of the Speaker, is more urgent and important<sup>54</sup>. The second matter cannot be raised by the same members who have raised the first matter. It may be taken up at or immediately before the end of the sitting as the Speaker may fix<sup>55</sup>. Also, the Minister concerned may make a brief statement in respect of the first matter and in respect of the second matter, a statement may be laid on the Table by the Minister concerned.

A copy of the statement laid is supplied to each of the members in whose names the item stands in the List of Business<sup>56</sup>. If the Prime Minister is to make a statement in response to one of the two calling attention matters on a day, that matter may be given inter se priority in the List of Business<sup>57</sup>. If a notice received on the last day of a session is admitted for that day but the Minister concerned is unable to make a statement, the Speaker may direct the Minister to furnish to the Secretariat, at a later date, a note giving the required information for onward transmission to the member who has tabled the notice<sup>58</sup>.

A calling attention notice which has been admitted and put down in the List of Business may be withdrawn by the members concerned with the Chair's permission, on so stating their intention on the floor of the House<sup>59</sup>.

Conversion of Calling Attention into Short Duration Discussion

A notice of a calling attention on matters of urgent public importance, admitted for a particular day may, with the permission of the Speaker and on the basis of the consensus of the House, be converted into Short Duration Discussion.

There have been occasions when the Speaker agreed to convert a calling attention, on a subject included on the order paper into Short Duration Discussion, to be taken up either on the same day or any other subsequent day<sup>60</sup>.

Scope of Statements

A statement made in response to a calling attention notice is not in the nature of an answer to a question and, therefore, it need not be confined to facts alone. The statement can include opinions, conclusions and decisions of the Government or the Minister and it is not necessary that it should be of a nature on which there should be complete agreement in the House. Similarly, the questions which are asked on such a statement are in the nature of suggestions, criticisms and counter-opinions and, therefore, there is no restriction that the original statements as well as the subsequent questions and answers should be confined to mere facts alone.

Such statements are open to debate. The only restriction is that there cannot be any debate on such statements at the time they are made. There is no prohibition against a notice being given for a debate on a subsequent date on a matter contained in the statement of a Minister in response to a calling attention notice. Hence, if a section of the House is not in agreement with the opinions or conclusions given by a Minister in his statement, they are at liberty to raise a debate and to have the opinion of the House recorded on a proper motion or question before the House<sup>61</sup>.

Clubbing of Names

Normally a notice is not admitted on a subject on which a short notice question has been admitted and vice versa. Where a calling attention notice and a short notice question are tabled on the same subject simultaneously, a Minister may select either of the notices for answer. On receiving the intimation from the Minister, the Speaker may admit the notice selected by the former unless he has already admitted the calling attention notice<sup>62</sup>. The ballot under Rule 54(4) for clubbing names on an admitted short notice question is restricted only to members tabling short notice questions on that subject. Names of members tabling calling attention notices on the subject are not included therein<sup>63</sup>.

Whenever a Minister makes a statement in response to a calling attention notice, he is expected to answer all the points that might have been raised in the short notice questions or other questions received on the same subject and notices of which may have reached him before that date.

On 19 March 1958, Speaker Ayyangar observed that whenever a Minister made a statement on the floor of the House in pursuance of an earlier direction of the Speaker or the House or in response to a calling attention notice, he should cover all the points that had been raised on the subject in various notices, copies of which would have reached him by then<sup>64</sup>.

Generally, the House does not recommend to the Government any action to be taken on the basis of a calling attention notice, but sometimes questions are in the form of suggestions and the Government indicate in their replies whether they are in a position to accept them or not<sup>65</sup>.

62. Under Rule 54(1), a short notice question can be admitted only if the Minister agrees to answer the question at short notice, but a calling attention notice can be admitted without any reference to the Minister concerned.

For instance, in the case of the plight of Indians in Burma following the nationalization of business controlled by Indians in Burma, the members insisted that officials of the Ministry of External Affairs should be sent to inquire into the grievances of Indians there and plead with the Government of Burma to agree to their repatriation in an orderly manner. The suggestion was accepted by the Government—see L.S. Deb., 28-4-1964, cc. 13180-97.

CHAPTER XXI

Motion for Adjournment on a Matter of Urgent Public Importance

Normally, no business not included in the List of Business for the day can be transacted at any sitting without the permission of the Speaker<sup>1</sup>. However, a matter of urgent public importance can be raised by interrupting the regular business of the House through an adjournment motion tabled at the earliest opportunity, if the Speaker gives his consent thereto. In the words of Speaker Mavalankar:

An adjournment motion is really a very exceptional thing, because hon. members will see that to allow a matter to be discussed in the House in respect of which no previous notice is given and which is not placed on the Order Paper, is doing injustice to a large number of absent members. Therefore, the practice has been that nothing will be introduced extraneously in the Order Paper of the day unless the occasion is of such a character that something very grave, something which affects the whole country, its safety, its interests and all that is happening, and the House must pay its attention immediately. Then only an adjournment motion can be conceived. Adjournment Motions are not included in the Order Paper unless the extent of the matter, its importance and its gravity justifies it<sup>2</sup>.

The primary object of an adjournment motion is to draw the attention of the Government to a matter of urgent public importance so as to criticise the decision of the Government in regard to which a motion or resolution with proper notice will be too late<sup>3</sup>.

Provision to move an adjournment motion which was largely based on the procedure obtaining in the House of Commons, U.K. was made for the first time in 1920 when the Indian Legislative Rules for the Legislative Assembly to be constituted under the Government of India Act, 1919, were framed<sup>4</sup>. The rules were applicable to both the Houses of the Central Legislature and provided that an adjournment motion could be moved in either Chamber. This was a patent departure from the practice in the U.K., where an adjournment motion could be moved only in the House of Commons. The position was corrected in 1947<sup>5</sup> and the provision in the rules vesting in the Governor-General the power to disallow an adjournment motion in certain cases, notwithstanding the fact that consent to its moving had been given by the Speaker, was also omitted.

3. L.A. Deb., 9-6-1924, p. 2812.

4. Gaz. Ex., 27-9-1920, pp. 1003-10.

5. In 1952, when the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha were constituted, provision to move an adjournment motion was retained in the Rules of Procedure of Lok Sabha only as the Council of Ministers is responsible to the Lok Sabha alone vide art. 75(3) of the Constitution.

From the very beginning, an adjournment motion has been taken to be in the nature of a censure motion, though not absolutely<sup>6</sup>. Explaining this, Speaker Frederick Whyte stated as follows:

No direct effect can be given to an adjournment motion of this House. The rule itself only provides a convenient method by which the ordinary business of the Assembly may be put on one side in order to make way for the discussion of some sudden emergency. The only question put from the Chair on the occasion is that this House do now adjourn. If this motion is carried, the action of the Assembly may be taken: (i) as evidence of the serious view which the majority of the Floor takes regarding the matter, and (ii) as a possible vote of censure on Government<sup>7</sup>.

The procedure for moving an adjournment motion has remained unaltered since the inception of the First Central Legislative Assembly in 1921 but the purpose and effect of these motions have changed since Independence. The procedural devices whereby members could bring matters of urgent public importance for discussion, before Independence, were very few. They had, therefore, to resort frequently to one rule, namely, adjournment motion. In those days, an adjournment motion was not regarded, in the absolute sense, as amounting to a censure motion because the Government was not responsible to the House. The Speaker of the Assembly had also to construe the rules not on the basis of strict parliamentary conventions or usage but in the light of prevailing conditions. Thus the practice developed that any matter of consequence was brought for discussion on an adjournment motion. The Speaker invariably permitted discussion by admitting adjournment motions liberally. This practice had become so deep-rooted that when India became free and the Government became responsible to Parliament, members did not realise that a change had taken place and that it was no longer appropriate to bring matters of any consequence for discussion on adjournment motions. Partly, the rules were at fault. They had not been so revised or enlarged to facilitate more such parliamentary devices through which urgent matters could be raised and discussed in the House. Therefore, a period of great stress and strain between the Presiding Officer and the members ensued—members wishing to discuss matters on adjournment motions, and the Speaker resisting this method of approach as it was not conducive to sound parliamentary procedure<sup>8</sup>. Speaker Mavalankar, therefore, took an opportunity at the earliest, of explaining the scope of an adjournment motion in the new set-up. In his ruling in the Provisional Parliament on 21 March 1950, he said:

The crucial test always is as to whether the question proposed to be raised has arisen suddenly and created an emergent situation of such a character that there is prima facie case of urgency and the House must therefore leave aside all other business and take up the consideration of the urgent matter at the appointed hour. The urgency must be of such a character that the matter really brooks no delay and should be discussed on the same day the notice has been given.

Successive Speakers of the Central Legislative Assembly, including myself, had considerably relaxed the rule of admission as it prevailed in the House of Commons, for the obvious reason that private members, who were in Opposition, had few opportunities of discussing matters of public importance... The Government then was not responsible to the Legislature, nor were they amenable to its control. There was, therefore, good ground for the Presiding Officers to relax the rule and allow opportunities for discussion of all important questions on adjournment motions... The conditions now have entirely changed and, therefore, in the new set-up, with the various opportunities and the responsive and responsible character of the Government, we cannot look upon an adjournment motion as a normal device for raising discussion on any important matter<sup>9</sup>.

If an adjournment motion is carried, it indicates stronger disapproval of the policy of Government than a censure against it. For removing the Government, however, it is necessary for members to give notice of a no-confidence motion in the Council of Ministers as provided for in the Rules<sup>10</sup>.

Notice of Adjournment Motion

Notice of an adjournment motion is given by members on the prescribed form, copies of which are made available to them through the Parliamentary Notice Office. In his notice of a motion for an adjournment of the business of the House, a member has to state the definite matter which he wants the House to consider. He must confine the subject matter of the notice within the limits laid down by the rules and be brief and clear about it. A notice which is vague or contains lengthy arguments which are in the nature of a discussion is disallowed on that very ground<sup>11</sup>.

The contents of the notice are kept secret and are not divulged to members or to the Press. It is also not open to a member to give publicity to his notice of an adjournment motion or to give it to the Press to publish it before it is brought before the House<sup>12</sup>, and any lapse in this regard is treated as a breach of privilege of the House.

Notice of an adjournment motion has to be given before the commencement of the sitting on the day on which the motion is proposed to be made to the Secretary-General, copies of which should be endorsed to the Speaker, the Minister concerned and the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs<sup>13</sup>.

The expression 'before the commencement of the sitting' in the rules means a reasonable time before the commencement of the sitting so that the notice could reach the Speaker in his office before he goes to occupy the Chair at the commencement of the sitting. Before the commencement of a session, notices can at the earliest be given only after a day fixed, for the purpose, in advance and notified in the Bulletin<sup>14</sup>.

The Standing Orders framed in 1920 provided for the notice of an adjournment motion being given to the Secretary of the Assembly only<sup>15</sup>. In 1937, the Legislative Assembly Rules were amended to provide for a copy of the notice being given also to the Speaker and Member of the Government to whose Department the motion related<sup>16</sup>.

Notices are now addressed to the Secretary-General and copies thereof endorsed to the Speaker, the Ministers concerned and the Minister of Parliamentary Affairs are received in the Parliamentary Notice Office<sup>17</sup>. Keeping in view the need for giving sufficient time to the Speaker to consider notices, it has been laid down that notices of adjournment motions received upto 10.00 hours are valid for that day. In case copies of notice are delivered after 10.00 hours at the Parliamentary Notice Office, the notice is not deemed to have been received in time and treated as a notice given for the next sitting<sup>18</sup>.

In case the House is adjourned for the day without transacting any business, notices received for that day are kept pending for the next sitting<sup>19</sup>.

No member shall give more than one such notice for any one sitting.

Where several notices on the same subject are received at the same point of time, a ballot is held to determine their inter se priority.

Where, however, a notice is signed by more than one member, it shall be deemed to have been given by the first signatory only<sup>20</sup>.

Where a member delivers a notice to the Speaker personally before 10.00 hours and hands in the copy intended for the Secretary-General after that hour, the Speaker may, in exceptional circumstances, to be explained by the member to the satisfaction of the Speaker, hold that the notice may be deemed to have been received in time.

A notice received after the prescribed hour, in the absence of any instructions from the member as to the date on which it is to be taken up, is treated as a notice

19. Notices received on 23 June 1980, 25 July 1985 and 21 August 1985 were kept pending for the next sitting as the House adjourned without transacting any business due to the demise of Sanjay Gandhi (sitting member), Sardar Hukam Singh (former Speaker, Lok Sabha) and Sardar Harchand Singh Longowal (President, Shiromani Akali Dal); On 20 February 2001, due to the demise of Indrajit Gupta (sitting members); On 28 November 2001, due to demise of Vishno Datt Sharma (sitting member); On 21 February 2003 and 28 July 2003 were also kept pending for the next sitting as the House adjourned without transacting any Business after making obituary and other references on the passing away of sitting members.

20. Rule 57, Explanation (i).

for the next sitting and in deciding the admissibility of such a notice, due consideration is given to the point whether the notice has been given by the member at the first available opportunity.

In accordance with well established convention, notices of adjournment motion received before the President's Address stand postponed for consideration at the sitting of the House following the one held immediately after the President has addressed the Houses of Parliament assembled together<sup>21</sup>. There is, however, no bar to take up the motion on the day of the President's Address itself<sup>22</sup>.

When a motion of no-confidence in the Council of Ministers is under discussion, adjournment motions are not allowed<sup>23</sup>. Where notice of a motion of no-confidence has been received, the Speaker may hold over consideration of adjournment motions till decision is taken by the House about granting leave for the moving of the no-confidence motion.

Adjournment motions are not normally allowed during the budget discussions or during the discussion on the Motion of Thanks on President's Address as members have sufficient opportunity to focus the attention of the House to any matter during that discussion<sup>24</sup>.

Admissibility of Adjournment Motions

An adjournment motion, to be admissible, must possess the following essential elements:

Ministerial Responsibility

Generally speaking, the subject matter of an adjournment motion must have direct or indirect relation to the conduct or default on the part of the Government of India and must be in the nature of criticism of the action of the Government of India either for having done some action or for having omitted to do some action which was urgently necessary at the moment<sup>25</sup>. An adjournment motion is not admissible unless

22. On 18 March 1967, when the House assembled after the President's Address, members of certain Opposition Groups did not agree with the convention and pressed for their adjournment motions being taken up on that day itself. There were also two notices of no-confidence motion in the Council of Ministers which too members wanted to be taken up on that day to which the Prime Minister agreed. Accordingly, discussion on motion of no-confidence in the Council of Ministers was taken up on that day and motion for adjournment was not taken up—L.S. Deb., 18-3-1967, cc. 100-120.

24. On 19 February 1981, while giving consent to moving the adjournment motion, the Speaker observed that normally when debate on the President's Address was taking place, there was hardly any reason for adjournment motion. However, having regard to the fact of tragic loss of life due to consumption of poisonous and spurious liquor, in Delhi, he had given his consent. Accordingly, discussion which commenced at 16.00 hours; concluded the same day. L.S. Deb., 19-2-1981, cc. 460-61; 548-622.

there was failure on the part of the Government to perform the duties enjoined by the Constitution and the law<sup>26</sup>. Where the Government of India has no obligation to intervene in a matter, an adjournment motion is out of order. An adjournment motion cannot be moved also on matters where a Minister exercises discretionary powers conferred upon him by a statute.

An adjournment motion on a matter concerning a State Government is inadmissible<sup>27</sup>. Notice of an adjournment motion relating to a State subject has, therefore, to be accompanied by a statement showing how the responsibility of the Government of India has not been discharged<sup>28</sup>. However, adjournment motions relating to matters of law and order or any other State subject, if these concern members of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes<sup>29</sup>, may be referred to the Minister of Home Affairs for making enquiries in the matter from the Government of the State concerned and furnishing the information direct to the member or members tabling the notice<sup>30</sup>.

An adjournment motion on constitutional developments in a State which bring the Union Government into picture may be held to be in order. Thus, consent has been given by the Speaker to the moving of adjournment motions on the failure of the Union Government to prevent the prorogation of a State Assembly by the Governor when the Assembly session had been called to pass the budget and a vote on certain Demands was likely to go against the Government in view of crossing of the floor by several members and dissolution of a State Assembly by the Governor<sup>31</sup>.

An adjournment motion regarding dissolution of a State Assembly was also held to be in order<sup>32</sup>.

An adjournment motion seeking to discuss the action of the Governor in issuing an Ordinance for appropriation of money after proroguing the State Assembly was held inadmissible, as the action of the Governor was in accordance with the provisions of article 213 of the Constitution<sup>33</sup>.

It has been held that calling of armed forces by a competent authority of the Government of a State in aid of the local police force to maintain law and order cannot be the subject matter of an adjournment motion as under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973<sup>34</sup>, a Magistrate is empowered to call the armed forces when he feels that an unlawful assembly cannot be otherwise dispersed<sup>35</sup>.

The action of the Government of a State which it is empowered to take under the provisions of the Constitution cannot form the subject matter of an adjournment motion<sup>36</sup>.

An adjournment motion seeking discussion on Supreme Court judgment was held to be inadmissible<sup>37</sup>.

Where the President has, by a proclamation, declared that the powers of the Legislature of a State shall be exercisable by or under the authority of Parliament after having dissolved the Legislature of the State, an adjournment motion on a State subject in respect of that State may be moved in Lok Sabha. The admissibility of such a motion is, however, governed by the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in Lok Sabha and not by those of the State Legislature<sup>38</sup>.

Matters relating to the day-to-day administration of an autonomous organisation/corporation cannot be raised by way of an adjournment motion<sup>39</sup>.

Conduct of a foreign Government<sup>40</sup> as also events in a foreign country over which the Government of India have no jurisdiction cannot be discussed on an adjournment motion<sup>41</sup>.

Matter must be definite

The matter sought to be raised by a motion for adjournment must—

(a) Relate to a single specific matter: An adjournment motion to discuss an inquiry report as a whole has been held as not relating to a specific matter.

A motion must not raise more than one issue. However, subjects referred to in different adjournment motions raising substantially the same question have been allowed to be discussed together on the first admitted motion<sup>42</sup>. When two or more notices on the same subject have been received, the Speaker, in his discretion, gives his consent to a notice which is appropriately framed, although it may not be the first one received in point of time<sup>43</sup>.

43. L.S. Deb., 12-3-1959, cc. 5841-53.

(b) Neither be couched in general terms nor cover a great number of cases: An adjournment motion which seeks to raise a general issue like political situation in the country<sup>44</sup>, or appalling conditions leading to unparalleled economic upheaval in India due to unemployment of middle classes, etc.<sup>45</sup>, or lawlessness in a State<sup>46</sup>, or attitude of Government when Government have not disclosed any attitude<sup>47</sup>, or late running of trains and increase in the number of railway accidents<sup>48</sup>, has been held to be not in order. If an adjournment motion is sought to be moved on the basis of statement by any Minister, it must set out either the statement in full or at least give a substance of the statement; otherwise it could not be a definite matter for discussion for which the House should be adjourned<sup>49</sup>.

(c) Have a factual basis: The mover of a motion must be ready with all the facts before he makes the motion<sup>50</sup>. Where the information is within the personal knowledge of a member, it may be presumed as having factual basis if confirmed by him on the floor of the House<sup>51</sup>. There is no objection per se to the notice of an adjournment motion being given simply because it happens to be based on a newspaper report, but the Speaker before accepting the motion must be in possession of further facts. Press reports unless admitted by Government cannot be accepted as authoritative for the purpose of an adjournment motion<sup>52</sup>. Private telegrams cannot be accepted as justifying an adjournment motion<sup>53</sup>. Where facts are not admitted by Government, the member must adduce some authentic information to support his notice<sup>54</sup>. In an appropriate case, the Speaker may allow the notice to stand over till the next day so that further information could be gathered and placed before the House<sup>55</sup>.

An adjournment motion does not lie when facts are in dispute, or before they are available. When Government dispute the facts stated in the notice of the adjournment motion, the Speaker accepts the Government version of the facts<sup>56</sup>.

Matter must be urgent

In interpreting whether a matter is urgent or not, the Speaker is guided not by the ordinary meaning of the term but by the technical use of the term made in the rule<sup>57</sup>. A matter to be urgent must have arisen suddenly in the nature of an emergency<sup>58</sup>.

Instances of matters held 'urgent' include decision of Government to postpone the Currency Bill after presentation of the General Budget<sup>59</sup>; sending of troops to a foreign country without consulting the Assembly<sup>60</sup>; terms of communique announcing the appointment of the personnel of a committee to make inquiry and make recommendations regarding allocation of certain resources between the Government of India and the Government of a State<sup>61</sup>; use of religious places for extremist activities<sup>62</sup>; decision of Government to increase the prices of fertilizers and petroleum products on the eve of Budget Session<sup>63</sup>; and security lapses for President and Prime Minister and other dignitaries<sup>64</sup>.

Instances of matters held 'not urgent' include the question of serious unemployment in an industry in India<sup>65</sup>; Government's attitude regarding contract for the Howrah Bridge going to a British firm<sup>66</sup>; dacoities committed on the border of Baluchistan and Sind in which one officer and three clerks were killed<sup>67</sup>; railway disaster near Bikaner resulting in the death of forty-five passengers and injuries to sixty-one others<sup>68</sup>; closure of tea gardens due to sharp fall in prices<sup>69</sup>; air crash in Delhi<sup>70</sup>; alleged occupation of the island of 'Kachcha Thivu, by Ceylon<sup>71</sup>; and arrests and convictions in Trivandrum following an agitation to establish a Bench of Kerala High Court at Trivandrum<sup>72</sup>.

A matter is 'urgent' only if it is of very recent occurrence and must be raised at the first available opportunity<sup>73</sup>. Matters arising during the period when the House is not in session should be raised on the first day the House meets<sup>74</sup>. A matter which has been continuing for some time cannot be raised through an adjournment motion<sup>75</sup>.

A matter even of very recent occurrence is not 'urgent' if an opportunity for its discussion will arise in the ordinary course of business within a reasonably short time<sup>76</sup>.

It has been held that an adjournment motion on a matter which can be raised during debate on the Motion of Thanks on the President's Address<sup>77</sup>; budget discussion<sup>78</sup>; motion on international situation<sup>79</sup>; motion regarding a matter of public importance such as food policy, etc.<sup>80</sup> to be held in the same session is not in order. Similarly a matter which can be raised under any other procedural device, viz., calling attention notices, questions, short notice questions, half-an-hour discussions, short duration discussions, etc.<sup>81</sup> cannot be raised through an adjournment motion<sup>82</sup>.

A matter which has already been discussed by the House during the same session cannot be raised again through an adjournment motion<sup>83</sup>. Similarly, notice of an adjournment motion cannot be amended from day-to-day as new situations in respect of the same matter arise<sup>84</sup>.

The Speaker may, in a fit case, postpone consideration of a notice of an adjournment motion without prejudice to the claim of the member to raise an urgent matter. Circumstances in which consideration of adjournment motions has been postponed are:

until certain information had been obtained<sup>85</sup>, or until full facts were available<sup>86</sup>;

in order to conclude discussion on an important Bill<sup>87</sup> or on a motion<sup>88</sup> before the House; to enable the Minister of Law to give his opinion to the Speaker on a certain point<sup>89</sup>, or the mover to amend his notice of adjournment motion by omitting certain words<sup>90</sup>, or members to have more time to study the matter sought to be raised<sup>91</sup>.

when the Budget guillotine was to be applied at 5 p.m.<sup>92</sup> or when the then Viceroy was to address the Assembly in the afternoon<sup>93</sup>;

when consideration of the motion is postponed by the Speaker for a somewhat longer period, a fresh notice of the motion is necessary<sup>94</sup>.

Matter must be of Public Importance

To be in order, an adjournment motion must raise a matter of sufficient public importance to warrant interruption of normal business of the House. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what constitutes public importance. The question of public importance is decided on merits in each individual case<sup>95</sup>. It is always a relative question and in a vast country like India, the importance of an incident has to be judged in the background of the entire administration of the country<sup>96</sup>.

The factors which usually go in favour of deciding that the matter raised by an adjournment motion is one of public importance are—

- (i) The matter raised should be a larger issue than a merely individual grievance.

Service grievances and individual cases of administrative character such as appointments, promotions of officers or class of officers of the Government cannot be brought up by way of an adjournment motion<sup>97</sup>,

Appointment of S.P. Chambers from England as Chief Commissioner of Income-tax<sup>98</sup>, and appointment of a non-Indian as Superintendent of Insurance even when only one Indian was qualified for the post<sup>99</sup>,

- (iii) Though generally the policy and attitude of Government cannot be considered to be a fit matter to be raised through an adjournment motion, occasions may arise when policy and attitude of the Government may become a matter of public importance<sup>100</sup>, e.g., the attitude of the Government as disclosed by replies to a question relating to a scurrilous article in a newspaper regarding Mahatma Gandhi<sup>101</sup>; raids and arrests in several parts of India<sup>102</sup>; decision of the Government not to publish the Report of the Indian Deputation to Fiji<sup>103</sup>; reported decision of the Government to drop the Second Shipyard Project at Cochin<sup>104</sup>.

Restrictions on the Right to Move Motion

The right to move an adjournment motion is subject to the following restrictions namely<sup>115</sup>—

- (i) Not more than one such motion shall be made at the same sitting : An adjournment motion is deemed to have been duly made after leave of the House to move it has been granted<sup>116</sup>. If the Speaker gives his consent to the moving of an adjournment motion and the leave of the House is also granted, the disposal of the remaining notices is as follows:

Notices on the same subject are barred<sup>117</sup>.

Notices on different subjects stand over to be taken up at the next sitting of the House<sup>118</sup>.

The process of pending notices being taken up at the next sitting of the House may continue from day-to-day until all the notices are disposed of. In a case where the Speaker has given his consent to the moving of an adjournment motion but leave of the House is not granted, the next notice in order of receipt in point of time, if it has not already been disposed of by the Speaker in his Chamber, is taken up. Similarly, where the Speaker withholds his consent to the moving of an adjournment motion after referring to the motion in the House, the next notice in order of receipt in point of time, which has not already been disposed of by the Speaker in his Chamber, is taken up.

Where notices of more than one adjournment motion are received for a particular day and the Speaker decides to bring them before the House, they are taken up one by one in the order of their receipt in point of time. If there are more than one notice on the same subject, the Speaker may, in his discretion, take them up together<sup>119</sup>. The Speaker has, on occasions, declined to take up more than one notice at a time even when the notices related to a like subject on the ground that the question to be considered by the House was whether the first motion was in order and if so, whether on an objection being taken, the House granted leave to move it<sup>120</sup>.

Where notices of more than one adjournment motion received on the same subject are taken up and the matter sought to be raised is held in order, the Speaker normally gives his consent to the notice which is received first in point of time<sup>121</sup>. But the Speaker may, in his discretion, give his consent to a notice, as stated earlier, which is appropriately framed although it may not be the first in point of time<sup>122</sup>.

(ii) Not more than one matter can be discussed on the same motion.

The debate on an adjournment motion, when admitted, should be strictly restricted to the specific matter mentioned in the motion<sup>123</sup>.

(iii) The motion should be restricted to a specific matter of recent occurrence<sup>124</sup>.

(iv) The motion should not raise a question of privilege.

The Rules and Standing Orders framed in 1921 did not specifically bar a question of privilege being raised through an adjournment motion<sup>125</sup>. However, it was held by the Speaker from time to time that an adjournment motion was not the proper procedure for raising a question of privilege<sup>126</sup>. It was also held that an adjournment motion could not be employed for defending the House against outside attacks<sup>127</sup>.

The distinction between an adjournment motion and a question of privilege was brought out by Speaker Abdur Rahim in his ruling on 27 February 1936:

Ordinarily the object of a motion for adjourning the business of the Assembly is to discuss and criticise the conduct or attitude of the Government in a definite matter of urgent public importance, while in a case, where the question of privilege is raised as the main issue, the House would be asked to take such suitable action as is within its competence in order to protect the members from interference and molestation in the discharge of their duties or to uphold the dignity of the House. But, if the question of privilege raised is a definite matter of urgent public importance, which is also primarily the concern of the Government, and the main object of the motion is to discuss and criticise the conduct of the Government in the matter, it can be dealt with by an adjournment motion subject, of course, to the restrictions and limitations laid down by the rules<sup>128</sup>.

Before Independence, when the privileges, powers and immunities of the House were not defined, adjournment motions arising out of the detention of and ban on members were held to be in order since the object of the motions was mainly to discuss and criticise the conduct of the Government in the matter<sup>129</sup>.

Deb.*, Vol. IV, 1936, pp. 3059-60, 3089-3 114.

After Independence, Speaker Mavalankar held that the arrest of a member of the House under the ordinary law of the land was not a breach of privilege of the House and the matter could not be raised through an adjournment motion since the mere fact of his being a member of the House did not make him free from all laws of the country. He held that when a member was arrested, the Government was acting under the authority vested in it by the law and no question of privilege could arise because the member was like any other citizen in that respect<sup>130</sup>. Further, the rules prohibit a member from raising a question of privilege on an adjournment motion<sup>131</sup>. Also, where a matter has been raised as an adjournment motion, the same matter cannot be allowed to be raised as a question of privilege<sup>132</sup>.

- (v) The motion should not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session<sup>133</sup>.

An adjournment motion on a matter which is substantially identical with the one already raised by an adjournment motion, consent to the moving of which has been withheld by the Speaker<sup>134</sup> or leave of the House to the moving of which has been refused<sup>135</sup> during the same session, is not in order. Similarly, a matter already discussed by the House cannot be revived during the same session by way of an adjournment motion unless something new has arisen which warrants interruption of the normal business of the House<sup>136</sup>.

Matters which are coming before the House from day to day by way of questions, half-an-hour discussions, etc., cannot be raised through an adjournment motion<sup>137</sup>.

- (vi) The motion should not anticipate a matter which has been previously appointed for consideration.

In determining whether a discussion is out of order on the ground of anticipation, the Speaker shall have regard to the probability of the matter anticipated to be brought before the House within a reasonable time. Explaining the purpose of this provision, Speaker Mavalankar observed:

The point is that if hon. members have a fairly good chance of raising the question on a debate, it will not be permitted as an adjournment motion. The adjournment motion is a device to bring something before the House which is not included in the agenda or Order Paper. It is something like taking up a new matter which is not intended to be taken up and of which all members had no notice whatever. So in the interest of all, it has been the practice to allow adjournment motion as a matter of exception where the matter is really urgent and there is no other opportunity or chance for the House to consider the matter<sup>138</sup>.

Therefore, an adjournment motion must not anticipate a resolution which is likely to be reached on the day allotted for discussion of the private member's resolutions<sup>139</sup>, or a motion likely to be discussed by the House shortly<sup>140</sup>, or matters covered by amendments to Motion of Thanks on the President's Address<sup>141</sup>, or a matter which can be raised during discussion on the Budget and Finance Bill which is to take place in the same session<sup>142</sup>. Likewise, when Demands for Grants are being discussed, adjournment motions may not be allowed as Government can be censured, by voting down the Demands. A separate discussion on the subject matter of an adjournment motion may, however, be allowed, if necessary<sup>143</sup>.

But, a notice of a cut motion having been received on a subject is no bar to the moving of an adjournment motion on the same subject<sup>144</sup>.

(vii) The motion should not deal with any matter which is under adjudication by a court of law having jurisdiction in any part of India<sup>145</sup>.

A matter is not sub judice until the legal proceedings actually start<sup>146</sup>, but the moment a complaint is filed or a petition is launched involving jurisdiction of any of the courts in India, the court is seized of the matter and to that extent the jurisdiction of the House to discuss the matter is barred<sup>147</sup>. An adjournment motion to the moving of which leave of the House has been granted cannot be proceeded with, if at the time appointed for taking up the motion, the matter has become sub judice<sup>148</sup>. A matter which is appealable cannot be discussed by the House<sup>149</sup>.

Although it may be the unanimous desire of the House to discuss a matter which is sub judice, the Speaker is bound to forbid it<sup>150</sup>. Non-observance of the prescribed legal procedure in a case before the court cannot be raised through an adjournment motion<sup>151</sup>.

Where the intention of the mover of an adjournment motion is to discuss the Government policy underlying certain arrests and not the merits of the individual cases of arrests pending before the courts, the motion may be held to be in order<sup>152</sup>.

An adjournment motion seeking to discuss the arrest of a member, charges against whom had been withdrawn, was held to be out of order since the case against the co-accused was still under investigation and the matter continued to be sub judice<sup>153</sup>.

If the subject matter of an adjournment motion consists of two parts and a part becomes sub judice after leave of the House to the moving of the motion has been granted, discussion has to be restricted to the part which is not sub judice. The Speaker has ruled out the objection that the entire motion need not be proceeded with in such a case<sup>154</sup>.

It has further been held that an order passed in the ordinary administration of law cannot be the subject matter of an adjournment motion even though there is no remedy for it under the law<sup>155</sup>. The Discussion on a ruling of the Supreme Court is not admitted<sup>156</sup>. The sentence passed by a martial law court, however, stands on a different footing from the judgment of an ordinary court, and may be discussed on an adjournment motion<sup>157</sup>.

(viii) The motion should not raise any question which under the Constitution or the Rules can only be raised on a distinct motion by a notice given in writing to the Secretary-General.

This provision was for the first time made in the Rules of the Provisional Parliament in 1951<sup>158</sup>. There was no such provision in the Rules and Standing Orders of the Central Legislative Assembly or the Constituent Assembly (Legislative). However, it has been held by the Speakers from time to time that the following matters could not be raised by way of an adjournment motion:

Conduct of the Governor-General (now President) or any action taken by him<sup>159</sup>, Conduct of the Governor of a State<sup>160</sup>, and Conduct of the Speaker<sup>161</sup>, or an order passed by the Speaker<sup>162</sup>.

Under the Constitution, the conduct of the following persons can be discussed by the House on a distinct motion given notice of to that effect and in the manner prescribed therein, namely:

the President<sup>163</sup>; the Vice-President<sup>164</sup>; the Speaker or Deputy Speaker<sup>165</sup>; a Judge of the Supreme Court<sup>166</sup>; the Comptroller and Auditor-General<sup>167</sup>; a Judge of a High Court<sup>168</sup>; and the Chief Election Commissioner<sup>169</sup>.

No other person whose conduct can be discussed on a distinct motion has been specifically mentioned in the Rules. The Speaker has, however, the power to hold that the conduct of a particular person can be discussed only on a substantive motion drawn up in terms approved by him<sup>170</sup>.

It has been observed by the Speaker that members should not make allegations or cast aspersions against members of statutory bodies<sup>171</sup>; high dignitaries<sup>172</sup>; and Governor of a State<sup>173</sup>; Chief Minister<sup>174</sup> or any other Minister in a State Government; and the State Legislature<sup>175</sup>.

An adjournment motion which seeks to raise discussion on a matter pending before any statutory tribunal or authority performing any judicial or quasi-judicial functions or any commission or court of inquiry appointed to inquire into, or investigate, any matter is not ordinarily permitted to be moved. The Speaker may, however, in his discretion, allow such matter to be raised in the House as is concerned with the procedure or subject or stage of inquiry, if he is satisfied that it is not likely to prejudice the consideration of such matter by the statutory tribunal, authority, commission or court of inquiry<sup>176</sup>.

176. Rule 59, proviso.

An adjournment motion is not permissible on an issue which would be the subject of a judicial decision or the subject matter of a petition before the Election Commission<sup>177</sup>.

Accidents in the air involving both civil and military aircrafts, on the railways, in the mines or in the sea, or explosions are generally followed by a judicial inquiry in the case of major accidents and statutory or departmental inquiries in the case of others. An adjournment motion on such incidents is held out of order if the Government comes forward with a plea that the matter is under investigation<sup>178</sup>. Where a matter has been referred to a commission of inquiry by a State Government, an adjournment motion seeking to raise that matter in the House has also been held to be inadmissible<sup>179</sup>.

Following are some of the other typical grounds, based on the rulings given by the Speaker from time to time, on which consent to moving of an adjournment motion may be withheld, if:

In the opinion of the Speaker, it contravenes the spirit of the rules<sup>180</sup>;
It seeks to obtain information<sup>181</sup>;

Wide questions of policy are sought to be discussed<sup>182</sup>;

Interpretation of the provisions of the Constitution is desired (the proper forum for that being the High Courts or the Supreme Court)<sup>183</sup>;

Infringement of the provisions of the Constitution by a State Government is alleged<sup>184</sup>;

Failure of Government to comply with the provisions of the Constitution in respect of a particular Bill is alleged<sup>185</sup>;

It raises matters entailing legislation<sup>186</sup>;

It refers to fast undertaken by an individual or a body of people<sup>187</sup>;

Consent of Speaker

The Speaker gives his consent to the moving of an adjournment motion if he is satisfied that the matter sought to be raised is definite, urgent, and of public importance. Because the matter proposed to be discussed is a definite matter of urgent public importance, the Speaker is not, as a matter of course, bound to rule the motion in order. A matter may be urgent, it may be definite, it may be of public importance, and yet the Speaker may, in a proper case, disallow such a motion<sup>203</sup>. The refusal to give consent is in the absolute discretion of the Speaker and he is not bound to give any reasons<sup>204</sup>.

Where the Speaker is satisfied that the matter proposed to be discussed is prima facie in order under the Rules, he gives his consent to the moving of the motion<sup>205</sup>.

Once consent to the moving of an adjournment motion on a subject has been given, it cannot be changed for another subject<sup>206</sup>.

Where, however, the Speaker is satisfied that the notice of an adjournment motion is prima facie inadmissible, he refuses his consent without bringing the matter before the House<sup>207</sup>, and the member concerned is informed of the Speaker's decision. Where it is a border-line case or the Speaker is not in possession of full facts to decide the admissibility of a notice, he may mention in the House the receipt of the motion and after hearing a brief statement from the member and/or the Minister concerned whether the matter sought to be raised is within the Rules, give his decision on merit.

When the Speaker withholds his consent to the moving of an adjournment motion in his Chamber, it is neither obligatory to read out the motion to the House nor to give the reasons for refusing the consent<sup>208</sup>. After a member is informed of the Speaker's decision withholding his consent, no question is permitted to be raised in the House either on the subject matter of the notice or the reasons for disallowance

206. On 17 November 1980, the Speaker informed the House that he had given consent to adjournment motion on notice of some members on the subject of Railway accidents. Several members, thereupon, submitted that they would like to withdraw the adjournment motion on Railway accidents and requested the Speaker to admit another adjournment motion re: rise in prices in its place. The Speaker, thereupon, observed that he had already announced the decision and it could not be changed in that manner nor was there any precedent. He would, however, allow a discussion on rise in prices under rule 184. etc. On their names being called, one by one, to move for leave of the House, to discuss Railway accidents, members concerned were found not present, having walked out earlier.—*L.S. thereof<sup>209</sup>. If, however, a member would like to make a submission to the Speaker to reconsider his decision, he can do so either in person to the Speaker in his Chamber later during the day or by submitting a written representation to the Speaker in that behalf<sup>210</sup>. In case the Speaker is satisfied on the submission of the member that there are adequate grounds to bring up the matter before the House, he would either mention it or permit the member to raise it on the following day, irrespective of the fact that the notice had been given on the previous day.

When an adjournment motion is brought before the House, it is not necessary for the Speaker to read out the names of all the members who have signed the notice or have given separate notices on the subject. The Speaker also decides whether the full text of an adjournment motion should be read out to the House or only as much of it as he deems fit<sup>211</sup>. The Speaker may dispose of an adjournment motion in the House by referring briefly to its subject matter without reading the text<sup>212</sup>. Motions containing defamatory statements are neither read out by the Speaker nor allowed to be mentioned in the House. Such statements, if read out in the House by the members, may be expunged from the proceedings of the House<sup>213</sup>.

In an appropriate case, the Speaker may admit a calling attention notice<sup>214</sup> in lieu of the notice of an adjournment motion either on the same day or on a subsequent day depending upon the nature and urgency of the matter sought to be raised. Where this is done, the member is required to submit a regular notice of calling attention under the rules, a copy of which is made available to the Minister concerned in order to enable him to make a statement in response thereto.

Leave of the House

Consent of the Speaker alone does not entitle the member giving notice of an adjournment motion to move for the adjournment of business of the House; it has to be followed by leave of the House.

When the Speaker gives his consent to the moving of an adjournment motion, he, at the appropriate time, i.e., after the questions have been disposed of, calls upon the member concerned to rise in his place and ask for leave to move the adjournment of the House<sup>215</sup>. The member giving notice of an adjournment motion must be present at the time the adjournment motion is taken up in the House. When asking for leave of the House, the member has to confine himself to a mere statement to that effect.

He cannot make a speech at that stage<sup>216</sup>. If objection to the leave being granted is taken by any member, the Speaker requests those members who are in favour of leave being granted to rise in their seats<sup>217</sup>. A count is then taken of such members but their names are not recorded. If not less than fifty members rise in favour of the motion, the Speaker declares that leave is granted<sup>218</sup>.

Objection to the leave being granted to the moving of an adjournment motion must be taken before the Speaker declares that leave of the House is granted<sup>219</sup>. The question cannot afterwards be reopened by any member on the ground that he could not follow the proceedings<sup>220</sup>.

Hour at which Motion is to be taken up

An adjournment motion, for the moving of which, leave of the House has been granted, is taken up at 16.00 hours or, if the Speaker so directs, at an earlier hour, having regard to the state of business in the House<sup>221</sup>. However, when the House meets only after 16.00 hours, no adjournment motion can be taken up on that day<sup>222</sup>.

In 1922, the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly were amended to provide that if leave to moving of an adjournment motion had been granted, it could be taken up at an hour earlier than 16.00 hours if the Speaker, with the consent of the Government Member concerned, so directed<sup>223</sup>. In 1937, the Legislative Assembly met at 17.00 hours for the presentation of the Budget. The Speaker ruled that the request for moving an adjournment motion received for that day could not be considered since the motion, if it was in order, could be taken up, only at 16.00 hours or earlier<sup>224</sup>. In 1947, the provision regarding consent of the Minister was dispensed with on the ground that Parliament was sovereign and the Speaker should, therefore, have unfettered authority in matters relating to internal procedure of the House. A provision was, however, made that the Speaker could ascertain the convenience of the Leader of the House before directing that the adjournment motion be taken up at an hour earlier than 16.00 hours.

If the business before the House demands that the adjournment motion must not be taken up earlier than 16.00 hours, the Speaker is bound to reject the request, if made, for taking up the motion earlier than 16.00 hours<sup>225</sup>. On the other hand, where some important business has to be gone through, the Speaker may, with the concurrence of the House, or after suspending the rule, direct that the motion would be taken up at an hour later than 16.00 hours<sup>226</sup>, and if it becomes necessary, in an exceptional case, even on a subsequent day<sup>227</sup>.

After leave of the House to the moving of an adjournment motion has been granted and hour fixed for its discussion, the Speaker has to allow the motion to be moved<sup>228</sup>, except where some new situation has arisen due to which discussion on the motion cannot take place without infringing the Rules<sup>229</sup>. It is, however, open to a member not to move the motion even though leave of the House has been granted and time for its discussion fixed<sup>230</sup>.

Commencement of discussion on the motion is normally not delayed beyond the scheduled hour unless it is absolutely necessary to do so, e.g., to complete a division already in progress<sup>231</sup>, or with the consent of the mover<sup>232</sup>.

Manner and Scope of Discussion

At the appointed hour, the member who has earlier obtained leave of the House to the moving of his adjournment motion, moves "That the House do now adjourn<sup>233</sup>."

After the mover has spoken on the definite matter which he wants the House to consider, other members speak followed by the Minister concerned. In special circumstances, the Speaker, in his discretion, may permit the mover to move the motion without making a speech and ask the Minister concerned to speak and give information in his possession to the House to provide a basis for the debate to follow<sup>234</sup>. In such a case, the mover makes his speech after the Minister has spoken and the Minister is allowed an opportunity to speak again at the end.

The time allotted for discussion on an adjournment motion is two hours and thirty minutes unless the debate concludes earlier. The Speaker may, if he is satisfied that there has been adequate debate, put the question at 18.30 hours or at such other hour not being less than two hours and thirty minutes from the time of commencement of the debate<sup>235</sup>. Discussion on an adjournment has, however, to be concluded on the same day<sup>236</sup>.

“Talking out” of adjournment motions

On 5 July 1967, a member raised a question regarding procedure for disposal of adjournment motions which were not pressed for vote and inter alia referred that such motions should be declared as “talked out”.

In the Standing Orders of the Central Legislative Assembly, there existed a provision for adjournment motions being “talked out”<sup>237</sup>. In 1950, when the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) Rules, in force immediately before the commencement of the Constitution, were modified and adapted by the Speaker so as to bring them in conformity with the Constitution, current practice and decisions taken by the Speaker from time to time, the provision for adjournment motions being “talked out” was omitted from Rule 53 (present Rule 62) by deleting the words “provided that, if the debate is not concluded by 6 p.m., it shall automatically terminate and no question shall be put”, therefrom.

The present procedure, as is provided under Rule 62, read with Rule 339 is that, the Speaker has to put the question to the vote of the House unless a member who has moved the motion has withdrawn it by leave of the House. In terms of Direction 44, if the mover of the motion informs the Speaker that he does not want to press it, the motion is not put to the vote of the House and it is deemed to have been withdrawn by leave of the House. Any member can, however, request the Speaker to put the motion to the vote of the House.

The question of procedure raised in the House was referred to the Rules Committee which decided that in view of the provisions of Rule 62 and Direction 44, there was no need to change the present procedure regarding disposal of adjournment motions<sup>238</sup>. In arriving at this decision, the Committee were guided by the following considerations:

An adjournment motion involves an element of censure against the Government. Therefore, normally, it would but be proper that there should be a specific decision of the House on such a motion<sup>239</sup>.

239. If only a discussion on a particular matter was desired, the Committee felt that recourse could be had to the procedure for raising a short duration discussion under Rule 193 or motion under Rule 342.

For discussion of matters of importance under an adjournment motion, the House is free to take its own time, only the minimum time limit being fixed under the Rules. If a “talk out” procedure was introduced, the minimum time would become the maximum time and, not infrequently, adequate discussion might not take place and the discussion might remain incomplete, as was the experience of the Central Legislative Assembly.

Further, in case a provision for the adjournment motions being “talked out” was made in the Rules, the temptation on the part of the Government party to see that such motions were talked out and no decision was reached by the House could not be completely ruled out, as used to happen very frequently in the days of the Central Legislative Assembly.

To ensure that members in adequate number are able to take part in the debate and various points of view are placed before the House and further that the debate is normally concluded within time, the Speaker prescribed a time-limit for speeches<sup>240</sup>. Generally, a time-limit is prescribed for members other than the mover and the Minister concerned who may be given more time<sup>241</sup>.

The debate on the motion is strictly restricted to the specific matters stated in the notice and mentioned to the House by the Speaker<sup>242</sup>.

The mover of an adjournment motion has a right to reply<sup>243</sup>. In this matter although there is no special procedure prescribed governing the right of reply in regard to adjournment motions, the general rule<sup>244</sup> on the right of reply applicable to all other motions is held to be applicable to adjournment motions also<sup>245</sup>. The Minister concerned may, with the permission of the Speaker, speak (whether he has previously spoken in the debate or not) after the mover has replied<sup>246</sup>.

An adjournment motion is put to the House and may be pressed to a division. However, except in a case of acute disagreement between the Opposition and the Government, the motion may be withdrawn after discussion<sup>247</sup>.

If at the end of the debate, the mover of the motion informs the Speaker that he does not want to press it and if thereupon the motion is not put by the Speaker to the vote of the House, the Speaker declares that such motion is deemed to have been withdrawn by leave of the House. However, on a request made by any member that the motion should be put to the vote of the House, the Speaker puts it to the vote of the House for its decision<sup>248</sup>.

When the motion “that the House do now adjourn” is being discussed, that is, from the hour the discussion on an adjournment motion has commenced to the time the motion is disposed of, the Speaker has no power to adjourn the House for the day because during that time such power vests only in the House to take a decision on its adjournment. The Speaker cannot also postpone the voting to the next sitting even if a request is made to him to that effect. The House may, however, adjourn for lunch as usual<sup>249</sup> for brief intervals. Discussion on the motion may be interrupted by disposal of formal items like laying of papers<sup>250</sup> but the motion has to be disposed of before the House is adjourned for the day. In case the motion is adopted, the House automatically stands adjourned in pursuance of the adoption of the motion. If the motion is negatived, discussion on the business which had been interrupted by the adjournment motion is resumed or the next item on the Agenda taken up for a short while and then the House is adjourned by the Speaker for the day. When the motion is withdrawn by leave of the House, the House may be adjourned without resuming further business if it is time for the House to have adjourned in the normal course<sup>251</sup>.

On 24 July 1997, Atal Bihari Vajpayee, the Leader of the Opposition, moved an adjournment motion regarding serious situation arising out of passive attitude of the Central Government over recent developments in Bihar. After some discussion, at the end of the day, with the consent of the mover and the House, the adjournment motion was converted into motion under Rule 184. The motion under Rule 184 was discussed later on 25, 28 and 29 July 1997 and was negatived<sup>252</sup>.

CHAPTER XXII

Legislation

An important function of Parliament, although not the only function, is to make laws<sup>1</sup>. The term ‘law’, according to the most generally accepted definition, is an imperative direction embodied in an Act which in the form of a Bill has been regularly debated and passed by a duly constituted Legislature in the prescribed manner and assented to by the Head of the State, and is binding on every citizen, and which the courts charged with the duty of ensuring respect for law are bound to enforce<sup>2</sup>. The term ‘law’ covers any rule, regulation, bye-law, or sub-rule made by a subordinate authority under powers delegated to it expressly in pursuance of the provisions of the Act and within limits specified therein.

All legislative proposals have to be brought in the form of Bills before Parliament. A Bill is a statute in draft, and no Bill, whether it be introduced by the Government or a private member, can become law until it receives the approval of both the Houses of Parliament and assent of the President. Each Bill undergoes three readings:

The First Reading means: motion for leave to introduce a Bill on the adoption of which the Bill is introduced, or introduction of a Bill already published in the Gazette or laying on the Table of the House of a Bill, as passed by the other House, where it originated.

The Second Reading consists of two stages: “First Stage” constitutes discussion on the principles of the Bill and its provisions generally on any of the following motions: that it be taken into consideration; that it be referred to a Select Committee of Lok Sabha; that it be referred to a Joint Committee of the Houses with the concurrence of Rajya Sabha; that it be circulated for the purposes of eliciting opinion; and “Second Stage” signifies the clause-by-clause consideration of the Bill as introduced or as reported by a Select or Joint Committee, as the case may be.

The Third Reading refers to the discussion on the motion that the Bill (or the Bill as amended) be passed.

Classification of Bills

Bills may be classified into Government Bills and Private Members’ Bills, depending upon whether they are sponsored by a Minister or a private member.

On the basis of their contents, they may further be classified into:

Original Bills (Bills embodying new proposals, ideas or policies);

1. Subhash C. Kashyap: Parliament as a Multi-Functional Institution, J.P.I., Vol. XXXIII, No. 2, June 1987. Also see Subhash C. Kashyap in Who Legislates in the Modern World, Inter-Parliamentary Union, Geneva, 1976.
  2. S.L. Shakhder: The Process of Legislation, in The Indian Parliament, (Ed.) A.B. Lal, 1956, p. 95.

Amending Bills (Bills which seek to modify, amend or revise existing Acts);

Consolidating Bills (Bills which seek to consolidate existing law on a particular subject);

Expiring Laws (Continuance) Bills (Bills to continue an expiring Act);

Repealing Bills (Bills seeking to repeal existing Acts);

Bills to replace Ordinances<sup>3</sup>; and Constitution (Amendment) Bills<sup>4</sup>.

Money and Financial Bills, because of their special features, are treated separately from other Bills. These are dealt with in details as follows:

Money Bills and Financial Bills

Money Bills

A Money Bill has been defined as under:

- “(1) A Bill shall be deemed to be a Money Bill if it contains only provisions dealing with all or any of the following matters, namely:
- (a) the imposition, abolition, remission, alteration or regulation of any tax;
  - (b) the regulation of the borrowing of money or the giving of any guarantee by the Government of India, or the amendment of the law with respect to any financial obligations undertaken or to be undertaken by the Government of India;
  - (c) the custody of the Consolidated Fund or the Contingency Fund of India, the payment of moneys into or the withdrawal of moneys from any such Fund;
  - (d) the appropriation of moneys out of the Consolidated Fund of India;
  - (e) the declaring of any expenditure to be expenditure charged on the Consolidated Fund of India or the increasing of the amount of any such expenditure;
  - (f) the receipt of money on account of the Consolidated Fund of India or the public account of India or the custody or issue of such money or the audit of the accounts of the Union or of a State; or
  - (g) any matter incidental to any of the matters specified in sub-clauses (a) to (f).
- (2) A Bill shall not be deemed to be a Money Bill by reason only that it provides for the imposition of fines or other pecuniary penalties, or for the demand or payment of fees for licences or fees for services rendered, or by reason that it provides for the imposition, abolition, remission, alteration or regulation of any tax by any local authority or body for local purposes<sup>5</sup>.”

Implications of the Leading Terms: The implications of the leading terms used in the Constitution with regard to a Money Bill were carefully examined in connection with the Estate Duty Bill, 1953 and are explained as under:

The leading terms used in the Constitution are: ‘dealing with’, ‘imposition’, ‘regulation’ and ‘incidental’, and should be construed not only in their ordinary sense, but with reference to the special meanings attached to them in the context in which they are used<sup>6</sup>.

A distinction has to be made between the terms ‘imposition’ and ‘dealing with imposition’. Whereas ‘imposition’ may mean rate, field and area of tax, the term ‘dealing with imposition’ is comprehensive, meaning to include matters directly connected with collection of tax such as machinery and procedure of collection, provisions for representation, appeals, etc. The term ‘regulation’ used in the Constitution of India is still wider in its import. It envisages a complete scheme to give effect to the imposition, alteration, remission or abolition of a tax. ‘To regulate’ means, in the ordinary dictionary meaning, to prescribe and in relation to a tax, it means, therefore, to prescribe all matters connected with that tax.

In addition to these comprehensive terms, there is further a provision in article 110 that other matters which may be ‘incidental’ to the imposition and regulation of tax may also be deemed to come within the definition of Money Bill. Thus the article taken as a whole is comprehensive enough to include not merely the rates, area and field of tax, but also complete machinery for assessment, appeals, revisions, etc. It is in this light that Finance Bills, which, in addition to rates contain provisions regarding machinery for collection, etc., have been certified as Money Bills<sup>7</sup>.

Speaker Mavalankar observed as follows:

Prima facie, it appears to me that the words of article 110 (imposition, abolition, remission, alteration, regulation of any tax) are sufficiently wide to make the Consolidated Bill,

---

5. Art. 110.

6. See Federal Commissioner of Taxation v. Munro, 1926 Commonwealth Law Reports, Vol. 38, pp. 184-95.

7. The Indian Income-tax Amendment Bill was certified as a Money Bill. In connection with that Bill the opinion given by the Ministry of Law on 24 April 1953, was as under:

“The whole of the Income-tax Act may be regarded as a law which contains only provisions relating to one or more of the matters specified in clause (a) of article 110(1) of the Constitution. The amending Bills as introduced in the House of the People (Lok Sabha) like the parent Act, similarly dealt only with one or more of the matters specified in the same clause. Here and there one or two provisions may be found in the amending Bill dealing with appointment of authorities, the defining of the powers, etc., but in this context it would be correct to assume that these amendments are also for or incidental to the purpose of the imposition or regulation of income-tax [see also clause (g) of article 110(1)]. The Bill as amended by the Select Committee, has not changed the position in any respect in this regard and the amended Bill should, therefore, also be continued to be treated as a Money Bill.”

a Money Bill. A question may arise as to what is the exact significance or scope of the word 'only' and whether and how far that word goes to modify or control the wide and general words 'imposition, abolition, remission, etc.'.

I think, prima facie, that the word 'only' is not restrictive of the scope of the general terms. If a Bill substantially deals with the imposition, abolition, etc., of a tax, then the mere fact of the inclusion in the Bill of other provisions which may be necessary for the administration of that tax or, I may say, necessary for the achievement of the objective of the particular Bill, cannot take away the Bill from the category of Money Bills. One has to look to the objective of the Bill. Therefore, if the substantial provisions of the Bill aim at imposition, abolition, etc., of any tax then the other provisions would be incidental and their inclusion cannot be said to take it away from the category of a Money Bill. Unless one construes the word 'only' in this way it might lead to make article 110 a nullity. No tax can be imposed without making provisions for its assessment, collection, administration, reference to courts or tribunals, etc., one can visualise only one section in a Bill imposing the main tax and there may be fifty other sections which may deal with the scope, method, manner, etc., of that imposition.

Further, we have also to consider the provisions of sub-clause (2) of article 110; and these provisions may be helpful to clarify the scope of the word 'only', not directly but indirectly.

Certification of a Money Bill

In case any question arises whether a Bill is a Money Bill or not, the decision of the Speaker thereon is final<sup>8</sup>. When a Bill is held by the Speaker to be a Money Bill, he endorses a certificate thereon signed by him to the effect that it is a Money Bill before the Bill is sent to Rajya Sabha or presented to the President for assent<sup>9</sup>.

In 1953, a point arose in Rajya Sabha over the categorization as a Money Bill of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Bill, 1952, as reported by the Select Committee where the Bill had undergone many changes<sup>10</sup>. It led to a controversy between the two Houses, and the matter was eventually resolved when the Prime Minister made it clear that—the Speaker's authority is final in declaring that a Bill is a Money Bill; the Speaker's certificate, when given, cannot be challenged; and the Speaker has no obligation to consult anyone in coming to a decision or in giving his certificate that a Bill is a Money Bill<sup>11</sup>.

The certificate regarding a Money Bill can be endorsed only by the Speaker so long as the Office of the Speaker is not vacant<sup>12</sup>.

The Voluntary Surrender of Salaries (Exemption from Taxation) Amendment Bill, 1955, was passed by Lok Sabha on 18 February 1956. The Speaker was away from Delhi at that time. The Bill was to be certified as a Money Bill, and although the Deputy Speaker was available, the Bill was

10. Before the Speaker had certified the Bill as a Money Bill, a reference was made to the Ministry of Law whether the Bill as reported by the Select Committee continued to be a Money Bill.

12. See art. 110(4) read with art. 95(1).

transmitted to Rajya Sabha without a certificate that it was a Money Bill, as the Office of the Speaker was not vacant.

On the other hand, when the Office of the Speaker fell vacant with the demise of Speaker Mavalankar on 27 February 1956, the Deputy Speaker, who is empowered under article 95(1) of the Constitution to perform the duties of the Office of Speaker, certified a Money Bill (the Appropriation Bill, 1956), and also endorsed assent copies of a Bill (the University Grants Commission Bill, 1956), submitted to the President for assent.

During Ninth Session of Thirteenth Lok Sabha also, when the Office of the Speaker fell vacant due to sudden demise of Speaker Balayogi on 3 March 2002, the Deputy Speaker, who was performing duties of the Office of Speaker, certified the following Bills as Money Bills before their transmission to Rajya Sabha and also endorsed assent copies before their submission to the President:

The Appropriation (Railways) Vote on Account Bill, 2002; the Appropriation (Railways) Bill, 2002; the Appropriation Bill, 2002; the Appropriation (No. 2) Bill, 2002; the Appropriation (Vote on Account) Bill, 2002; the Appropriation (Vote on Account) Bill, 2002; the Uttar Pradesh Appropriation (Vote on Account) Bill, 2002; the Uttar Pradesh Appropriation Bill, 2002; the Jute Manufactures Cess (Amendment) Bill, 2002; the Appropriation (Railways) No. 2 Bill, 2002; and the Appropriation (No. 3) Bill, 2002.

In Punjab, the Legislative Assembly was adjourned for two months by the Speaker on 7 March 1968. This led to a serious crisis as the Budget had to be passed before 31 March. In order to overcome this unprecedented situation, the Governor prorogued the Assembly on 11 March and two days later promulgated the Punjab Legislature (Regulation of Procedure in Relation to Financial Business) Ordinance, section 3 of which provided that the sitting of either House of the Legislature will not be adjourned without the consent of that House until conclusion of the financial business. When the Assembly met on 18 March as summoned, the Speaker, after holding the order of the Governor summoning the House to meet as 'illegal, unconstitutional and void', reaffirmed his earlier ruling adjourning the House for two months and left the Chamber. However, the House continued to sit as directed by the Ordinance with the Deputy Speaker in the Chair and transacted its business. Two Appropriation Bills were passed by the House and then transmitted to the Legislative Council certified by the Deputy Speaker that they were Money Bills. After the Bills had been passed by the Council, they were placed before the Governor with another certificate by the Deputy Speaker and the Governor signified his assent.

If the Speaker, forsaking his duty, creates a situation as in Punjab, whereby the constitutional and administrative machinery of the State is seriously endangered, the Deputy Speaker can certify a Money Bill although there is no express provision to that effect in the Constitution. In the case of Punjab, the action of the Deputy Speaker in certifying the Bills was upheld by the Supreme Court which inter alia observed:

Where in the absence of the Speaker at the time of the passing of the Money Bills, the Deputy Speaker acts as the Speaker under article 180(2), he can effectively certify the Money Bills under article 199(4), though article 199(4) mentions only the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly<sup>13</sup>.

In another case, the Patna High Court observed:

If a Money Bill is transmitted to the Legislative Council without a certificate of the Speaker, as required by article 199(4), and instead contains a certificate from the “Presiding Member acting as Speaker”, the contention that the Bill has not been validly passed by the State Legislature and so must be held constitutionally invalid cannot be accepted in view of article 212 which states that the validity of any proceedings in the Legislature of a State shall not be called in question on the ground of any alleged irregularity of procedure<sup>14</sup>.

Special Procedure Regarding Money Bills

A Money Bill can be introduced only in the Lok Sabha<sup>15</sup>. After it has been passed by Lok Sabha, it is transmitted to Rajya Sabha for its recommendations and that House is, within a period of fourteen days from the date of the receipt of the Bill, required to return the Bill to Lok Sabha with its recommendations, if any.

The Lok Sabha may either accept or reject all or any of the recommendations made by Rajya Sabha. If Lok Sabha accepts any of the recommendations made by Rajya Sabha, the Bill is deemed to have been passed by both the Houses with the amendments recommended by Rajya Sabha and accepted by Lok Sabha. If, however, Lok Sabha does not accept any of the recommendations of Rajya Sabha, the Money Bill is deemed to have been passed by both the Houses of Parliament in the form in which it was passed by Lok Sabha without any of the amendments recommended by Rajya Sabha<sup>16</sup>.

13. State of Punjab v. Satya Pal Dang, A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 903. The implications of the judgment of the Supreme Court in the case were discussed by a Committee of Presiding Officers, under the Chairmanship of Raghavji Leuva, Speaker of Gujarat Legislative Assembly. The Committee came to the conclusions that—under the Constitution, delegation of Speaker’s power to certify a Money Bill is not contemplated; it is the Speaker’s personal discretion to certify a Bill as a Money Bill or not; and the Supreme Court judgment is in respect of the circumstances of a particular case only and has no general application—Leuva Committee Report, para 8.

14. Patna Zilla Truck Owners Association v. State of Bihar, A.I.R. 1963 Patna 16.

15. Art. 109.

A Bill seeking to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, given notice of by a member of Rajya Sabha, was referred by the Chairman, Rajya Sabha on 5 April 1956, to the Speaker for his decision whether the Bill was a Money Bill. Speaker Ayyangar held it to be a Money Bill. The Chairman, Rajya Sabha, was informed accordingly and the Bill was not introduced in Rajya Sabha.

16. In case of the Finance (No. 2) Bill, 1977 and the Finance Bill, 1978, the recommendations made by Rajya Sabha were not accepted by Lok Sabha on 2 August 1977 and 11 May 1978, respectively. The Bills were deemed to have been passed by the Houses in the form in which these were passed by Lok Sabha and sent for Presidential assent.

There have been instances when Money Bills were returned by Rajya Sabha with recommendations and the recommendations made by Rajya Sabha, which were of a formal nature, were accepted by Lok Sabha<sup>17</sup>.

If the Rajya Sabha does not return the Bill within the prescribed period of fourteen days, the Bill is deemed to have been passed by both the Houses of Parliament at the expiry of the period in the form in which it was passed by the Lok Sabha<sup>18</sup>.

17. In case of the Travancore-Cochin Appropriation (Vote on Account) Bill, 1956, and the Union Duties of Excise (Distribution) Bill, 1957, the recommendations made by Rajya Sabha were accepted by Lok Sabha on 3 May 1956 and 12 December 1957, respectively. Similarly, on 30 January 1985, recommendations made by Rajya Sabha in the Appropriation (Railways) Bill, 1985; the Appropriation (Railways) No. 2 Bill, 1985; the Appropriation Bill, 1985; the Appropriation (No. 2) Bill, 1985; and the Punjab Appropriation Bill, 1985 relating to the change in the republic year, i.e. from thirty-fifth to thirty-sixth, were accepted by Lok Sabha.

18. The following Bills, as passed by Lok Sabha, were transmitted to Rajya Sabha with messages on the dates mentioned against them:—

- (i) The Appropriation (Railways) No. 4 Bill, 1978 — 21-12-1978.
- (ii) The Appropriation (Railways) No. 5 Bill, 1978 — 21-12-1978.
- (iii) The Appropriation (No. 5) Bill, 1978 — 22-12-1978.

The Rajya Sabha was, however, prorogued on 26 December 1978 without considering any of the above Bills. Accordingly, these Bills were deemed to have been passed by the Houses at the expiration of a period of fourteen days from the date of their receipt in the Rajya Sabha Secretariat under Cl. (5) of art. 109 of the Constitution, i.e. on the following dates:—

- (i) The Appropriation (Railways) No. 4 Bill, 1978 on 5-1-1979.
- (ii) The Appropriation (Railways) No. 5 Bill, 1978 on 5-1-1979.
- (iii) The Appropriation (No. 5) Bill, 1978 on 6-1-1979.

In computing the period of fourteen days, the dates of receipt of Bills by the Rajya Sabha Secretariat were excluded in accordance with the provisions of section 9(1) of the General Clauses Act, 1897 which applies to interpretation of the Constitution vide article 367 thereof. Accordingly, the Bills at (i) and (ii) above were submitted on 6 January 1979 and the Bill at (iii) above on 8 January 1979 (7 January 1979 being a Sunday) to the President through the Ministry of Law for assent.

During the Sixteenth Session of the Tenth Lok Sabha, the following Money Bills, as passed by the House, were transmitted to the Rajya Sabha along with messages on 12 March 1996:—

- (i) The Appropriation (Vote on Account) Bill, 1996.
- (ii) The Appropriation Bill, 1996.
- (iii) The Finance Bill, 1996.
- (iv) The Appropriation (Railways) Vote on Account Bill, 1996.
- (v) The Appropriation (Railways) No. 2 Bill, 1996.
- (vi) The Appropriation (Railways) Bill, 1996.
- (vii) The Uttar Pradesh Appropriation (Vote on Account) Bill, 1996.
- (viii) The Uttar Pradesh Appropriation Bill, 1996.
- (ix) The Jammu and Kashmir Appropriation (Vote on Account) Bill, 1996.
- (x) The Jammu and Kashmir Appropriation Bill, 1996.

The Rajya Sabha was adjourned sine die on 12 March 1996 without considering any of the above Bills. Accordingly, these Bills were deemed to have been passed by the Houses at the expiration of a period of 14 days from the date of their receipt in the Rajya Sabha Secretariat under cl. (5) of art. 109 of the Constitution on 27 March 1996. All the aforesaid Bills were submitted on 27 March 1996 to the President through the Ministry of Law for assent. The Bills were assented to on the same day.

The period of fourteen days is computed from the date of receipt of a Money Bill in the Rajya Sabha Secretariat and not from the date on which it is laid on the Table of Rajya Sabha. A Money Bill is transmitted to Rajya Sabha as soon as it is passed by Lok Sabha, unless the Speaker has given a direction to the contrary<sup>19</sup>.

During the Fourth Session of the Twelfth Lok Sabha, the following Money Bills, as passed by the House on 17 March 1999 were transmitted to the Rajya Sabha along with message on the same days—

- (i) The Appropriation (Vote on Account) Bill, 1999.
- (ii) The Appropriation Bill, 1999.
- (iii) The Appropriation (No. 2) Bill, 1999.

The Rajya Sabha was adjourned on 19 March 1999 to meet again on 12 April 1999 without considering the above Bills. Accordingly, these Bills were deemed to have been passed by both the Houses on 1 April 1999 at the expiration of 14 days from the day the messages regarding passing of the Bills were received in the Rajya Sabha Secretariat. The Bills were also assented to by the President on 1 April 1999.

During the Fourteenth Lok Sabha, the Supreme Court (Number of Judges) Amendment Bill, 2008 was passed by Lok Sabha on 22 December 2008 and transmitted to Rajya Sabha with a message on the same day. The Rajya Sabha could not consider the Bill during its 214th Session and was adjourned sine die on 23 December 2008. As the Bill was certified by the Speaker as Money Bill, it was deemed to have been passed by both the Houses on 6 January 2009 at the expiration of 14 days from the day following the date of receipt of message in Rajya Sabha. The Bill was assented to by the President on 5 February 2009.

Accordingly, the Bills were deemed to have come into force immediately on the expiration of 31 March 1999, i.e. on the expiration of the day preceding its commencement, as per the provision of section 5 of the General Clauses Act, 1897.

19. In the case of the Indian Tariff (Amendment) Bill, 1955, a Money Bill, which was passed by Lok Sabha on 26 July 1955, when Rajya Sabha was not in session but was due to assemble sometime later, Speaker Mavalankar made a statement on the floor of the House in the course of which he said that according to legal interpretation, even when Rajya Sabha was not in session, a Bill could be sent to the Secretary of Rajya Sabha and it would be deemed to have been received by Rajya Sabha and added that he was, however, directing the Secretary not to transmit the Bill to Rajya Sabha immediately, but a little later so that the period of fourteen days did not terminate before the commencement of the session of Rajya Sabha. This would enable Rajya Sabha to have an opportunity to discuss the Bill—L.S. Deb., 1-8-1955, cc. 8950-53.

Similarly, the Travancore-Cochin Appropriation (Vote on Account) Bill, 1956, a Money Bill, which was passed by Lok Sabha on 29 March 1956, was withheld under directions of the Speaker as Rajya Sabha was not in session at the time. In order to enable Rajya Sabha to consider and return the Bill within fourteen days, it was transmitted to that House when it re-assembled.

During the Fourteenth Session of Fourteenth Lok Sabha, the following three Money Bills were passed by Lok Sabha on 24 October 2008:

- (i) The President's Emoluments and Pension (Amendment) Bill, 2008;
- (ii) The Vice-President's Pension (Amendment) Bill, 2008; and
- (iii) The Salaries and Allowances of Officers of Parliament (Amendment) Bill, 2008.

By the time the above three Bills were passed by the Lok Sabha, Rajya Sabha had already been adjourned to meet again on 10 December 2008. In order to give an opportunity to Rajya Sabha to debate and return the Bills to Lok Sabha within the prescribed time period of 14 days, the messages in respect of the above three Bills were withheld from transmitting to the other House under the Direction of the Speaker till 8 December 2008 and were returned to Lok Sabha without any recommendation on 15 December 2008.

The recommendation of the President is required for the introduction of a Money Bill. Where, however, a Bill deals only with any matter incidental to any of the matters specified in article 110(1), sub-clauses (a) to (f), recommendation of the President is not necessary for introduction of that Bill<sup>20</sup>.

The Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Bill, 1956, introduced in Lok Sabha on 16 May 1956, sought to add an explanation to sub-section (7A) of section 5 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. In clarification of the meaning of the word 'case', occurring in that sub-section, it was held that as the Bill in question clarified the meaning of the word 'case' occurring in the Act, the provisions of this Bill might be regarded as incidental to the purpose of imposition or regulation of income-tax. Since the Bill dealt with matters specified in sub-clause (g) of article 110(1), it was held to be a Money Bill but the recommendation of the President under clause (1) of article 117 was not considered necessary for its introduction.

A Money Bill cannot be referred to a Joint Committee of the Houses.

The Income-tax Bill, 1961, which was introduced on 24 April 1961, sought to amend and consolidate the law relating to income-tax and super-tax. On 19 April 1961, the Minister of Finance had given notice of a motion for reference of the Bill to a Joint Committee of the Houses. As the Bill was held to be a Money Bill by the Speaker, the Minister of Finance was informed that the Bill could not be referred to a Joint Committee. Thereafter, the Minister gave a revised notice for reference of the Bill to a Select Committee of the House.

When a point for reference of the Bill to a Joint Committee was raised on 26 April 1961 in the Rajya Sabha by a member, the Chairman explained that only Financial Bills could be referred to a Joint Committee and not Money Bills. As the Income-tax Bill, 1961, had been certified to be a Money Bill by the Speaker, the question of referring it to a Joint Committee did not arise.

Earlier, on a reference from the Government of Madras whether a Money Bill could be referred to a Joint Committee of the Houses of a State Legislature, the Minister of Law had held:

So far as Money Bills are concerned, the intention as disclosed by the various articles of the Constitution is clear. The Legislative Council comes into the picture only when the Assembly had dealt with it and not before that. Sanctioning the Joint Select Committee procedure, even before the Assembly has considered the Bill on its merits, seems to me to be quite contrary to both the letter and the spirit of the Constitution. The Constitution has laid down a very special procedure about Money Bills and that procedure must be strictly followed. A reference to a Joint Select Committee will not be in consonance with that procedure... The Constitution never intended that the Legislative Council or its Committees should be called in to deal with a Money Bill at any stage prior to its passing by the Assembly<sup>21</sup>.

The Speaker has directed that the Ministries should make every effort to separate taxation measures (including levy of a cess) from other matters and draft Bills accordingly. In case, however, it becomes impossible on constitutional or legal grounds to do so in any particular case, a memorandum giving reasons why a composite Bill should be brought before the House, should be furnished for the consideration of the Speaker. After considering the memorandum, if the Speaker gives his permission, only then the Bill would be put down in the List of Business for leave to introduce it<sup>22</sup>.

Financial Bills

The Constitution distinguishes Money Bills from Financial Bills<sup>23</sup>. The latter may be divided into two categories: firstly, those which make provision for any of the matters specified to make a measure a Money Bill but do not consist solely of those matters<sup>24</sup>; and secondly, those which, if enacted and brought into operation, would involve expenditure from the Consolidated Fund of India<sup>25</sup>. For facility of reference, the former may be called Financial Bills of Category 'A', and the latter, Financial Bills of Category 'B'.

22. During Thirteenth Session of Fourteenth Lok Sabha, notice for introduction of the Sugar Development Fund (Amendment) Bill, 2008 was received from the Minister-in-charge of the Bill on 26 February 2008. The Bill sought to amend the Sugar Development Fund Act, 1982 and the Sugar Cess Act, 1982. The Bill also sought to replace the Sugar Development Fund (Amendment) Ordinance, 2008. Since the Bill contained provisions relating to both taxation and other matters, the Ministry was asked to furnish Memorandum for perusal of the Speaker stating reasons as to why the portion relating to taxation matters could not be separated from other matters by introducing two separate Bills. On receipt of requisite Memorandum from the Ministry, the Speaker, while permitting the Bill for introduction, directed that in future, while drafting Bills (including Ordinances), matters relating to taxation should not, unless absolutely necessary, be clubbed with other provisions in a single Bill. Orders of the Speaker were communicated in writing to the administrative Ministry and the Ministries of Parliamentary Affairs and Law and Justice.

23. Article 117 of the Constitution covers cases where Bills can be brought before Parliament containing not only taxation proposals (including levying of a cess) but also other matters. These Bills cannot be called Money Bills under art. 110. Therefore, there is no bar against any Bill of a composite or hybrid nature to be brought under art. 117. However, as far as possible, Bills of composite or hybrid nature should be rare and only in cases where the proposed taxation and other matters connected therewith are inseparable—Speaker's ruling on points of order raised in regard to the Oil Industry (Development) Bill, 1974.

24. That is Bills which come under cl. (1) of art. 117. For instances, see the Merchant Shipping (Amendment) Bill, 1977; the Estate Duty (Amendment) Bill, 1984 and the Central Road Fund (Amendment) Bill, 2006.

25. That is Bills which fall under cl. (3) of art. 117.

Financial Bills of Category ‘A’

A Financial Bill, falling under Category ‘A’, can be introduced only in the Lok Sabha and requires the recommendation of the President for its introduction<sup>26</sup>. Such a Bill has to be withdrawn in case it is introduced without this recommendation, but may be reintroduced with the necessary recommendation<sup>27</sup>. Such a Bill cannot as a rule be referred to a Joint Committee of the Houses. However, the Lok Sabha may, in special cases, refer such Bills to a Joint Committee after adopting a motion for suspension of the relevant rule<sup>28</sup>. On one occasion, Financial Bill of Category ‘A’ was referred to the Joint Committee without suspending the proviso to Rule 74<sup>29</sup>.

Financial Bills of Category ‘B’

Where a Bill contains, inter alia, a proposal or proposals involving expenditure from the Consolidated Fund of India, e.g., by providing for the appointment of officers or other authorities or for the establishment of an institution, it becomes a Financial Bill of Category ‘B’. Examples of such Bills are:

The State Bank of India Bill, 1955<sup>30</sup>; the Forward Contracts (Regulation) Amendment Bill, 1960<sup>31</sup>; the Supreme Court Judges (Number of Judges)

26. In case of doubt whether a Bill introduced in and passed by Rajya Sabha attracted art. 117 (1) of the Constitution requiring President’s recommendation on account of a particular clause of the Bill which appeared to hit cl. (a) of art. 110 (1), the Chair left it to the House either to throw out or accept the clause. The Payment of Bonus (Amendment) Bill, 1976, as passed by Rajya Sabha, was passed by Lok Sabha — L.S. Deb., 4-2-1976, cc. 73-85.
  27. For instance, the Employees’ State Insurance Bill, 1951 had to be withdrawn on 28 April 1951, but was reintroduced on the same day, after the President’s recommendation had been obtained.
  28. For instance, in the case of the following Financial Bills, the first Proviso to Rule 74 was suspended and the Bills were thereafter referred to Joint Committees of the Houses: the State Reorganisation Bill, 1956— *L.S.
